THE LUDLOW CASE

It begins to look as though the politicians who pull the strings on the Harbor Commission had pulled the wrong string.

The summary discharge of Harbor Engineer Ludlow by the "administration men" on the Harbor Commission on flimsy charges and over the vehement protest of President Colden has stirred a storm that is sending the City Hall kitchen cabinet scurrying for the cyclone cellars. Already they are talking about a "mistake" and of possible reinstatement at a special meeting of the Harbor Board.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce has demanded a showdown. In it they will be backed up by the Harbor Committee of Two Hundred and by every other element that believes the harbor should be administered in the interests of the people who pay for it, rather than in those of a handful of backstairs bosses and their friends.

The San Pedro Chamber of Commerce held a meeting of protest yesterday and appointed investigators. The chamber's protest will be lodged with the Harbor Board Tuesday.

As usual the Mayor has "nothing to say." He said he had seen no one involved and that he had no first-hand information. This was shortly after President Colden had called at his office to lay the facts before the Mayor. The Mayor was in, but Mr. Colden was permitted to talk only to H. H. Kinney, secretary to His Honor.

As to Ludlow, President Colden sums the situation up succinctly thus:

"They wanted him out because they could not handle him."

Ludlow has long been marked for the guillotine by those in whose way he stood in the exploitation of the harbor for personal revenue.

In the words of the Chamber of Commerce protest he "has been an honest, efficient and conscientious public employee."

There has been sufficient evidence that such qualities do not fit into the scheme of "public service" as conceived by the sinister powers behind the present city administration.

It was necessary, however, to await an opportunity, a suitable excuse for firing Ludlow. It was some time in coming, because Ludlow knows his business and attended strictly to it. At last, however, it came—or at least what looked like it.

The city is planning to create a municipal pleasure beach at the harbor. By authority of the Harbor Commission, President Colden was co-operating with the Playground Commission on details of the work. In the course of this work Mr. Colden instructed Chief Engineer Ludlow to make certain necessary tests of waves and currents which might affect the safety of the beach as a bathing place.

For many years Mr. Ludlow had been accustomed to take his orders direct from the president of the Harbor Commission as the chief executive of that body. He did so in this instance and gave orders for a municipal barge to be sent to Cabrillo

HUGHES'S VISIT TO LONDON LENDS ALLIES OPTIMISM

Conferees on Dawes Plan Pleased at Progress Made; America's Part in Confab Outlined

BY JOHN STEELE
[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

LONDON, July 19.—The arrival of Secretary of State Hughes at the head of 800 American lawyers on the Berengaria today, aroused extraordinary interest among all the delegates to the London conference on the Dawes report. All express the greatest optimism on his presence in England during the most critical stages. Mr. Hughes said today he is here in an entirely unofficial capacity and that he did not intend to attend any of the meetings of the international conference, although, of course, he is deeply interested in its progress.

"We are all anxious to see the Dawes report put into operation," he said. "We regard it as an essential step toward European rehabilitation."

Mr. Hughes's arrival has caused a change in the week-end plans of the delegates. Instead of entertaining his colleagues at Chequers, Prime Minister MacDonald will come to town tomorrow evening to dine at Crewe House with Ambassador Frank B. Kellogg and meet Mr. Hughes.

HERRIOT STAYS OVER

Premier Herriot will spend Sunday with Lord Parmoor, having at the last moment determined not to go to Chequers for fear of the political effect in France. It is likely that he will also be at Mr. Kellogg's dinner tomorrow night.

The big five—Ambassador Kellogg, Prime Minister MacDonald, Premiers Herriot and Theunis, and Sig. De Stefani—will meet again Monday morning in Downing street. This afternoon most of the delegates and experts attended a garden party at Wembley Exhibition. The question of inviting Germany to attend the conference is to be raised Monday. The British and Americans are anxious to have the Germans admitted immediately as equal members of the conference, while the French want to adjourn after an Allied agreement is reached, after which Germany would be called as an inferior to another conference in Paris or Brussels. If the French view prevails I learn the Germans will send an inferior official, who will be empowered only to sign the documents presented to him, but if the British view is acepted Foreign Minister Stresemann plans to come.

The correspondent learned officially tonight that the first and third committees of the Allied conference virtually have completed their work with most flattering success, while the second committee is well on the way to a settlement.

FIX AMERICA'S PART

The first committee, established to consider the connection of an American on the reparations commission and the question of sanctions, has reached an agreement which can be summarized as follows:

An American member shall be added to the reparations commis-

Wisconsin Banker, "Father of Hayward," Surrenders in Oregon; Sought Since Last March

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PORTLAND (Or.) July 19.—Henry E. Rohlf, formerly president of the First National Bank of Hayward, Wis., surrendered to local authorities today on charges of embezzling $300,000.

HAYWARD (Wis.) July 19.—Henry E. Rohlf, reported arrested in Portland, Or., today on a charge of embezzling $300,000 from the First National Bank here, of which he was president, was the first Mayor of Hayward and was affectionately known as "Father of Hayward." He took an active part in the county's welfare and was the executive officer in virtually every industrial and civic organization. He handled the moneys of most of them.

Rohlf was toppled from his high position in Sawyer county, of which Hayward was the county seat, March 8 last, when State bank examiners closed the doors of his bank with losses then estimated at $100,000. Two days before Rohlf had informed a meeting of depositors of the situation. He attributed the bank's difficulties to heavy withdrawals of funds by patrons. The bank examiners refused to state any reason as to the failure. The closing of the bank is reported nearly to have wrecked the town financially. Schools and libraries were reported affected, as a large portion of the city and county funds were on deposit in the bank.

Rohlf, when the bank was closed, was City Treasurer, chairman of the Sawyer County Board, chairman of the Sawyer County Republican Committee, supervisor of the First Ward, clerk of the Hayward Town Free High School District, secretary-treasurer of the Sawyer County Fair Association, secretary-treasurer of the Federal Farm Loan Association, business manager of the Sawyer County Record, the city's only newspaper; treasurer of the Hayward Creamery Association, treasurer of the Hayward Building Association, president of the Rolfs Insurance Company, and president of the Sawyer County Abstract Company.

Hayward, a town of 1500, is located in a prosperous dairy community.

PLOT SEEN TO MURDER GEN. CALLES

Mexican Authorities Say ex-Gov. De Lara Offered $50,000 for Slaying

BY JACK STARR-HUNT
[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—A plot to kidnap and murder Gen. Plutarco Elias Calles, who probably will be chosen President by the Chamber of Deputies when it convenes, and Gen. Arnulfo Gomez, until recently commander of troops in the Valley of Mexico, has been discovered by military authorities.

At the military headquarters here it was stated that Cesar Lopez De Lara, former Governor of the State of Tamaulipas, has offered a reward of $50,000 for putting Gen. Calles and Gen. Gomez out of the way. The offer is said to have been made at a revolutionary junta at San Antonio, Tex., recently, the former Governor is said to have deposited the money in a San Antonio bank and, with check book in hand, is said to have informed the junta of his readiness to pay as soon as the two leaders are kidnaped and have disappeared.

The extradition of De Lara likely will be sought by the Mexican government on the ground that he fled the country with public funds at the time of the De La Huerta revolution.

FIFTEEN CITIES INDORSE COLORADO WATER PLAN

Committee Will Direct Campaign for Great Community Aqueduct for Southern California

BY THORNTON S. HARDY
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

LONG BEACH, July 19.—Representatives of fifteen cities, four States and eleven civic organizations of the Pacific Southwest, assembled today at the call of the Boulder Dam Association in the City Council chamber here, adopted by acclamation a resolution looking to affirmative action at the earliest possible moment on the question of bringing domestic water from the Colorado River to Los Angeles and her sister cities of Southern California.

Proposed by State Senator W. J. Carr of Pasadena and seconded by Jack C. Thompson of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, the resolution instructs Mayor John L. Bacon of San Diego, president of the association, to appoint a committee of indeterminate number, but representative character, which shall arrange for an early meeting of delegates from all communities interested in drafting a plan of organization and campaign.

MAYOR EVANS PRESIDES

Mayor Bacon being absent, Mayor S. C. Evans of Riverside, executive director of the association, presided. He took the instructions under advisement and the personnel of the committee will be named later by his San Diego superior.

States represented in the all-day session were California, Arizona, Nevada and New Mexico. Cities were Redlands, Chino, Orange, Fullerton, Yuma, Monterey Park, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Glendale, Long Beach, Riverside, Chula Vista, Calipatria, Redondo, Ontario and Las Vegas.

Organizations represented were the Imperial Irrigation District, Federated Trades and Labor Council, San Diego; San Diego chapter of the American Association of Engineers, Orange Lions' Club, Greater Los Angeles Improvement Association, First Yuma Mesa Unit Holders' Association, Kiwanis Club, Yuma; Coachella Valley County Water District, State Irrigation Water Districts Association, Grenada Irrigation District, and the Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District.

DAY'S DEVELOPMENTS

Outstanding developments of the discussion were:

(1.) The reading of a letter from Representative E. J. Sinnott, member of the House Committee on Public Lands, in which he stated that the only serious objection among the States of the north basin—that is, those north of Lee's Ferry—to development in the southern basin was founded on failure thus far to obtain Arizona's assent to the Colorado River compact, but that he was informed the people of Arizona would settle the matter one way or the other at the next election in November.

Senator Carr added that opposition among the northern States had been quieted by assurances that the terms of the Colorado pact would be observed by California, even though Arizona should never sign.

Col. Ben Franklin Fly of Yuma said, in speaking of the same matter: "I have a very strong feeling that Arizona will ratify the compact at the coming November election. So far as my district is concerned, there is not a man, woman or child in it, white, yellow or black, opposed to Boulder dam.

SHORTAGE SHOWS NEED

(2.) The emphatic declarations of Clyde Seavey, chairman of the State Railroad Commission, and William Mulholland, chief engineer of the Los Angeles Aqueduct, that the present season of decreased water flow and curtailed power consumption had brought home to the general public for the first time the necessity for seeking an additional supply from the Colorado at the earliest possible moment.

(3.) Agreement among Seavey, Mulholland and Carr that the application of Southern California for Colorado water must be based on domestic needs first, with irrigation second and merely incidental, if given place at all, and with power development, except as

FEDERALS MARCH ON SAO PAULO

Troops Mobilizing for Attack in Revolt Center; Artillery Brought In

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

BUENOS AIRES, July 19.—A staff correspondent of La Nacion arriving here from the Brazilian port of Santos reports that heavy troop movements are proceeding from Santos to aid in the siege of the rebellious Brazilians in Sao Paulo. He says that the morale of the government authorities is excellent, they being ready for the overcoming of the rebellion.

The warship Minas Geras and two destroyers are in the port of Santos.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Advices received by the State Department from Santos announced today the arrival at that port of 4000 Brazilian government troops yesterday. Previous dispatches had announced the mobilization of 15,000 Federal troops there.

A paraphrase of the dispatch said:

"SANTOS, July 18.—Legal authorities announce that they have made progress. No news has been received from revolutionary sources. Four thousand Federal troops landed at Santos, July 18, arriving principally from Rio Grande do Sul and other States in the south. Light artillery is being brought in."

McADOO IN PARIS; QUIET ON POLITICS

Reiterates His Stand for Davis, But is Silent on Plans for Campaign

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PARIS, July 19.—William Gibbs McAdoo, accompanied by his wife, arrived at the Hotel Ritz this evening to join his son, daughter and daughter-in-law.

"I pledged my support to Mr. Davis before I left New York," he said when questioned on the party situation. "It is too early to say just what part I shall take in the campaign, and it is not for me to discuss Mr. Davis's qualifications or chances. Naturally, he has all my best wishes.

"I have not seen a newspaper this week, and cannot discuss Mr. Wheeler's interest in the members of the Senate who are allied to him."

Mr. McAdoo said he intended to visit the battle fields as this is his first trip to Europe since 1910. He recalled with pleasure his associations with French politicians during the war, particularly M. Viviani, whose mission to America Mr. McAdoo particularly dealt with. He said he intended to visit Italy, Germany and England after a few weeks here.

"TIMES" WANT ADS

July 1 to 15, 1924

79 PER CENT GREATER GAIN

Than Nearest Local Paper

Absurd claims are constantly circulated among advertisers calculated to minimize and misrepresent the Los Angeles Times' well-known leadership as the largest want-ad medium in the world. A cleverly prepared article of this kind, accompanied by "hand-picked figures," has been sent forth within the past few days. Any casual reader would get the impression from this article that The Times had lost its dominating position in classified advertising. To let go unchallenged such flagrantly misleading statements might be construed as an admission of their truth.

Following are the facts shown by figures just compiled for a typical period, the first half of the current month, July 1 to 15, 1924.

What Los Angeles newspaper printed the most want ads during this period?

LOS ANGELES TIMES (64,170 want ads.)

What Los Angeles newspaper gained the greatest number of want ads compared with the same period last year?

LOS ANGELES TIMES (9420 want ads.)

What Los Angeles newspaper during this period made the biggest percentage of gain compared with last year?

LOS ANGELES TIMES (17 per cent gain over last year.)

Two Los Angeles newspapers during this period showed losses compared with last year, a third paper showed a gain of only sixty-seven want ads, the fourth paper showed a gain of 5254 want ads, whereas the Los Angeles Times gained 9420. In short, notwithstanding the fact that the Los Angeles Times had its own huge figures of last year to figure against, it surpassed every other local paper in number of ads gained and in percentage of gain over last year.

STORM OF PROTEST MAY REINSTATE LUDLOW

Special Meeting of Harbor Board Is Hastily Called to Reconsider Firing of Chief Engineer

Dismayed by the storm of protest against the summary removal of J. W. Ludlow, chief harbor engineer, his enemies are seeking cover. It was announced yesterday that a special meeting of the Harbor Commission will be held Monday to reconsider the action taken Friday, when Ludlow was dismissed by the votes of Commissioners Kibele and Allen on charges denounced as a subterfuge by President Colden.

The discharge of Ludlow was everywhere greeted with outspoken denunciation. The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce in a letter to Mayor Cryer asked that a public hearing be held on the matter, and declared Mr. Ludlow "an honest, efficient and conscientious public employee."

A protest meeting was held by the San Pedro Chamber of Commerce yesterday. Commissioner Colden appeared at the meeting and explained the entire situation. He absolved Engineer Ludlow of any blame for the damage to a city barge on the rocks at Point Fermin and declared that this was simply a subterfuge used by the other two commissioners to oust the engineer.

A committee was appointed by the chamber to make a full investigation into the entire affair. This committee's findings will be submitted to Mayor Cryer, together with a strong protest against the ousting of the engineer, next Tuesday.

President Colden of the Harbor Board, who steadfastly fought the engineer's dismissal by his two fellow members, in an interview flatly charged that disgruntled contractors are behind the chief engineer's dismissal because of the board's policy in competing by day labor with contractors' bids.

Mr. Ludlow was dismissed "effective today" at the Friday meeting of the harbor board by Allen and Kibele. President Colden for two hours had pleaded that a hearing first be held and took upon himself full responsibility for sending the barge outside the breakwater, which had been done by the engineer upon the president's order. The barge was thrown on the rocks by a tidal wave, rising out of tranquil seas early Wednesday morning.

CHAMBER'S LETTER

The letter from the Chamber of Commerce, signed by William Lacy as president, and addressed to the Mayor, said:

"The Chamber of Commerce has been the moving factor in the development of Los Angeles Harbor and at the present time has invested, through its members, the sum of $300,000 to make special engineering surveys for the future development of this harbor in the interest of the city of Los Angeles and without any cost to the city or the taxpayers. Furthermore, as you know, the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce has been the chief support behind all bond issues which have been carried for moneys to develop the harbor.

"In its many years of close association with the harbor and its development the Chamber of Commerce has received every evidence that Harbor Engineer Ludlow has been an honest, efficient and conscientious public employee. In view of this fact and in view of the very distinct difference of opinion apparently existing in the Harbor Commission itself as to the dismissal of Mr. Ludlow, we would respectfully urge that you hold a public hearing on this whole matter so that the facts may be known."

"Some of the contractors do not like Mr. Ludlow's use of day labor instead of contract labor," Mr. Colden said. "It has been our custom when a job is to be done to get estimates from the Harbor Engineer of what he can do the work for by day labor, and then to call for bids from the contractors. If the Harbor Engineer's estimate is lower than the contractor's, then we do the work ourselves by day labor. Mr. Ludlow also stood against the Duocrete piling contract.

"They want him out merely because they cannot handle him."

Mr. Colden still maintains that he alone is responsible for sending the barge outside the breakwater to make some tests regarding the Cabrillo Beach project. The board as a whole had authorized Mr. Colden to treat with the Playground Department about this project, and Mr. Colden told Mr. Ludlow to make the tests to see what could be done. It was the stand of Messrs. Kibele and Allen in discharging the engineer that he had sent the barge out without authority of the board as a whole, while Mr. Ludlow insisted that he had understood that the order from the president of the board as executive officer was sufficient. Mr. Colden said yesterday that it always had been the custom for the president directly to order small details of work done. He and Mr. Ludlow failed to delay the dismissal until a legal opinion could be obtained as to the president's powers.

Mr. Colden called at City Hall yesterday to see Mayor Cryer, but he only could see the Mayor's secretary, H. H. Kinney, who talked to him in the Mayor's office. The Mayor, however, was in an adjoining room. Mr. Colden said he had called to lay the Ludlow case facts before the Mayor. Mayor Cryer later said he had nothing to say about the Ludlow case because he had seen nobody involved and had no first-hand information about the matter.

Boyle Workman, president of the City Council, held a consultation with Mr. Cryer soon after Mr. Colden's unsuccessful attempt to see the Mayor. Mr. Workman is chairman of the Council's harbor committee.

Mr. Ludlow issued a statement yesterday in which he detailed the circumstances of the barge incident. He added that he did not regret his ousting at this time except from the purely personal standpoint. If he had been dismissed a year ago, he stated, he would have regretted it much more, since at that time his plans for the development of the harbor had not been put into final form. Since that time, however, the Committee of Two Hundred has absorbed the idea of development and has gotten behind the belt line system, breakwater extension and the various government projects to such an extent that the future of the harbor is assured.

Mr. Ludlow became assistant harbor engineer in 1912 and in 1922 was placed in full charge of the engineering department. He has drawn every map and chart for the development of the harbor in the last ten years and is more familiar with this work than any other person.

THE LUDLOW CASE

Beach to make the desired tests as soon as sea conditions should be favorable. It was an ordinary, routine procedure.

It was brought out at Friday's meeting of the Harbor Board that the foreman in charge of the barge disobeyed orders in handling the boat. A totally unexpected tidal wave out of a calm sea threw the barge on the rocks.

So Ludlow was fired.

His plea for a hearing was ignored. His request for a legal opinion as to the right of President Colden to give him orders was ignored. The protest of Mr. Colden, who assumed all the responsibility, was ignored. Commissioners Kibele and Allen were determined to fire Ludlow and that was all there was to it. They listened stonily to Colden's arraignment of themselves and their motives, his denunciation of the whole scheme as a transparent subterfuge—and voted to fire Ludlow.

Ludlow is the third harbor official to walk the plank under similar circumstances recently. Assistant Harbor Engineer Merwin was decapitated and George M. Southwick, superintendent of the municipal harbor railway under civil service, was ousted under circumstances which are now being investigated by the Civil Service Commission. To get him out the Harbor Commission simply abolished the job, re-created it under another name and gave it to a friend of one of the commissioners. Southwick attributes his discharge to the fact that he declined to make a contribution of $25 to H. H. Kinney, Mayor Cryer's secretary, for the Mayor's "campaign deficit."

HUGHES'S VISIT PLEASES ALLIES

sion when that body considers the question of Germany's default.

If that default is declared, the interested powers shall confer together after a consultation between the agent-general of payments and the representative of the interests lending $200,000,000 to Germany and the reparations commission.

Any sanctions taken following a default shall safeguard the special pledges taken to insure the service of the loan. The service of the loan shall enjoy a priority over the general resources of Germany and over any further resources provided for eventually in the application of the experts' plans if pledges are deemed insufficient.

Subject to the foregoing provisions the rights of the powers, as enjoyed at present under the treaty and which will be enjoyed under the experts' plan, are reserved.

The third committee virtually has finished its work, although it cannot put its signature to the draft of the report. It was asked to report on the constitution of a body to advise the government what to do with deliveries in kind from Germany. In fact, the committee has decided that no general body is necessary to perform this function, and that the chain of national organizations will meet the case.

The work of the second committee is proving somewhat more complicated. The committee sat all this afternoon and considered the French plan, but came across certain technical difficulties which have to be smoothed out. It appointed a subcommittee which will sit all day tomorrow and will report back to the committee the first thing Monday morning.

APPROVES WITHDRAWAL

The correspondent learns that the committee has approved the policy of withdrawal by successive stages from the occupied territories. The manner of those stages involves a mass of detail, of course, and the subcommittee formed consists of military and financial experts to consider these. Gen. Nollett and Col. Manton are on the subcommittee. It is hoped their report will be ready tomorrow.

It is learned also that the first committee adopted a proposal that each country represented by bondholders subscribing to the proposed loan should make itself liable to pay the whole or balance of interest due to the bondholders in event of a default being declared. This is said to be an American proposal.

The claim of France to freedom of action has been left unimpaired, because the Allies have faith that Germany can carry out all the conditions of the experts' plan. The British are maintaining their point of view that Germany will have to be invited before the end of the conference.

The situation has been complicated seriously by the intervention of German financial experts who have appeared in London. Among them is Dr. Schacht, president of the Reichsbank, and Herr Bargeman and Wassermann, financial experts. These men have seen the British delegates, especially Sir Robert Kindersley, and have told the British that Germany will not accept the decisions of the conference to apply the Dawes report unless the following irrevocable conditions are accepted:

First—No French or Belgian employee to remain on the German railways, and all administrative powers to be concentrated in German bonds.

Second—The military evacuation of the Ruhr to take place on specified and determined dates.

Third—Cologne to be evacuated in January (this means that France must agree on a date for the evacuation of the Rhineland to be calculated from the day of the inauguration of the Versailles Treaty. It will be remembered that M. Poincare, in view of the repeated German defaults, always refused to agree to this point of view.)

GERMANY TO REFUSE TERRITORIAL SANCTIONS

By George Seldes

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

BERLIN, July 19.—The German government, it was learned from an official source today, cannot accept the French, British and American compromises which recognize the fundamental rights of the Allies to take territorial sanctions in the future for Germany's failure to fulfill the Dawes reparations plan.

As all confidential public information from London indicates the acceptance by the conference there of the sanctions article, consternation entered the German camp, the shock echoing through Wilhelmstrasse. Until tonight Germany's policy concerned itself chiefly with obtaining the evacuation of the Ruhr as fundamental to the Reichstag accepting the Dawes plan. From now on, it is predicted, Germany will concentrate on demanding that the Allies drop territorial sanctions.

The Nationalists and other opponents of the government parties are jubilant over reports that the conference demands territorial sanctions in the future. The Nationalists believe that puts a lever in their hands to upset the government. Their retaliation will be to rally all forces opposed to the Reichstag's acceptance of the Dawes plan. These forces until now had been in minority but some popular slogan for a popular cause is likely to give them a majority.

CAUSE GREAT CONCERN

The German Foreign Minister is of the opinion that the London proposals are cause for the greatest concern in Germany. Although the British proposals try to better the French, they are considered very serious because they permit territorial sanctions. The British proposal is a direct contradiction to the British note of August 11, last. The German Foreign Minister believes he cannot accept recognition by the Entente of the right to take territorial sanctions.

The Foreign Minister further is of the opinion that the conference now having reached such serious questions as sanctions and independent action by France, world public opinion must hear all sides, and therefore the Foreign Minister believes that Germany must now be heard on the questions of sanctions and Germany's attitude toward the Dawes plan.

New York Girl to Play Lead in Peter Pan Film

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

NEW YORK, July 19. — An American girl has been chosen by Sir James M. Barrie to take the title role in the picturization of "Peter Pan." The girl lives in New York.

Jessie L. Lasky, motion-picture impresario, made the announcement today on his return from abroad, on the French liner Paris.

Mr. Lasky said he could not divulge the young woman's name because the terms of the contract on which he and Sir James agreed have not yet been submitted to her. The author had wanted an English girl to take the part, Mr. Lasky added. He and the playwright considered about forty possibilities, but were satisfied with none of them.

CITIES INDORSE COLORADO PLAN

needed to pump the water out of the river, third and last.

Seavey and Mulholland were the principal speakers in a long list. Both took for their text Shakespeare's aphorism that "sweet are the uses of adversity."

"The general public," said Mr. Seavey, "did not realize the importance of this project until this year. I did not realize it myself until the necessity for conservation of power led me to study the precipitation figures of California this year, compared with those of other years, and I am frank to say that I found those figures so startling that I didn't believe them when they were brought to me and sent them back to be checked.

A summary of the figures follows:

Sacramento River at Red Bluff—1920 flow, 3740 second feet June 20, with 3150 second feet the lowest previous record; 1924 flow, same date, 2900 second feet.

Mokelumne River—1920 flow, same date, 1960 second feet; 1924 flow, 15 second feet.

San Joaquin River—1920 flow, same date, 1960 second feet; 1924 flow, 100 feet.

Trinity River—1920 flow, same date, 325 feet; 1924, 70 feet.

Kings River—230 second feet early this month, whereas the minimum for July in normal years is 10,000 and the lowest measurement at any season of any previous year is 728 second feet, in 1898.

"So that it seems to me," resumed Mr. Seavey, "that we have seen this year a condition which points to a conclusion that we cannot overlook. If this State is to continue to grow and to prosper, we must take measures to secure water storage. Already we have gone beyond, and way beyond, the point where Nature is able to supply our needs out of her minimum."

PEOPLE COME FIRST

The speaker passed to more general considerations. "In my eighteen months' experience with the State Railroad Commission," he continued, "I have about reached the conclusion that water belongs primarily to the land and those who inhabit it. Development of power must be always secondary. Hydroelectric development must not be allowed to reach the point where discrimination against agriculture begins, and, on the other hand, storage must be provided to secure us against another such shortage of power as we have had this year.

"Boulder Dam, I believe, should be developed under Federal control—not be tied up with any one private company, but be made available to the municipalities and districts that need the water and power it can supply.

"A controlled monopoly, I am about convinced, is in some cases a good thing if kept within bounds, but I am not convinced, and I don't believe I ever shall be, that monopolies should be allowed except over territories that they can fully and properly serve—not, for instance, over the extent of a territory measuring one-half or one-third of California. Beyond those limits there should be competition in the broader sense.

"There is a limit beyond which government regulation and supervision cannot go. Beyond those limits, it becomes virtually impossible to take into accurate account the important factor of company management."

William Mulholland said his experience of forty-six years with the vagaries of Southwestern streams from here to Texas had taught him that averages were a delusion.

"Here in the Southwest," he said, "we don't have first a dry year and then a succession of wet years. We have periods, cycles, of dry years, sometimes showing a deficit of 38 per cent for the period, lasting eleven years from peak to peak. Such periods are too long to be fortified against shortage by even the maximum of storage that can be provided. Therefore, we must go to the Colorado, the only dependable supply within reach.

"At the time the Aqueduct was brought in, we had only one month's supply of water in storage for Los Angeles and were measuring our reservoirs hourly. I should have known better, but when relief came I thought we were safe for at least my lifetime. Yet here we are again, rather close to the edge.

"So far as this season goes, there is no cause for immediate alarm, but we are now in position where if the conditions of last year, and of this year so far, were to stretch over into another season, the winter would again find us in dire straits for water.

COLORADO DROUGHTS BRIEF

"The Colorado is subject to the same diseases as our present water supply; it has its periods of drought and shortage, but fortunately they are briefer and can be regulated by storage.

"Occasionally, I hear alarm expressed over the cost of pumping. There is nothing to be alarmed about. The cost is nothing, a mere bagatelle, not more than 2 or 3 cents to the hundred. Getting power at cost, the burden will be imperceptible.

"Cities of the East nearly all pump their water; very few have a gravity supply. Chicago is now pumping about 1000 second feet daily and paying $6, $7, $8 a ton for coal, whereas we can get power for 1-3 of a cent the kilowatt."

More time was taken discussing various aspects of the proposed All-American Canal than any other one subject connected with the Colorado. The discussion grew so earnest that Mayor Evans of Riverside, presiding, finally said:

"There's no use in our tearing ourselves to pieces. We're all of one mind, I think; we'd like to see something big done."

S. R. Whitehead of Las Vegas, N. M., said that what he hoped for was a dam "that will accomplish all the good purposes that all of you desire. If you have local problems," he added, "why not settle them yourselves."

T. Mahncke of Blythe, representing the Palo Verde Chamber of Commerce, said his part of the State absolutely desired river control, "and as soon as we can get it."

"What we want," he continued, "is any dam that will serve all the communities represented here."

A letter from Mayor Cryer of Los Angeles was ready in which he said that some plan "must be carried to completion in order that the interests of every community throughout Southern California, including the City of Los Angeles, may be safeguarded." The problem of the Colorado, he concluded, was one that "touches every man, woman and child in every village south of the Tehachapi."

In the business session R. B. Peters of the State Farm Bureau was elected to fill a vacancy on the executive committee and the entire set of outgoing officers was reelected.

IMBRIE BURIED

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

TEHERAN (Persia) July 19.—Vice-Consul Robert Imbrie of the United States, who died yesterday after he had been beaten by a fanatical mob as he and an American named Melin Seymour, were photographnig a sacred fountain, was buried today, the entire Diplomatic Corps attending the funeral. The tragedy yesterday was the culmination of recent anti-foreign and particularly anti-British activity which had been evidenced in the native press and elsewhere and which the government appears unable to check owing to the lack of laws controlling such activities of the press.

The fountain where Imbrie was beaten and where Seymour, described as a driller, suffered serious injuries at the hands of the crowd, is supposed by the natives of the city to have been the scene a few days ago of a miracle and ever since huge crowds have been making pilgrimages to it.

COURT WINS IN APPEAL IN TRUCK SUIT

Supreme Bench Upholds Equity Rights in Contempt Hearing on Permit

Superior Courts of the State may exercise jurisdiction over public utilities so far as equity is concerned, although the governing power over the utilities has been vested in the Railroad Commission, the State Supreme Court ruled yesterday. The decision was handed down in the case of the Truck Owners and Shippers against the Superior Court of San Diego county.

The transportation company applied to the high tribunal for a writ of prohibition to restrain the San Diego court from proceeding to find the company in contempt of court for operating auto freight trucks between Los Angeles and San Diego without holding a permit from the Railroad Commission. The application for the writ was made on the grounds that Superior courts have no jurisdiction in such matters as they properly belong under the Railroad Commission's authority.

The Supreme Court held that the Legislature has not framed the laws respecting public utilities so as to divest a Superior Court of general jurisdiction in matters of equity which the case at bar clearly presents.

The action was begun in San Diego Superior Court by the Coast Truck Company which holds a certificate from the Railroad Commission to operate between Los Angeles and San Diego. An injunction was obtained against the Truck Owners and Shippers for operating over the same route without permission from the commission. The injunction was ignored by the Truck Owners and Shippers and they were then cited to show cause why they should not be held in contempt of Superior Court. Pending the outcome of this action they petitioned the high tribunal to determine the court's jurisdiction in the matter.

Woman Sues Philadelphia Politician for $250,000; is Probably Heart Balm

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

CHICAGO, July 19.—George G. Priestley, wealthy Philadelphia oil man and a nationally known figure in politics, was served at his hotel here today with a summons in a $250,000 damage suit brought by Mrs. Florence Powell Gill, Buffalo, N. Y., society woman.

Attorneys who filed the suit for Mrs. Gill refused to state the nature of the case, but it was reported to be an action for breach of promise. Mr. Priestley characterized the suit as "blackmail."

"I have known Mrs. Gill for many years," he said. "I knew that she and her mother came here last week to attend a musicale. I certainly had not expected a suit of any kind; our relations certainly never have justified a breach-of-promise suit, if that is the nature of this one."

Priestley was a friend of the late Theodore Roosevelt, and was chairman of the finance committee in the late Mr. Roosevelt's campaign for President on the Progressive ticket of 1912.

While holding this position, he said, he had made it possible for Mrs. Gill to engage in politics. His wife died last February and he declared he never had proposed marriage to Mrs. Gill.

Mrs. Gill is a divorcee and has one son.

CHICAGO, July 19.—Recent addition of a in the value of farm products means a return to everybody but the radicals and the professional The farmer, of course, is the chief beneficiary, will be greatly increased and the wave of business in general.

"This advance is peculiarly of advantage to the farmer," said B. W. Snow of the Orange Judd Farm. "It comes at a time when he happens to have the greater part of his grain to dispose of. He has his winter wheat, just harvested, and a good supply of corn in many cases. Thus the farmer is getting rid of very large quantities of grain at very high prices."

The flurry in the grain pit, has increased the agricultural wealth of the country more than $1,000,000,000 in thirty days and is piling it up every day. American wheat prices have gone up 30 cents a bushel; Canadian wheat, 42 cents; July corn, 36 cents; oats, 10 cents, and rye, 30 cents.

SOLDIERS WILL GUARD FORESTS

Only National Reserves Are to be Patrolled

Gov. Richardson Refuses Aid on State Lands

Says No Need for Hysteria; Fires Under Control

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—While California's immediate forest fire danger faded out today, with all fires under control, and no new ones reported, forestry, military and civil authorities conferred to prevent another flare-up.

Plans went ahead to place Federal troops on patrol duty only in national forests to enforce fire laws, in accordance with President Coolidge's offer of Army assistance in this State.

Gov. Richardson formally declined the offer of the United States Army to detail troops for the protection and policing of State forest lands, it was announced by Col. A. Von B. Anderson, chief-of-staff in the headquarters of the Ninth Corps Army Area.

DECLINES TROOP OFFER

Col. Anderson gave out a statement which he received from Gov. Richardson as follows:

"Under existing circumstances there is absolutely no need for seeking the service of the United States troops. The national and State Forestry Departments have the situation well in hand. I appreciate very much the offer of the War Department to render assistance."

The statement from the Governor has closed the matter as far as the Army officials are concerned, Col. Anderson said.

Prior to his conference at Sacramento today with Col. Anderson, Gov. Richardson issued a statement in which he declared that "the State is not burning up," and, referring to the water shortage, said "California is not dried up," and that "there is no occasion for hysteria."

"The State forester reports that the few fires in California are in national forest reserves," said the Governor, and later in his statement he declared:

"I have many reports of fake fire stories. In fact, it seems to me that certain parties are deliberately trying to injure California with fake stories. I know the people are too wise to be misled by fakers.

"The national and State departments of forestry are doing good work, and I have full faith in their ability to check the forest fires. The State is lending every aid in men and money. There is no occasion for hysteria. California is not dried up. On my trip from Sacramento to San Diego, covering several counties, I noted that the country looked greener than usual at this season of the year, and the crops are better than in many years. California farmers will have a good year."

EXPLAINS CLOSING ORDER

In connection with his order closing an additional 5,000,000 acres of national forests or restricting their use, making 8,000,000 acres in all thus affected, District Forester Paul G. Redington today said:

"While many areas of high fire hazards have been closed to public use, and restrictions on promiscuous camping and smoking have been placed in effect, the impression should not be gained from this that there will be any serious interference with travel on the public highways.

"We are confident, with the splendid support given us by the people of the State, and through the close co-operation of the State and county authorities that we are able to cope with the situation."

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

SACRAMENTO, July 19.—An appeal to motorists of California to refrain from the use of muffler cut-outs while driving on roads running parreliel to grain fields or through the mountains, because of the danger of fire was contained in a statement issued today at the offices of the State division of motor vehicles.

The appeal follows reports to the division from W. B. Rider, deputy State forester, that a number of serious fires have been traced to flying sparks caused by driving with open mufflers.

SERVICE TO BAY CITY BY AIR IS NEAR

Plane Planned for Daily Trips to be Given Tests Next Sunday

Airplane service between Los Angeles and San Francisco, is a dream about to be realized, according to Osmond T. Belcher, designer and builder of the California, which will be given official tests at Clover Field, Santa Monica, next Sunday. Assembled at the field will be local army flyers, representatives from Crissy Field, San Francisco, and executives from the Chamber of Commerce. Exhibition flights will be made today from the temporary hangars on Redondo Boulevard to Clover Field.

The distinguishing feature of the new ship is the framework covering known as woven corrugated plywood. This is a new type and is the result of years of patient labor and tireless experimentation, Belcher says. He has been working for years to develop a lighter, stronger covering that would eliminate the wiring and metal necessary to make safe the planes now in use.

The designer says he intends to establish a daily service between Los Angeles and the Bay City. The California is of the parlor-car type, upholstered and entirely glassed in.

Belcher will enter the California in the international air races which start in Dayton, O., October 2. This will be the formal introduction of the new monoplane. He will depart for the East about September 20, accompanied by Burgess Creeth, Rogers Airport pilot and overseas flyer; an army officer and possibly a representative from the Chamber of Commerce. Mrs. Belcher, who is interested in the new plane, will accompany the party.

PHILIPPINE SENATE ASKS EXPLANATION

SECRETARY OF INTERIOR IS CHARGED WITH GIVING POWERS TO WOOD

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

MANILA, July 19.—The Senate of the Philippine Legislature, in a formal resolution, has charged the Secretary of the Interior in the island government, Felipe Agoncillo, with permitting Gov.-Gen. Leonard Wood to usurp the powers of the secretariat office and made a demand that Agoncillo appear before it next Tuesday to give an explanation.

The resolution is an outgrowth of the Governor-General's action in suspending until November penalties for nonpayment of taxes in the Province of Tarlac. The Governor-General's action was based on a report from his aide, Maj. Burton Read that deplorable conditions existed in Tarlac as a result of a crop failure.

The Senate leaders assert that many other provinces are in need of relief and charge Agoncillo with failure to make recommendations for similar suspensions in these. They also charge him with failure to protest against appointments in Mindanao and Sulu made by Gen. Wood which they assert were illegal.

WIFE ASKS ANNUAL ALIMONY OF $50,000

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

NEW YORK, July 19. — Mrs. Frances Hartford, wife of John A. Hartford, has declared that her husband is not coming back to her, and has filed suit for separation, alimony and attorney's fees. The charge states that he has written her and says he never wants to see her again. She asks for $50,000 yearly alimony and $10,000 for the lawyers. Her application for money will be heard Monday. The bill relates that Hartford gave his wife $10,000 a year for her clothes and $6000 for pin money. It declares that Hartford has a town house in New York City, a 310-acre ranch at Vilhalla, N. Y., that he has an income of $250,000 a year, apart from his salary of $75,000 a year. His sister and brother, Mrs. Hartford says, also have interests which net large incomes.

JUST A HEADACHE

Alleged Bootlegger Has Bullet-Proof Brain

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

RIVERSIDE, July 19.—Feeling no ill effects other than a "light headache," George W. Lee, who received a bullet in the head from the gun of Undersheriff Clem Sweeters Friday after he is said to have attempted to shoot the officer when the latter tried to disarm him during a liquor raid south of Beaumont today, disobeyed physicians' orders and climbed from his bed in the County Hospital for a stroll about the place. His walk was interrupted by nurses, however, and he is again confined to his bed.

Lee tonight was reported as having an excellent chance for recovery, unless complications set in, by Dr. W. R. Dorr, superintendent of the hospital. Six X-ray pictures taken today failed to reveal the bullet, Dr. Dorr said, but declared that it must be lodged at the base of the brain near where it entered. Lee will be again subjected to X-ray examinations Monday.

Both Defense and State Have "Cards Up Sleeve"

Unique and Rare Insanity is Darrow's Theory

Effort to be Made to Show Loeb Did Killing

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

CHICAGO, July 20.—The confession of a second killing and a mutilation operation is attributed to Nathan Leopold and Richard Loeb, according to a Chicago morning newspaper, in statements made to defense attorneys and alienists. The newspaper says the death of Freeman L. Tracey is involved in the slaying. He was a university student and was shot and thrown from a motor car after having attended a dance. The newspaper says the mutilation crime was committed on Charles Ream, a taxicab driver. He was captured by two men and afterwards chloroformed and mutilated.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

CHICAGO, July 19.—Belief persisted today that when Nathan Leopold and Richard Loeb are arraigned Monday in Criminal Court for preliminaries to their trial August 4, next, for the murder of Robert Franks, the defense will spring a vital surprise on the State. Clarence Darrow, chief of counsel for the murderers, would not hint at any [illegible] of his plans today, but intimated he would ask for a continuance of thirty days to enable him to complete the line of defense. The State also intimates it may have a [illegible] in store but there is no [illegible] of its nature.

It became known today that the defense may declare that both murderers are afflicted with "folie a deux," a state of psychosis so rare that only a few published authorities on insanity even touch the subject. The State raises its shoulders at this high-priced stuff and insist that murder is murder and that Leopold and Loeb always have boasted of their superior intellects.

It also is said that efforts will be made to show that Loeb was the actual killer of the Franks boy, but the State will point to Leopold's confession, where he said it "made me sick, as the bid struggled and died beside me." If he were in the front seat driving, as he now insists, the boy would not have died "beside him," as the murder was committed in the rear seat.

The State will try Leopold and Loeb on the murder charge first, and if that fails wil then try them on the kidnaping charge, which also carries the death penalty. This, of course, is based on the assumption that the defense will not be able to get the murderers before a commission on sanity, have them sent to some friendly institution, thus avoiding trial for murder. If this plan is successful, another commission later on could declare both murderers had regained their sanity and order them released.

The plan to broadcast the trial may be abandoned because the testimony is such that much of it would have to be censored.

SUIT SEEKS TO PROTECT CATTLE

Receiver Asked for Assets of Loan Company

Stock of Insolvent Ranchers Suffer from Drought

War Finance Corporation is Holder of Notes

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

EL PASO (Tex.) July 19.—Application for appointment of a receiver for the assets and property in the western district of Texas for the Live Stock and Agricultural Loan Company of New Mexico was filed in the United States District Court here today by the War Finance Corporation. The suit is for the collecting of the company's loans in Texas. L. A. Hughes was appointed receiver and an injunction was granted enjoining all parties from interfering with the receivership.

The petition states that virtually all of the notes and indebtedness owing to the defendant company are past due and collections are necessary to protect the War Finance Corporation, holder of the notes which were given as collateral. This suit has been brought to protect the collateral, which consists principally of live stock in the hands of mortgagors which in many instances are unable to provide grass, water and proper care owing to the fact that they are insolvent. The War Finance Corporation states that it has no legal right at this time to bring suit for collection of the loans for the reason that upon the appointment of L. A. Hughes as receiver for the Live Stock and Agricultural Loan Company of New Mexico, all papers were turned over to him.

The complainant sets forth that the defendant has a note for $27,000 assigned as collateral to the War Finance Corporation and secured by a herd of cattle in Loving county which is past. The cattle are suffering because of drought and should be moved, but under existing conditions there is no one authorized to take charge.

FINLAND BRINGS RECORD NUMBER

Maj.-Gen. Babbitt in List of 417 Passengers

E. M. Hewlett Arrives to Help on Power Problem

Hundred and Fifty Comely Maidens Disembark

A hundred and fifty comely maidens, hailing from Schenectady to Wichita, were among the 417 passengear arriving from New York, Havana and the Canal yesterday aboard the Panama-Pacific liner Finland. It was the largest passenger list ever entering this port in off-shore trade, while among the arrivals were many notables in the trades, arts and professions.

A. J. McCARTHY

Maj. Gen. E. R. Babbitt, commanding the Third Division, United States Army, and the man who led the famous Fourth Division through the Meuse-Argonne, St. Mihiel and Aisne-Marne offensives, was a passenger, accompanied by Mrs. Babbitt.

The general is returning to duty at Camp Lewis, Wash., after attending the fortieth reunion in New York of the United States Military Academy class of 1884, of which he is president. The class of '84 turned out more general officers than any class in the history of West Point, others being Maj.-Gen. Harry Taylor, chief of the Corps of Engineers; Maj.-Gen. S. T. Sturgis and Maj.-Gen. S. L. Sibert.

MAJ. GEN. E. B. BABBITT

SAYS ARMY CRIPPLED

The Regular Army is crippled by the natural reaction which follows every war, said Gen. Babbitt.

"We have been cut to a point below the minimum of efficiency," he declared. "Congress, at present, will not let us have tools enough for the task before us of training our skimpy personnel in the art of war.

"The National Guard and Organized Reserves, however, are decidedly on the upgrade. Both promise a great future as secondary arms of defense."

E. M. Hewlett, electrical engineer, who designed the operating system of the Panama Canal and who was associate worker with the late Charles P. Steinmetz, also arrived on the Finland. Mr. Hewlett is in Los Angeles to lend his thirty-five years of electrical experience in solving the electric power shortage in California. His invention of the ingenious suspension insulator made possible the Southern California Edison Company's new 220,000-bolt plant.

LINE OFFICIAL HERE

A. J. McCarthy, manager of the American Flag steamers of the International Mercantile Marine, came in on the Finland accompanied by his wife and their daughter, Miss Eleanor Jane.

Mr. McCarthy had high praise for the support Southern California has given the Panama-Pacific line and announced that fall passenger bookings are so heavy that additional fast tonnage will be placed on the run in the near future.

Other notables disembarking yesterday were: Col. William H. Pritchett, U. S. Marine Corps, here to assume command of the Fourth Regiment at San Diego; Mme. Kurt Rasquin, noted German opera star, and Stephen L. Savich, Chicago waffle king.

AFFIDAVIT IN DORRIS CASE IS GIVEN OUT

Statement Sworn to in Chicago Declares Meyer Refused to Pay Note

Contents of the mysterious affidavit said to exist in the Dorris-Meyer murder case came to light yesterday when Detective N. L. Mosely of Long Beach, in charge of the investigation of the dual shooting which resulted in the deaths of Mrs. Therese M. Dorris and Henry D. Meyer in Long Beach on June 30, last, revealed the high lights of the document.

The affidavit is supposedly from Ethel P. Evans, formerly of 1610 Twelfth avenue, who was in Chicago at the time the affidavit was sworn to. It sets forth that on January 31, last, or thereabout, Miss Evans was in Meyers's office when the latter spoke of the $25,000 note. At this time, according to the affidavit, Meyer declared he would see Dorris in hades and as old as Methuselah before he paid the money.

The affidavit is supposed to have been sworn to before Thomas Klubak, notary public of Chicago. Local authorities are inclined to believe that the affidavit is valid.

N. L. Franks, acting detective, who was working on the Dorris case with Detective Mosely, resigned from the department immediately upon the return of Capt. J. B. Worley from San Francisco Friday. Franks, declared by Chief J. S. Yancy to have resigned because of a better position offered him, is unofficially understood to have quit the force over differences with Mosely during the Dorris investigation and particularly over the affidavit made public by Mosely. Mosely, in charge of the case, says Franks had knowledge of the affidavit for two weeks before making it known to him.

SIOUX WAR HERO QUITS ARMY JOB

Sergt. Swift Retires After Thirty Years' Service

His Shot Halted Uprising of Indians During 1888

Tribe Dispersed When Chief Died at Little Big Horn

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Staff Sergeant John Swift, U.S.A., whose trigger finger is credited with having ended the last big Indian war, packed his uniform and the mementoes of thirty years' strenuous service in the Army in his old kit bag today and departed from the Presidio of San Francisco, a crisp new bit of paper labeled "honorable discharge" safely tucked away in an inside pocket.

On November 5, 1888, the First Cavalry established contact with a band of marauding Sioux on the banks of the Little Big Horn River in Montana, a region that had been dedicated as historic by Custer's great fight on more than a decade before. The "Fighting First" swung into action and Swift was wounded early in the fray and his horse killed under him. Seizing the horse of a fallen comrade, he carried on in spite of his wound. The red men, grotesquely painted, fought on devilishly but finally a bullet from Sergt. Swift's gun accounted for their cheif, Rap-Up-His-Tail.

With their leader dead, the Indians dispersed. There were uprisings in the Indian country thereafter, but the last big war ended with the death of Rap-Up-His-Tail, according to Army annals.

Swift served later in the Philippines, Alaska and Mexico. In the World War he went through the engagements of Chateau Thierry, Belleau Woods, St. Mihiel and the Argonne as a sergeant in the Fourth Division. He enlisted in Cincinnati on July 21, 1885, but left the Army for nine years and then re-enlisted.

ARTILLERY REGIMENT IS LAUDED

Regular Army Officer Gives Praise as State Troops Break Camp

That the Two Hundred and Fiftieth Coast Artillery, California National Guard, was far higher in general efficiency than at any previous encampment, was the parting comment of Maj. T. C. Cook, Regular Army senior instructor, as the regiment entrained yesterday afternoon for home.

Because of poor visibility the record of hits was not as high on the whole as last year's performance, although several batteries ran up 50 per cent on the fourteen-inch coast-defense rifles, and in caliber practice one mortar battery scored eighteen hits out of a possible twenty-six.

The command's grasp of the principles as well as their speed in handling the big guns, however, was what caused Maj. Cook to pronounce the two wekes' training the most successful of any guard organization he had ever instructed.

The 800 men under command of Col. R. E. Mittelstaedt marched down from the upper reservation and entrained shortly after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon. San Pedro and Long Beach batteries were diverted to their destinations and the San Diego and San Francisco battalions continued to Los Angeles, where the train was split.

"The morale was wonderful," commented Col. Mittelstaedt, "and there wasn't a single casualty.

Military Camp Invites Men to Take Training

An invitation to men interested in military training in Southern California requesting them to attend the summer training camp at Ross Field during the next week was issued by C. P. Kane, commanding office of the encampment, through the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

Commander Kane pointed out that only one week remained of the training school season and that those desiring instruction would be welcome to attend classes. Business men who are able to devote only an hour of their time are as welcome as those who receive the full course.

Equipment for the camp has been lent the officials by the California Institute of Technology and instruction is being given in firing practice, with four varied types of arms and four types of targets.

TRAFFIC REFORM PROPOSED

Investigator Urges Impartial Court, Elimination of Parades and Extended Curb on Parking

An intelligent traffic board, a well-informed and impartially administered traffic court, elimination of parades and advertising vehicles from downtown streets, gradual increase of the extent of prohibitive parking space and stricter observance by pedestrians of the "stop" and "go" signals are among the needs for relief of traffic congestion in Los Angeles, according to opinions voiced at the City Club yesterday by Miller McClintock, employed as a special investigator for the Traffic Commission.

Discussing the recently-adopted prohibitive-parking ordinance which goes into effect next September, McClintock said that business is best along those thoroughfares through which traffic moves most easily and smoothly and predicted that the business houses in the prohibitive-parking district will benefit by the new ordinance.

WARNS OF AUTOS

"On the whole, those cities that are growing fastest are those supplied with cheap and easy transportation facilities," said McClintock. "In this connection we must remember that the commerce of a city does not begin and end with the terminals and that it is no special benefit to a city to be located on a splendid highway if the interior arteries of the municipality are choked.

"Our modern traffic problem began in 1895 when the first 300 automobiles were operated throughout the country and conditions have grown worse up to the present time when there are 17,000,000 motor vehicles in America," continued the speaker. "The most densely 'auto-infested' area in the United States is the Los Angeles metropolitan district, in which there are 410,000 motor vehicles, or about one to every three persons.

"We are spending about an hour at this luncheon. During this hour about 240 persons will have been killed or injured by motor vehicles in the United States. When you leave this room go and watch a thousand cars pass the street corner and, if you care to indulge in a morbid reflection consider the fact that one machine out of that 1000 is a 1924 death-car."

RAPS CONGESTION

Congestion on the downtown streets could be eliminated to a great extent according to McClintock, by the city's refusing to allow the streets to be used as storage places for trucks. He also advocated and predicted that large business buildings in the future shall provide basement space for the parking of machines.

"Individual drivers should show more willingness to accept the directions of officers and signals," said McClintock. "Also these rules should be more carefully observed by pedestrians. Jay-walking is another sin of pedestrians. More than 1200 jay-walkers enjoy their sweet freedom on the streets of Los Angeles during the lunch hour. If you should see an automobilist driving along the sidewalk at noon, or at any other hour, you would pronounce him drunk or crazy, and he probably would be one of the two. What shall we say of the pedestrian who imagines he has the right of way on the streets between blocks?"

S. C. Graham, president of the City Club, announced that the speaker at the luncheon next Wednesday will be Capt. R. Lee Heath, newly-appointed Chief of Police. At the luncheon next Friday there will be a community sing and on Friday evening members of the club will attend the Pilgrimage Play.

He is at the head of the insurance department of the Wharton school of commerce and finance of the University of Pennsylvania, and also is confidential adviser to many of the large insurance companies of the United States.

In falling his foot caught in the stirrup and he suffered severe injuries to the spine. CLEM SHAVER TAKES CHARGE

Washington is Selected as Democrat Headquarters

Pacific Coast May be Given Campaign Bureau

Manager "Presumes" Davis Will Stump West

BY DONALD EWING
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Clem Shaver today took over active charge of the Democratic National Committee from Cordell Hull with the announcement that Washington "would be the heart of Democratic campaign activities," with branch headquarters in Chicago and New York.

Smaller bureaus will be established around the country at least one in the South and two or three in the West, one of the latter probably being on the Pacific Coast.

BUREAU FOR SOUTH

Replying to queries as to whether it was necessary for the Democrats to make an active drive in the South, Shaver said the bureau there would merely be in "recognition of the South's aid to Democracy."

"The South is part of the party—it should be recognized," he said. Shaver, himself, will spend a majority of his time here in Washington, with frequent short trips to Chicago and New York as the occasion demands. He will go to Clarksburg, W. Va., tonight to discuss notification plans with chieftains there, returning Monday to resume the settling of campaign details, particularly personnel of bureaus, funds and speakers.

MAY SPEAK HERE

He would not speak directly as to Davis's campaign plans, but said that a "man who is candidate for President of the United States probably should pretty well cover the United States in his campaign." He "presumed" Davis would speak on the Pacific Coast, but insisted that all such matters would be left entirely to the candidate himself.

Davis's stumping will, of course, be augmented by an adequate speakers' bureau which already is in process of organization.

As to whether Davis's probable appearances in the West will be imitated by Charles W. Bryan with stumping in the East, Shaver said that would be left "entirely to Mr. Bryan, as will all details of his notification."

MENONITES SEEK LAND IN MEXICO

Russian Colonists Sending Investigators to Pick Sites for Settlements

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—Thousands of Menonites now living in the Volga region of Russia are planning to colonize in Mexico.

A vanguard of thirty-seven men is now in Mexico investigating conditions, and will select lands and townsites. They will remain several months and then return to Russia and report. It is expected that the Menonites will begin to come late this year from Odessa.

There are now reported to be some 5000 Menonites from Canada and the United States in the State of Chihuahua, where twenty villages have been established. About 5000 more are expected from Saskatchewan, while newcomers have started in the State of Durango. During the past ten weeks 250 Menonites have arrived in that State from Saskatchewan.

Ford Reported Planning Plant in Mexican City

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MONTEREY (Mexico) July 19. Americans said to be representing the Ford Motor Company have purchased a site here for an automobile manufacturing plant. It is asserted that construction of the proposed plant will be started soon. There is a constantly increasing demand for Ford cars and Fordson tractors in Mexico, and it will be the purpose of the new plant to supply the wants of the Mexican people in this respect, according to the promoters of the project. The Monterey Iron and Steel Company, which has for many years operated a $10,000,000 iron and steel products plant here, is equipped to supply many of the materials for the manufacture of automobiles and motor trucks, it is explained.

Some time ago the report was circulated in Mexico that Henry Ford had purchased the famous Iron Mountain, situated near Durango. This report was denied at the time, but it is known that the Ford interests are in possession of complete data as to the iron ore resources of the country.

PERSEVERENCE IS WAY TO CUT DOWN STATIC

While virtually every radio engineer in the world has been trying to find some means of eliminating or reducing static, the fans themselves during the last two months have found a means of materially decreasing this bugaboo. The answer is: Sufficient interest to keep the fan at his set. This was provided during the broadcasting of the political conventions in Cleveland and New York. During the worst two months of the year, as far as atmospheric interference is concerned, virtually nine out of ten fans sat in for longer periods than ever before to get the proceedings at first hand, and most of them got them. Even in the government hospitals in Washington, nurses say they could not get World War veteran patients to do anything but listen in, while the conventions were on the air. In midafternoon, when static is at its height, during hot nights with electrically-charged clouds hanging low and thunderstorms threatening, the radio public sat in and "got" the conventions, static or no static. They wanted to hear and they did.

BANK WILL CLOSE; DEPOSITORS SAFE

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

ST. LOUIS, July 19.—The Republic National Bank here has been closed permanently, the directors having decided to liquidate because the institution was losing too much money. The Clearinghouse Association has guaranteed payment of all deposits, but it is believed the stockholders will lose about $700,000. The bank was organized in 1921 by William Sacks, former postoffice clerk, who became wealthy through his oil holdings. Sacks retired from the directorate of the bank and his $200,000 holdings were taken over by a syndicate last January.

New Boss of Police Gets Bouquets

R. Lee Heath and Tokens of Friends

Floral offerings of co-workers grace desk taken over by new official yesterday.

HEATH STARTS IN AS CHIEF

Assumes Command of Department on Departure of Vollmer for Needed Fortnight Vacation

R. Lee Heath, recently appointed Chief of Police, actually took office yesterday, though officially, the retiring head of the department, Chief August Vollmer of Berkeley, does not relinquish his authority until August 1.

Due to his need for rest and recuperation from the arduous tasks performed by him during his year's residence here as head of the local department, Chief Vollmer left the city Friday night on a two weeks' vacation in the mountains. At the end of that time he will again take up his duties as Chief of Police of Berkeley.

Chief Heath, on assuming the duties as head of the department, spent most of his time yesterday in accepting congratulations of friends and well-wishers for his future success as Chief. His office had the appearance of a florists' shop due to the number of large and elaborate floral offerings presented to him by members of the police department. On one side of his desk reposed a gigantic basket of mixed flowers presented to him as a token of esteem from members of the Bureau of Records of which he was the head during Chief Vollmer's term of office. On the other was a large floral badge presented to him by members of the police radical squad. At times when he was not engaged in conversing with visitors the new Chief made an effort to adjust himself to the rigid chair of hard work left by Chief Vollmer.

While thus occupied the new Chief took the opportunity to make a brief statement as to his general intentions of handling the department in the near future.

"Give me time," he declared, "and I will be able to say more definitely just what I will do. At the present time I see no reason to make any immediate changes. As soon as I have had the opportunity to adjust myself to the position I will be able to tell whether the methods and regulations of the department made by Chief Vollmer conform to my own ideas. There is nothing at present to show that they do not. While head of the Bureau of Records I had ample opportunity to watch the development of Chief Vollmer's plans and I have always firmly believed that they were the best for the department. Of course, as Chief Vollmer stated, these plans have but just been put into operation and there is much more to be accomplished before we can arrive at their fulfillment."

Chief Heath stated that he hoped the same spirit of friendliness which he said has existed between the Sheriff's office and the District Attorney's office and himself during the nineteen years that he has spent as a member of the police department would continue.

WORLD FLIGHT TO END HERE

War Department Decides 'Round-the-World Aviators Will Come to Clover Field; Fete Planned

BY ROBERT B. ARMSTRONG
"Times" Staff Correspondent
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Clover Field, Santa Monica, will be the finish of the around-the-world air flight now being completed by the American aviators. The flight started from Clover Field and this point ends the contest. The mighty flight writes a new epoch in air conquest and when the American flyers land on United States soil they will cut the time of the flight from the eastern seaboard to the California starting place to the limit.

Army officers in charge of this service at the War Department have made up their minds that the finish will be on the same spot where the historical flight started and probably will for years to come be the route and distance for other flyers to use in seeking to lower the records for world-wide air flights. Some who have commented on the flight sought to call the starting point of the trip Seattle, but the official record of the War Department makes it Clover Field, Santa Monica, and the formal announcement will be made as soon as the flyers land in this country that the men who have conquered the mountains, oceans and plains of other countries will seek to make the flight to California as soon as it can be made safely and the shortest practical route will be taken.

Every hour that can be cut off the total record will be shaved after the flyers start for California and great plans are being made for a celebration of the completion of the flight at Clover Field. The flyers plan to take the air mail route at least as far as Cheyenne and then may fly direct to Clover Field. Weather conditions may force the world conquerors to go to Sacramento first before the southern flight begins.

After the globe-navigators have made the record and enjoyed the celebration which Southern California will present to the men who have established new aviation history, they will come back to the East in a leisurely fashion with frequent stops to let the people see the men and machines that put the American flag first in the greatest single endeavor in aviation since planes were invented.

MAN MAKES NINE-STORY DEATH LEAP

Aged Victim of Illness Jumps from Window of Downtown Hotel

Hurtling himself through the window of his room on the ninth floor of the Stillwell Hotel to the roof of the hotel garage seven stories below, E. M. Hellwig, 80 years of age, said to have been a former City Treasurer of Lincoln, Neb., met death, and the end, as he asserted in a note, of an oppressing illness. His crushed body was found by hotel attaches after a maid had noticed the open window and the empty room.

The note left behind by Hellwig was addressed to a friend, W. B. Bethume of 2980 West Pico street. Mr. Bethume told Detective Lieutenant Jarvis, who investigated the case, that Mr. Hellwig had lived for many years at the hotel, and that up until he had last seen him two months ago, he had always been in good health. Mr. Hellwig, according to Mr. Bethume, though not considered wealthy, always appeared to be in fairly good circumstances. He left $300, according to Detective Jarvis, to defray the expenses of his burial.

The body was taken to the Ivy Overholtser undertaking establishment.

Ex-Convict Shot in Flight Linked in New Hold-up

George Maynard, ex-convict whose flight from arrest was halted by police bullets on the 12th inst., has been linked up with a third major crime here, Assistant Captain of Detectives Cato announced yesterday.

The suspect, who is in serious condition at General Hospital, has been identified as one of the bandits who held up Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Hill of Tulsa, Okla., in Hollywood on December 12, 1922, and robbed them of $10,000 in diamonds and cash. Mr. Hill is a millionaire oil operator of Oklahoma. He and his wife were returning to their hotel in Hollywood in their automobile when the bandits overhauled them in another machine, forced them to the curb and then stripped both of all their valuables.

The other two crimes in which Maynard is said to have participated are the hold-up and killing of Sam McGee, messenger of the First National Bank, in which the bandits obtained $400,000 in securities, and the hold-up of a dinner party returning from the Ambassador, which netted the gunmen $15,000 in jewels and cash.

OIL CONFERENCE SOON IN MEXICO

Warren Confirms Report of Meeting With Obregon

Americans to Center Attack on New Lease Laws

Ambassador Denies He Will be Envoy to Japan

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—Ambassador Warren, in an interview today, confirmed reports that a party composed of some of the leading oil men of the United States will arrive here soon to discuss with President Obregon their differences with the government.

The oil men, Ambassador Warren said, will seek definite basis for developing the industry. They will center their efforts particularly on obtaining an understanding with President Obregon and the government relative to oil lands leased since 1917, when the new Mexican constitution went into effect.

Ambassador Warren confirmed the settlement of the strike called by workmen against the Aguila Oil Company and then discussed reports that much of the ammunition for Enfield rifles, which was bought by the Mexican government from the United States during the last revolution, had proved faulty and had caused many fatalities among Federal troops. There have been no official exchanges between the United States and Mexico on this subject, he said, although the matter has received considerable prominence here.

The functions of the Claims Commission, which will open its session here in a short time, also were taken up by Mr. Warren. Only private claims of citizens of the United States and Mexico will be taken up at these sessions, he said.

Referring to the case of Mrs. Rosalie Evans, which figured largely in the retirement from this country of H. A. Cunnard Cummins and the breaking off of diplomatic relations between Mexico and Great Britain, Mr. Warren said that the United States is now looking after her interests since it assumed charge of the British Embassy after Cummins's retirement. Mr. Warren denied the possibility that he might become the next United States Ambassador to Japan.

FOURTH OF CHAMBER'S BONDS SOLD

Five-Day Sale of Issue Providing for Building Shows Good Response

Almost one-fourth or $500,000 worth of the $2,000,000 issue of first mortgage 6 per cent Chamber of Commerce Building bonds have been sold since they were placed on sale last Tuesday, according to Frank Wiggins, secretary of the chamber.

Heading the list of first subscribers is E. L. Doheny, Los Angeles oil magnate, who has taken $100,000 worth. Others who were among the first big subscribers were Mary J. Prager, $10,000; Mrs. W. F. Edgar, $10,000; G. Del Amo, $10,000; Los Angeles Investment, $10,000, and Fay Securities Company, $10,000.

A great number of people have subscribed to smaller amounts of the bonds which are issued in denominations of $1000 each. Virtually all the leading banks in Los Angeles and surrounding cities are taking subscriptions.

Money raised through the issue is to be used in completing the Class A eight-story Chamber of Commerce Building on Twelfth street between Broadway and Hill streets. The building has a frontage of 250 feet on Twelfth and 202 feet each on Broadway and Hill.

In addition to housing the Chamber of Commerce, the building will contain a number of stores and offices. More than 50 per cent of the space in the building has already been reserved, according to Fred C. Heywood, manager of the building.

The rapid growth of the chamber from an organization of twenty-five in 1888 to more than 12,000, as well as the increase in the variety of service it renders to the business public in general, has necessitated the erection of the chamber's new home.

CLAIMS IN REVOLT TO BE HEARD

Mexican-American Body is to Pass on Petitions at El Paso Session

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

EL PASO, July 19.—The Mexican-American commission to pass on claims for life and property loss during the Mexican revolutions from 1910 to May 31, 1920, will conduct a meeting here in the near future, according to announcement of Attorney J. M. Goggin, who represents the Cusi massacre claimants.

Sixteen persons, many of them engineers, were killed on a train by bandits near Cusi. Mining companies have filed claims for property damage.

Some of the claimants are: H. Sprints and Mrs. M. Ferner, $4000, stores destroyed in Juarez by rioting Federal troops in 1912.

D. C. Sutton, store confiscated at Sabinal in 1912, asks $9000.

Mrs. J. E. Webster, whose husband was slain in Cumbre tunnel destruction, asks $25,000.

Herman West, $20,000, shot and dangerously wounded by Mexican troops at Parral in 1912.

E. W. Neville, $25,000; son killed in raid on ranch near Presidio in 1918.

Mrs. George A. Redd, $25,000; husband slain at Dublan by bandits in 1914.

C. A. Phelps, $10,000; shot and wounded in Juarez by Federal officer while working on street car.

DATE SET FOR TRIAL OF ISLAND SCOUTS

RECORD NUMBER TO FACE MILITARY TRIBUNAL ON 25th INST.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

MANILA, July 19.—Date of the trial of the Philippine scouts who recently refused to obey orders at Fort McKinley has been fixed for the 25th inst.

The largest number of persons ever tried at one time by an American military tribunal will face the court in one of the two trials set. The ringleaders, accused of causing a mutiny, are to be tried together by one court, but the others, numbering more than 200, will come before a second court. The latter group stand charged with joining a mutiny.

The group trials were arranged to save labor and expense. If each scout were tried separately, the hearings would last more than six months, officers estimated, while the expense would be enormous.

COMPROMISE SEEN IN CHINESE STRIKE

DOMESTICS AT SHAMEEN SAID TO MODERATE THEIR DEMANDS

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

CANTON, July 19.—Possibility of a compromise to end the strike of domestic and household workers in Shameen (the foreign settlement) was foreseen today when announcement was made that the strikers had moderated their demands.

The Chinese still insist, however, on cancellation of the order for photograph passes for Chinese passing in and out of Shameen. This was one of a set of new regulations for Shameen employees which caused the strike.

The new proposal for settlement of the strike has been placed before the French and British municipal councils for decision.

In the meantime, the strikers are threatening further activities. It is claimed that they have been promised "sympathy" strikes by other unions both here and in Hongkong, unless their demands are granted.

NOVEL ELOPEMENT SCHEME WORKS OUT

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

ST. LOUIS, July 19.—When Rudolph Schubert visited the home of his fiancee the other day, his presence excited no suspicion. When he was ready to go he announced to his prospective mother-in-law, Mrs. J. B. Ehrhart, that he was going to take a trip and wanted to borrow a suitcase. Mrs. Ehrhart sent her daughter Ruth for it.

A few hours after Schubert had departed it was discovered that Ruth was missing, too. About that time a telegram arrived from Schubert and Miss Ehrhart at Springfield, Ill., saying they were married. The parents went after them but were willing to forgive.

It developed that the suitcase borrowed by Schubert had contained the bridal outfit of Miss Ehrhart and this had been their ruse to get her out of the house without suspicion.

are also seeking youth with the hold-up and robbery of Miss Hamilton and her room-mate, Miss Harriet Bennett, another professional entertainer, on the morning of April 19, last.

The two girls were returning to their apartment at 1022 South Hill street from the Paris Cafe, where they are employed, in Miss Hamilton's automobile, when four men in another machine overhauled them. The men flirted with the two girls and then followed them to the apartment. Two of the bandits jumped out of their car as the girls approached the door of the apartment-house and held them up. From Miss Hamilton they obtained a diamond lavalliere valued at $300 and from her hoommate $120 in cash.

CAUGHT ON STREET

Findley was arrested at Seventh street and Broadway. He had made an appointment with Miss Hamilton to meet her there and, according to the detectives, to return the diamond ring and the pistol. Miss Hamilton communicated with the police.

Findley did not produce either the ring or the pistol and was taken into custody.

GAY PRINCE WILL PAUSE IN JAIL NOW

Notorious Noble Arrested by Immigration Officials; Bond is $100,000

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Prince De Quince Zerdecheno Mohammed Saide, world-wide royal imposter and swindler, is under arrest here on a warrant issued by the Department of Labor on information supplied by the State Department and Immigration Bureau. Federal agents impounded Zerdie in the imperial suite of the third police precinct.

Here the Prince-Chap will be given a chance to write a few chapters of his royal memoirs until he furnishes $100,000 bond for temporary relief on a charge of illegal entry into the country. Zerdie was arrested in front of the Egyptian Legation on Eighteenth street and Avenue Q by Inspector Russell of the Immigration Inspectors' Office. He had discarded his customary swallow-tail frock coat for a snappy blue American business suit, topped by a nifty straw hat.

When Zerdie met the police several hundred dollars were found on his person, which was not sufficient, however, to meet his bail. He sought to strike a bargain with his hosts, but even the display of the gold embossed coat of arms on his visiting card failed to have an effect.

Lessor Regains Store Building in Unusual Deal

An unusual real estate deal in which the lessor bought back a lease given by him, paying cash and other considerations to the value of $100,000, was announced yesterday when A. S. Van Degrift purchased the lease on the building at 749-51-53 South Broadway. The purchase was from William H. Moore, Jr., ancillary receiver, and has been confirmed by Federal Court.

The building has been occupied by the Scholtz-Mutual Drug Company. Van Degrift will either divide the building for stores and lofts or lease it as a whole.

CHILD HURT IN COLLISION

Joan Rexford, 8 years of age, of 1933 Ivar avenue, was cut and bruised severely yesterday when the scooter on which she was playing ran into an automobile parked at the curb near her home. "I couldn't stop," was the little girl's excuse for the accident. She was taken to Receiving Hospital for treatment. Later she was returned to her home.

TAMMEN RITES TO BE TUESDAY

Public Funeral Planned for Denver Publisher

Rise to Position of Wealth Unusually Spectacular

Estate Estimated at Close to Eight Millions

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

DENVER, July 19.—Funeral services for Harry Heye Tammen, Colorado pioneer and millionaire newspaper publisher, who died here early today, will be conducted from the Tammen residence Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Services will be open to the public.

Active pallbearers will be selected from the staff of Mr. Tammen's newspaper, the Denver Post, and from the personnel of the H. H. Tammen Company. Rev. Charles Marshall, former rector of St. Barnabas Church; Rabbi Friedman of Temple Emanuel, and Father F. T. Malone will unite in conducting the last rites.

RISE SPECTACULAR

Mr. Tammen is survived by a widow, Agnes Reid Tammen; a brother, Frank Tammen of Denver, and a sister, Mrs. J. K. Clark of New York, who is en route from California, where word of her brother's death reached her. She will arrive in Denver Monday morning.

The spectacular rise of Mr. Tammen to the ranks of wealthy men dates from 1895, when he associated himself with F. G. Bonfils in publishing the Denver Post. Through the publication of the newspaper and other private ventures, Mr. Tammen became one of Denver's wealthiest men and his fortune is conservatively mentioned at between $5,000,000 and $8,000,000.

CONDOLENCES SENT

Messages of condolence from men prominent in public and private life have poured into the Tammen home today in a steady stream. Mr. and Mrs. J. Ogden Armour of Chicago have announced their intention of being present for the funeral.

Mr. Tammen waged a losing battle for health, although always cheerful, for more than a year after physicians told him he was the victim of an incurable malady and had but a few months to live.

Death came suddenly and painlessly to him at 4:57 o'clock this morning after a short relapse following his return from Johns Hopkins Hospital at Baltimore several days ago.

He was born in Baltimore March 5, 1856.

SHE PLAYS ORGAN WITH SNAKE NEAR

Pastor's Wife Sticks to Her Post With Huge Adder Coiled at Her Feet

COTTONBORO (N. H.) July 19. Mrs. Anna Enman, wife of Rev. S B. Enman, pastor of Cottonboro Methodist Church, is the heroine of the town.

Mrs. Enman is the church organist. Just after she took her place at the organ during services the other night, she saw a three-foot green-and-white milk adder coiled up less than four feet away. Her first impulse was to scream, but, fearful that this would break up the service, she kept on playing while the congregation sang, and the snake, soothed by the music, looked on quietly.

The the pastor began to preach. The snake became restless. Mrs. Enman was scared, but she stuck to her place. Then she played and the snake again was charmed. When the service was over the snake led the way out of the church and later was killed.

Taxes Eat into Rent of Farms, Report Shows

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WASHINGTON, July 18.—State and county real estate taxes since 1920 have absorbed a large proportion of the income from rent on farms in various parts of the United States, according to a survey of the tax situation by the Department of Agriculture. Local real estate taxes, particularly for the supports of schools and public highways, according to the department, are more burdensome than any other taxes.

The survey does not deal with Federal income taxes, which, under existing exemptions, have not greatly concerned the average small farmer in recent years.

In the southern areas studied, real estate taxes were found to have absorbed about 10 per cent of the net cash rent from farms in 1919. In nine north central States property taxes consumed from 12 to 25 per cent of the net rent in the same year. In Western States the ratio varied from less than 10 per cent in California to 38 per cent in one county in Oregon.

Present taxing methods which take land valuations without considering farm earnings as the basis of taxation are objectionable, says the department. Land values, it points out, include anticipations of future earnings which may never be realized. Such anticipations in any case add nothing to the farmer's present ability to pay taxes. Annual income is usually the only source from which taxes can be paid.

RAISE QUARANTINE

Five Ranches Near Lankershim Free From Disease

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

LANKERSHIM, July 19.—Tomorrow five of the twenty-two hog and dairy ranches in the valley that were affected by the hoof-and-mouth disease will be declared free and the quarantine will be removed from them, according to announcement made today by Dr. H. M. Newton, veterinarian in charge of the enforcement of quarantine regulations in this section.

One of the infected premises is that of the Lawrence hog ranch, which was the second corral in the valley to be stricken. On the five premises healthy cattle were placed thirty days ago for the purpose of making the test. The entire premises had been thoroughly inspected after the cattle had been slaughtered, and to date not one of the healthy animals has exhibited the slightest signs of infection. There has been no new outbreak in the valley since May 3.

RANCHERS CASH IN FOR YEAR'S LABOR

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PORTERVILLE, July 19.—A more optimistic outlook generally prevails over Tulare county since the fruit season is well under way. Plums are about gone. Thompson seedless grapes are moving each day now from various sections of the county. First shipments by express cars went to New York, Chicago, and Tampa, Fla., while smaller express shipments went to Los Angeles and San Francisco.

This is about two weeks in advance of last season. Elbertas peaches have begun their first movement to markets and Tuscan clings are going to the canneries. Prices are said to be good in all lines. Most shipments are f.o.b.

Beef cattle are also going to Los Angeles markets from Porterville, Ducor, Springville and other foothill points.

ENDS LIFE OF SEPARATION

Man Who Had Kept Two Places Set at Table for Years in Hope of Wife's Return is Suicide

The table was set for two. One plate Willis Young had placed for his own meager breakfast. The other was for his absent wife whom he had not seen for thirteen years. But for thirteen years the table had always been set for two.

Willis Young was found dead at dawn yesterday. His body, an ugly bullet hole through the head, was sprawled on the bare floor beside one of the chairs placed at the table set for two. A second bullet had pierced the back of the other chair.

MURDERS MEMORY

Willis Young had murdered the memory of the woman he loved, his wife. Then he had ended his own life.

Willis Young once was a carpenter. Alone, he lived in the miniature cottage he had built with his own calloused hands at 510 Eastmont avenue. There, he whiled away his lonely hours with his few worldly treasures—a goatskin, a rattlesnake skin, a rack of many old pipes, a poem about "The Little Brown Church"—and the revered thoughts of his wife.

WIFE IN COLORADO

The wife, though, still lives. Her home is on the Colorado farm where she was born. She is there yet for, as she often told Willis Young when he begged her to come to California and to him, she refused to depart from the protective shadow of old Long's Peak.

"Willis, I could never live in a strang land where, awaking in the morning hours, I could not look from the window of the old farmhouse and see Long's Peak. Without Long's Peak near me, I would die of loneliness," she once wrote to him.

So Willis Young built himself a mansion. In it, he lived for thirteen years. Loneliness was his companion—yet it was so small that there was scarcely room for loneliness. It was a tidy little place. It had always been tidy. A goatskin draped on the back of the solitary rocking chair. A rattlesnake skin dangling from the wall. A few pictures and the poem about the "Little Brown Church" framed in chips of redwood bark. A rustic rack laden with many old, ill-smelling pipes.

Neighbors said that Willis Young was always alone. He was never honored by visitors. Never were there any guests to his frugal meals. Yet, whenever the lonely carpenter sat down to his frugal meal, there was always the second plate across the table, a second set of silverware, a second cup and saucer—and the empty chair. They had been placed twice daily. They were there yesterday when Deputy Sheriffs Stensland and Weir found the body of Willis Young.

"It is a plain case of suicide."

He had written it himself before firing the two bullets—one into his own head, the other through the empty chair.

"It is not necessary to have a Coroner's inquest. I am just tired of living in such a rotten world. . . .

"I have had my heaven and hell, but more heaven than hell. Now I want to be laid to rest and have peace, sweet peace. . . .

SPEAKS OF FRIENDS

"For God's sake, don't let them take me to the undertaker's parlor. I have friends enough to sit with me here."

But who, the neighbors asked. The goatskin? The rattlesnake skin? The memory that lingered in the empty chair?

For several days had Willis Young been preparing his death. He willed the goatskin to "Mrs. Vinson." Another fell heir to the rattlesnake skin. Another, to the rack of old pipes. To the laundryman he left the 85 cents found in his wallet. But to the wife who had refused to leave the shadow of Long's Peak—not a note, not a word did he leave.

Willis Young chinked up all the holes in his doll-house mansion. First, he had tried gas. The tube was in his mouth. The gas had been turned on. A knock was heard upon his door. A friend, Henry Wallace, was calling upon him. The friend knocked again. He heard two shots. His unexpected visit had caused Willis Young to abandon suicide by gas.

IS FOUND DEAD

The carpenter was dead when Henry Wallace entered.

"There, close by the church in the valley,
Lies one that I loved so well;
She sleeps, sweetly sleeps 'neath
the willow,
Disturb not her rest in the vale."

It was a verse from "The Little Brown Church," the poem that the deputies hastily read. They had searched the body, traced the course of the bullets, had turned off the gas and had thrown wide the doors. The weapon was in the dead man's right hand. And they found the bullet hole in the chair.

"There, close by the side of that loved one,
'Neath the tree where the wild flowers bloom,
When the farewell hymn shall be chanted,
I shall rest by her side in the tomb"

It was the last verse of "The Little Brown Church."

The deputies searched the little house. Here was a note to a friend. Here was a note to "mother." There were several notes, most of them long and written with care and precision. But the motive for the suicide of Willis Young, carpenter, was best told in the note found in the plate that was placed for the empty chair:

"And the table was set for two."

That was all.

SOON TO BUILD BUNGALOW SCHOOLS

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

UNIVERSAL CITY, July 19.—The board of education made announcement today that three bungalow school houses would be erected at once on the school property at Satsuma and Vineland avenues. These structures, it was stated, would be completed and ready for use when school opens in September. Further announcement was to the effect that the ultimate plans of the board contemplated the erection of a permanent grammar grade building at this point, but plans for this will not be developed immediately. That structure, according to the building program adopted by the board, would be listed among the structures to be erected during the months of spring and next summer.

BREAKS RECORD FOR VALLEY LAND DEALS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

EL CENTRO, July 19.—Four deeds conveying 16,500 acres of land in Imperial Valley from the Southern Pacific Land Company to the Title Insurance & Trust Company of Los Angeles, were filed for record here today. The total value of the land was given as $650,000, this sum representing the largest real estate transaction ever recorded here.

Much of the land represented in the deeds is not yet under water but lies in districts where it is asserted water for irrigation will be available within the next years.

FIRE DESTROYS CROP

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

VAN NUYS, July 19.—Internal fires resulting from the heating of green alfalfa hay resulted in a conflagration last night that destroyed eighty tons of hay on the H. Kubler ranch, 15,157 Parthenia street. It was known that the stack was in danger and the fire department laid a line of hose the night before for the purpose of protecting the property, but the heat was so great that it could not be prevented from coming to the surface, with the result that the entire stack was rendered useless for the purpose other than fertilizer. The loss was partially covered by insurance.

SHIP SMALL PACK

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

VAN NUYS, July 19.—Practically all of the apricot growers who had contracted their crop to the local cannery have cleaned up the harvest. To date only 17,000 cases have been packed. This is expected to be raised to 22,000, as compared with the output of 55,000 cases that had been expected when the season opened. Manager C. M. Gammon of the cannery hopes to be able to keep in operation on apricots and peaches until the tomato crop is ready.

BOOSTERS ORGANIZE

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

SOUTH GATE, July 19.—The South Gate Boosters' Association is being organized here with the merchants of State street and Post street as the members. A meeting is to be called later when the organization will be perfected.

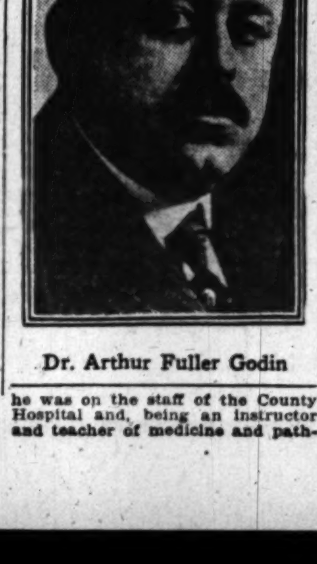
DR. GODIN RITES MONDAY

Physician and Bank Director Who Died Yesterday Came to Los Angeles in 1889

Dr. Arthur Fuller Godin, physician and director of the Bank of America, died at 1 o'clock yesterday morning after an illness of more than a year, during the greater part of which time he had been confined to his home at Rampart Apartments, West Sixth and Rampart streets.



Dr. Arthur Fuller Godin

While within recent weeks his death was not unexpected it has stricken his friends and family with bereavement. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Blanche Kimball Godin, but no children.

The funeral services will be conducted at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon from the chapel of Bresee Brothers.

CAME HERE IN 1889

Dr. Godin was born in Rockland, Mass., November 25, 1875. He came to Los Angeles in 1889. He attended Los Angeles High School and Throop Polytechnic. He was graduated from the medical college of the University of California in 1901 and became an interne at Los Angeles County Hospital.

He was a prominent member of the Nu Sigma Nu and Theta Nu Epsilon, which represented his medical college activities, and was active in the State and county medical societies. He also was a fellow of the American Medical Association, a member of the Sons of the Revolution in the State of California, the local Obstetrical Society and was appointed and served for several years as a physician to the Children's Hospital of Los Angeles and the California Home Foundling Society.

From the date of his internship he was on the staff of the County Hospital and, being an instructor and teacher of medicine and pathology, he became a professor in the medical college of the University of Southern California.

Orra E. Monnette, president of the Bank of America, said that from the inception of the new bank Dr. Godin was one of its ardent organizers and supporters.

"He was one of the sweetest-spirited men I have ever known and the charm and geniality of his presence gave forth to his fellow-beings a distillation of kindliness, rare and impressive," he said. "He was a gentleman at every point. He always exhibited himself as a true friend and loyal to those in whom he believed."

PALLBEARERS CHOSEN

The funeral services will be in charge of Dr. Hugh K. Walker of the First Presbyterian Church and the following have been selected as the active pallbearers: Mr. Monnette, H. A. Strodthoff, Charles Johnson, Edward A. Talbot, Dr. George G. Hunter and Dr. A. F. Ryan. The honorary pallbearers will be Dr. Norman Bridge, M. J. Monnette, Dr. V. R. Mason, B. W. Wilson, C. F. Easton, Dr. J. M. Allan, Dr. George L. Cole, Dr. R. E. Skeel, J. Lucas Williams, Dr. H. G. Brainerd, Walter J. Braumschweiger, G. D. Robertson, Dr. H. F. McGee and Ralph Day.

Interment will be in the mausoleum, Forest Lawn Cemetery, at Glendale.

American Net Stars Wage Great Uphill Fight

Vincent Richards is Twice Victor at Olympics

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

OLYMPIC STADIUM, COLOMBES (France) July 19.—The United States won the first of the finals for the Olympic tennis championships this afternoon when Miss Helen Wills and Mrs. George Wightman defeated Miss Kathleen McKane and Mrs. Covell, Great Britain, 7-5, 8-6.

Members of the American Olympic squad will be on one side of the net in the finals for the three other principal championships, the men's singles, women's singles and men's doubles, and there is a further possibility that the Stars and Stripes may flutter from the side of the scoreboard when the fifth and last event, mixed doubles, is concluded Monday.

Vincent Richards, who will meet Henri Cochet, France, tomorrow for the foremost of all five titles to be won on the Olympic courts, that of singles champion, has also reached the finals in the men's doubles. He and his partner, Francis T. Hunter, today vanquished the slim and fleet-footed French team, Borotra and LaCoste in five sets of a fast, thrilling play. The score was 6-3, 6-3, 0-6, 5-7, 6-3.

MEET FRENCH PAIR

Their opponents will be another Gallic pair, Brugnon and Cochet, who greatly pleased their countrymen today by defeating the South Africans, Condon and Richardson, 5-7, 6-3, 7-5, 10-8.

Richards has an opportunity to carry the triple title away from Colombes. Not only has he reached

Paavo Nurmi, Finnish triple Olympic champion, is seen in the circle on the occasion of his victory in the 5000-meter event. Harold Osborne is exhibited at the left, clearing 6ft. 6in. in the high jump, which won the event and set a new Olympic record. F. Morgan Taylor, who set a new world's record in the 400-meter hurdles by covering the distance in 52⅗s., is shown breaking the tape in the lower left, and Clarence Bud Houser, U.S.C. strong man, winner of both shot and discus in the games, may be seen at the lower right. The sensational finish of the 100-meter finals is reproduced in the lower picture. Abrahams of England, winner of the event, is second from the left, with Scholz of America, who finished second, second from the right. Porritt of New Zealand, third-place winner, is at the extreme left, with Bowman of U.S.A. partially concealed by Abrahams. Bowman finished fourth. Charlie Paddock, extreme right, finished fifth, and Murchison, who trailed the field, is behind Scholz. [P. & A. Photos.]

CHARLEY PADDOCK STARS AS YANK ATHLETES TRIM BRITISH

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

LONDON, July 19.—The stay-at-home Britishers and the Americans who were unable to go to Paris to witness the Olympic games watched a miniature verson of those games at Stamford Bridge today when the pick of the United States and British Empire teams which competed in Paris, came together in a series of track and field events which resulted in American victories in eleven of the events and British conquests in three.

Before the athletic events began the two teams paraded around the field, the Americans in running gear and looking in the pink of condition, leading the way, and getting a mighty ovation from the 40,000 spectators. The Britishers followed in blazers, straw hats and trousers.

The result of the first event, the 400-yard relay, saw the Stars and Stripes hoisted when the Americans broke the world's record for the distance by 1 1-5s.

The broken record was largely due to a sprint of Charles W. Paddock of Los Angeles in the third 100 yards, and to the tremendous burst of speed by Alfred Leconey of Philadelphia, who beat the British sprinter, Harold Abrahams, to the tape after the latter had badly fumbled in taking the baton from the previous British runner.

This gave the spectators an idea of something good to come and the Britishers roared with delight when the Union Jack was hoisted at the conclusion of the mile relay, signifying that they had won the race, which was very close. Britain's success in this event was largely due to the efforts of the short-striding Scottish flyer, Eric Liddell, who steadily overhauled the Chicagoan, H. M. Fitch, and beat him by two yards.

From then onward it was almost a continuous hoisting of the Stars and Stripes. The four-mile relay was the most gruelling race. The United States won each mile by the narrowest margin, the last mile proving the fastest at 4m. 25s., when Ray Buker, Illinois Athletic Club, broke the tape three yards ahead of B. MacDonald.

The Americans looked like easy winners in the two-mile relay and were ahead until a half-furlong from home, when H. D. Stallard of Cambridge, who always appeared to have something in hand, overhauled S. C. Enck, Pennsylvania State, and registered Great Britain's second victory.

The three-mile race team went to Great Britain, although V. H. Booth, Johns Hopkins, was the first home, and John Romig, Pennsylvania State was fourth. The Britishers had men in second, third, fifth and sixth places and won on points.

The mile medal relay was run in four distances.

MERMAIDS SET RECORDS

Mariechen Wehselau Hangs Up New World's Mark in 100-Meter Dash in Olympic Swimfest

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

LESTOURLIES (France) July 19.—World's records went tumbling today when the American women swimmers, winning in the 100-meter free-style semifinals and in the 100-meter back-stroke elimination heats in the Olympic competition proved that they were in a class by themselves.

Miss Mariechen Wehselau of Honolulu, tonight holds the world's record in the 100-meters, with 1m. 12 3-5s., while Miss Sybil Bauer, Illinois A. C., accounted for the 100-meters back-stroke record, setting it at 1m. 24s. flat.

The graceful American women divers: Elizabeth Becker, Caroline Smith and Helen Meany, all qualified in the plain high diving contest, and helped to make the second to last day of the Olympic swimming tournament another real feminine triumph for the United States.

GIVE GOOD ACCOUNT

The men members of the American team, while they did not shine with the brilliancy of their feminine comrades, gave a good account of themselves. Johnny Weismuller did his daily work with customary usefulness, just swimming fast enough to keep ahead of all opposition in the 100-meters free style. Duke and Sam Kahanamoku also won the honor of representing the United States in the final of this event tomorrow.

Clarence Pinkston, Al White and Dave Fall appear certain to finish, one, two, three in the finals of the fancy high diving event, and taking today's results generally, although no Olympic points were added to the American total, the qualification of the entire list of American entrants is fair indication that America at the conclusion of the competition Sunday night will have won in the water by a greater margin than in any other branch of the Olympic program.

PERFECT DIVE

Caroline Smith's high diving was perfection in itself. Miss Smith, who hails from Cairo, Ill., held 10,000 spectators enthralled by soaring through the air from a height of ten meters or more like a graceful bird and striking the water with but the slightest of splashes. Her final dive from more than thirty feet was beautifully executed.

Miss Wehselau, the proud holder of a world's record, says she will do faster time tomorrow.

"You will have to do better to beat me, Mariechen," remarked Miss Ethel Lackie, winner of the second heat.

Something is likely to happen to the new 100-meters record tomorrow when Miss Wehselau, Miss Lackie and Miss Ederle meet in

SCHNEIDER SINKS SEALS

Pete's Homer in Ninth Gives Bengals 8-to-6 Win; Pennant-Raising Spoiled by Defeat

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—The Seals raised the pennant today with the assistance of Mayor Rolph and a brass band, and then Vernon won the ball game, 8 to 6. It was one of those kind of games you read about, but seldom see. The Seals looked as if they should make a dozen runs, but had to scramble for eight innings to make six.

And then just when everyone was feeling joyful because the Seals had tied the score, along came Burly Pete Schneider, who slammed the ball into the left-field bleachers, scoring a man ahead of him and the Seals were sunk without a trace.

TIGERS SCORE SIX

Pat Shea moved along nicely for three innings and then the Tigers fell on him for six runs in the fourth. The first of those six was scored on a pop fly from the bat of Thomas, which fell just back of second base, too far in for Valla—too far for either Rhyne or Walsh. Then Kimmick hit a double to right, the ball striking the foul line on the fence. Menosky and Hannah followed with singles and Pete Schneider kicked in with a double, the ball striking the bleacher front just above Kelly's itching fingers. Pete was thrown out at third, trying to make three bases on the blow, but the six runs were in and Shea was out.

Lady luck deserted Thomas in the eighth. It was inconceivable that he could keep getting away with it as he had for seven rounds. Yelle opened the round with a single and, of course, Schorr hit into a double play. That's the way it had been all afternoon. But then came a change. Kelly got a hit and Valla drew a pass. Tim Hendryx had hit into two double plays, but this time he took no chances. He drove the ball into the left-field bleachers, scoring Kelly and Valla ahead of him, and tying the score.

FINISH OF THOMAS

That was the finish of Thomas. Big Bryan went in and got Ellison out to retire the side. Schneider's home-run following Hannah's single gave the Tigers the game in the ninth. The score:

...cobs was walking into the Angel dugout to get a drink of water.

The Seraphs got an honest-to-goodness run off Kunz in the fourth when Jacobs singled over short and came home on Cruise's potent wallop to center. Cruise attempted to stretch the hit into a triple, but was nailed at third.

HUGHES WEAKENS

After pitching wonderful ball for five innings Tom Hughes started to weaken in the sixth, but got by this inning without being scored upon. After one was out Brubaker singled to left, but remained on first while Adams popped to McAuley. Then Buzz Arlett doubled to left, putting Brubaker on third. Hood's throw to the infield got by Beck and Brubaker decided to come home. However, Durst pounced on the ball and threw to Jenkins just in time to catch Brubaker at the plate for the third out.

Hughes was not so lucky in the seventh when Ted Cather led off with a double and came home on infield outs by Goebel and Maderas. The Oaks filled the bases with two out in the eighth, but Tom forced Cather to fly to Twombly for the out that squelched the rally.

Then came the Oak half of the ninth with Howard's array of pinch-everythings. Louie Guisto, hitting for Goebel, was thrown out by Hughes, but McCarron, batting for Maderas, delivered a single to center. George Boehler, the hero of the Oaks's double win Friday, was sent in to run for McCarron. Baker sent Boehler to second with a hit to left. Manager Ivan Howard decided to break up the ball game himself, but the best the Oak pilot could do was ground out to Durst, advancing the runners a base. Then "Frenchy" Lafayette cut loose with a triple to center, bringing in both runners and tying the count. Brubaker was retired to end the uprising.

SHIFT OAK LINE-UP

At the start of the Angel half of the ninth, the Oak line-up was shifted all around. Murchio went in to pitch, Guisto played first, Lafayette was moved out to left field, Cather was shifted to center and Manager Howard held down third. Wally Hood opened the inning by coaxing a walk from Murchio and was sacrificed to second by Jacobs. Then Jenkins hit a bouncer to Howard and Ivan muffed it, Joe reaching first and Hood going to third. At this juncture Howard called in "Duster" Mails to save what was left of the Oakland chances. Manager Krug sent in Whaley to bat for Cruise because the latter is not so good against southpaw pitching. Mails decided to walk Whaley, filling the bases, and take a chance on Beck hitting into a double play. Duster got the first ball wide enough, but his second effort was just close enough to the plate for Whaley to reach out and smack a safety to right, bringing in Hood with the winning run.

BUSY WEEK FOR LOCAL GOLFERS

Important Events Pile Up in Next Few Days

Open Championship Tourney Starts Tomorrow

City Title Event and Rancho Invitational Scheduled

BY CHARLES WEST

When Dick Linares, Southern California professional golf champion, and J. F. Gore tee off at the Los Angeles Country Club with Joe Martin of Virginia and Gordon C. Williams in the first foursome of the amateur-pro competition this morning they will open one of the busiest weeks ever arranged for the golfing gentry since the old Scotch game took its place with selling real estate as one of Southern California's chief occupations.

While the best amateur and professional talent in the surrounding territory is digging divots on the L.A.C.C. north course numerous aspiring Los Angeles city champions will be battling in the second round of the title tournament now in progress on the Warren G. Harding municipal links at Griffith Park. Tomorrow still another event commences when firsts rounds in the Southern California open championship are played at the Los Angeles Country Club, and coincident with the conclusion of the titular event Tuesday Rancho's annual invitation tournament opens with qualifying rounds on the Pico Boulevard lay-out to continue until Sunday, when the finals will be played.

MUCH EXCITEMENT

The open championship is naturally creating the most excitement, although competition of a more or less torrid nature is anticipated in the other events. The appearance of Abe Espinosa and Harold Sampson of San Francisco in the tournament adds a tinge of intersectional rivalry to the tournament, the south's honor being defended by about four dozen professionals and 100 amateurs with handicaps of ten or under.

Chick Fraser of Midwick, Tom Stevens of California, Mel Smith of Pasadena, Harry Pressler, Vic Owen, Joe and Hutt Martin, Dick Linares, Vic Dalberto and Paul Scott are some of the most dangerous pros, while the amateur honor will be upheld by such men as E. S. Armstrong, George Von Elm and Willie Hunter, all of whom have held the Southern California amateur championship, Clark Speirs and Jack Tarrant, in addition to numerous other low handicap players.

WILSHIRE

Johnny Hodge and A. H. Chapin, will meet today in the final round of the Wilshire Country Club's midsummer handicap tournament. Hodge is giving Chapin two strokes, and a lively battle is expected. Wagering is high among Wilshire members, and the finalists will probably have a large gallery.

In the tin whistle sweepstakes yesterday Elmer C. Henderson, U. S. C. football genius, won with 52 points, being followed by A. H. Peppall with 51. In Class B, F. C. Belcher was the victor with 42 points, and Walter K. Tuller took second honors with 36. Mixed foursomes are scheduled for this afternoon.

CALIFORNIA

President E. R. Hurst's cohorts triumphed over Vice-President A. P. Hayes's accomplices yesterday in an intraclub team match, the Hurst outfit winning by a margin of 7 points. Eighty-four golfers participated in the event, in which the players were sent away in foursomes.

G. W. Morgan won the Class A sweepstakes yesterday, 79-8-71, with W. P. Wilkinson and R. V. Jones tied for second, with net scores of 73 each.

EL CABALLERO

Perfecting its plan to construct the first golf bowl in the history of American country clubs, the board of governors of El Caballero Country Club yesterday acquired forty acres of land in the foothills adjacent to its golf course for sites for lodges to be built by life members. The new land brings the club's holdings up to 281 acres on the former estate of Edgar Rice Burroughs, author of "Tarzan of the Apes," who purchased it from the late Gen. Harrison Gray Otis.

Water color sketches of various architectural designs for the lodges have been prepared and engineers are completing plans for locating the sites on the rim of the golf bowl. Every life member of El Caballero will be given a deed to a lodge site consisting of 10,000 square feet of space. These lodges will be located in a semicircle on the hills surrounding the eighteen-hole championship golf course, affording a wonderful panoramic view of the entire links, which lie in a hollow, the topography of the land making it a natural golf bowl.

Edgar Rice Burroughs, John H. Blair, Rex B. Goodcell, L. W. Craig, Merritt H. Adamson, Marion R. Gray, William D. Howard, Harry H. Merrick, C. E. Toberman, G. R. Dexter, Alphonzo E. Bell, George R. Eastman, H. W. Lawson and B. R. Holloway are among those who will build lodges on the rim of the golf amphitheater.

VENTURA EVENT

Members of the Rotary and Lions' Clubs of Oxnard and other towns of the county are much interested in a golf tournament to be held next week open to service club members only. Already Rotarians of Oxnard and Ventura have been enjoying many games on the Ventura County Country Club links at Saticoy and this has led to the county-wide tournament. But the coming tournament will be more interesting than usual because members, whether or not they have ever played golf before, are eligible. The qualifying round will be played next Wednesday, and the regular matches will follow as the different players are drawn. The tournament will run over a period of three weeks, when the finals will be played. Following the final matches there will be a big joint meeting of all the clubs and a barbecue at the clubhouse in Saticoy.

Doctor: Are you in the habit of taking fruit in the morning?

Guzzler: I was until the cherry disappeared with the cocktail.

BACK TO MITTS FOR JACK

Dempsey Will Begin Light Training at Once; Kearns to Take Champ East in Three Weeks

Jack Kearns, regarded by many as the shrewdest of all fistic managers, and who has always looked after Champion Dempsey's interests with a practiced eye, blew into Los Angeles yesterday as gallus as the big 'un himself. Kearns was full of film news, but had little to offer in the line of an early match for Dempsey.

He stopped over in Chicago, Omaha and Denver on his way West to see the exchanges on the picture that Dempsey has been working on for some time. Among other things he had the following to say:

TO GO EAST

"Jack has still about three weeks on picture location. When he has finished, I will take him down East where he will begin a regular course of training and I will get him in the pink for the winner of the Wills-Firpo match. This bout will probably be pulled off in October, but just where, I cannot say at present. I brought back with me from the East several good sparring partners for Jack who will begin light training at once.

Of course I will have Joe Benjamin in the camp. Joe will be pointed for the winner of the Benny Leonard-Mickey Walker scrap. Believe me, Benjamin will go into the ring in tip-top condition and I want to say that when he trains faithfully he is one of the toughest boys in America to defeat in his class.

OH, YOU JOSEPH

"Don't be surprised if Benjamin trims the winner of the Leonard-Walker bout. He will enter the ring undoubtedly in the best shape of his career. I expect to remain around Los Angeles for three weeks or so—then Jack and I will hike east and, as I said before, he will be seen in action sometime in October."

HOWARD KINSEY IN FINALS

San Francisco Tennis Star Meets Tilden Today for Illinois State Championship

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

GLENCOE (Ill.) July 19.—William T. Tilden, II, of Philadelphia and Howard Kinsey of San Francisco will battle for the singles championship of Illinois. Tilden slid into the finals with a straight set victory over A. H. Chapin, Jr., of Springfield, Mass. Kinsey took three out of four sets from Bryan I. C. Norton

Doubles championship honors will be contested between Gerald Patterson and Pat O'Hara Wood of Australia and the Kinsey brothers of California who eliminated the George Lott-Axel Gravem and Bryan Norton-Wray Brown two-man teams yesterday.

Tilden played the game that made him champion of the world against Chapin. He displayed most of the strokes of which he is master with his sliced volley taking numerous points.

The match between Norton and the Coast lad was an even battle. In the first two sets the San Franciscan took the lead. In the second set Norton battered home five games straight after being three down to take the lead. Kinsey had a hard time keeping a footing on the pasty clay, and the matches were transferred to the lower court which had been shielded by a tarpaulin. His steady chop shots had the ruddy-cheeked curly haired idol chasing after impossible gets and he reached some of them, but tired toward the end and his opponent was able to drive past him.

Lott and Gravem, went out of play at the hands of the Australian Davis Cup doubles team. The local lads had their eyes with them in the second set, and placed the pellet too accurately for the invaders. In the other sets, however, the men from Australia cannonaded the Chicagoans and their stylish play at the net frequently bounced the ball beyond the backstop.

The Kinsey brothers showed the teamwork which made them national clay court champions a week ago. They shaved the backlines and ran into trouble only in their second set when Norton's chatter bothered them. Darkness had settled down before the match was finished, but a large crowd stayed to see the brilliant rallies which the Missourians showed them.

The Kinsey brothers took their doubles match with Brian Norton and Wray Brown, St. Louis team, in straight sets, 6-2, 10-8, 8-6. The superior teamwork of the national champions brought them the victory, the St. Louisans finally showing indecision as to who should take the shot. Despite this they fought like demons in the second set and deuced it. Norton's antics in the way of byplay amused the crowd, but seemed to confuse the San Francisco team, and the brothers outed and netted until the games ran up to eight-all.

Here they settled down to the best teamwork of the match, ran the set out and were at no time in great danger in the last.

Patterson and Wood had to extend their contest to four sets to eliminate George Lott and Axel Gravem of Chicago in their semi-final match. The score, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3, 6-0.

Patterson's smashing and Wood's volley combined with Wood's alacrity in finding an opening, while at the net, did most to bring victory to the Australians. Lott's overhead drives and Gravem's maneuvering shots gave them the second set, but from then on the Davis Cup team was at no time in danger.

SIMONICH GETS IN SHAPE

Easterner Works Out in North for Ring Bout With Dave Shade at Vernon, Tuesday Night

Joe Simonich, after beating Young Dudley at Oakland, Wednesday night, decided to wait over in the bay district to do his preliminary training for his Tuesday night's fight with Dave Shade in in the Vernon Coliseum. Shade is working here at the Lyceum Athletic Club and Simonich will be in today or tomorrow to taper off.

Interest in the welterweight fight is keen because it will be the Vernon patrons' first opportunity to see Shade in action against a welterweight. Dave is getting almost as much publicity in New York as he is here because of the Gotham commission's stand that he gets the winner of the Walker-Leonard battle. He is a boxer of national interest right now and Vernon fans want to see how he fights against a welterweight.

That he is boxing a welterweight of class there is no question. The Simonich record includes a draw with Shade himself, a ten-rounder at Seattle. The Montana towhead, as Simonich is called, has milled with other welter stars besides Shade and has done so well that he is getting better and not going back.

His win over Dudley proves that he is in his stride and, while Shade probably will be the favorite, the fans know he is going to meet a real test in the Butte man.

Shade is working hard because he has been promised a return shot at Bert Colima if he gets by Simonich. Colima is a middleweight but the story that went back to New York about Bert beating Dave last week has annoyed the latter much.

Matchmaker Wadhams has six other bouts that look good on paper. They are:

Danny Martin and Billy Mascott, 118 pounds.

Walter Rooney and Jimmy Lanning, 135 pounds.

Mike De Pinta and Ruby Lavine. 126 pounds.

Hank Gatton and Jimmy Banks, 158 pounds.

Toby Montoya and Billy Ryan, 118 pounds.

Jack Colburn and Ted Burch, 126 pounds.

KENNEDY COMPLETES CARD

The Hollywood American Legion's card for next Friday night was yesterday completed by Matchmaker Tom Kennedy, with lightweights mixing in five of the seven announced bouts. Dick Hoppe tackles K. O. Frankie Pitcher of Brooklyn, in the main go, at 135 pounds. Pitcher, in his first start at Hollywood several weeks ago, put up a good scrap and the fans will be glad to see him in action again Friday.

Eddie Diggins gets together with Tommy Carter, a popular boy with the Hollywood bugs, in the semi-final at 133 pounds, while Red Cole mills with Jimmy Lanning at 135 pounds in the special assignment. Nick Antonio and Rusty Russell top what looks to be a strong and well-balanced preliminary bill; Tommy Richards tackles Frankie Brown at 135 pounds; Lewis Jordan and Young Garcia mingle at 126 pounds, and Champ Munroe opens the show against Battling Ward at 128 pounds.

Shell Oil and Palms Tangle in Ball Game

What promises to be one of the hardest fought games of recent weeks will be staged at Palms this afternoon when the Palms-Culver City squad tackles the Shell Oil Company nine in the lone contest of the Independent League schedule.

The Shell aggregation is leading the loop at the present time with nine wins and only two defeats. Palms-Culver City got back into the running for the championship, defeating Belvedere Gardens, 2 to 0.

Rossi will be on the mound for the oilers this afternoon. Cecil is expected to pitch for "Shorty" Beringhole's outfit.

The other two clashes in the Independent League were postponed until later in the season so that players on the clubs would have an opportunity to attend the barbecue of the Greater Southern California Association at Sunland.

Standings of Independent League squads follow:

	W.	L.	P.c.
Shell Oil Co.	9	2	.818
Hammond Lumber Co.	8	3	.727

YALE-HARVARD TEAM WIN TENNIS MATCH

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

LONDON, July 19.—In the first provincial match of their tour the Harvard-Yale tennis team today beat the West of England team at Bristol by eight matches to one. The Britishers put up a game fight but the Americans were more aggressive and more accurate. Arnold Jones and W. W. Ingraham again created a very fine impression both excelling with their service and on volley and Ingraham made many fine returns to service on back hand.

SOUTHERN BOYS IN SEMIFINALS

Play in Title Junior Golf Tourney at Del Monte

Moser, Martin and Hensley All Advance

Championship to be Settled This Afternoon

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

DEL MONTE (Cal.) July 19.—Three of Southern California's boy stars, Allen Moser, David Martin and Leslie Hensley, and the newest contribution of San Francisco's municipal links to championship golf, Charles Helganz will fight it out tomorrow in the semifinals of the California junior championship. All four came through the first round of match play today with flying colors, exhibiting a brand of golf that stamped them as coming figures of importance in Pacific Coast golf.

Charles Helganz, who learned his golf at Lincoln Park, gave perhaps the star performance in the first round, shooting a 79 for the benefit of his opponent, Jack Reese a brilliant young player from the Sunnehanner Golf Club, Johnstown, Pa. David Martin, of the Montecito Country Club, Santa Barbara, shot an equally fine game to eliminate George Jue, the tournament hope of San Francisco Chinatown, young Jue's placid Chinese temperament was wrecked when Martin fired even 4's on the first six holes.

Allen Moser of the Wilshire Country Club, Los Angeles, one of the most finished boy golfers in the State, disposed of Edgar Linder, another San Francisco public course prodigy with perfect ease and perfect golf; while Leslie Hensley, a long hitting stripling from Long Beach, had a similarly easy time with Richard Jobrieh of the San Francisco Olympic Club. Altogether the first flight matches were of a class little short of senior championship golf.

Results of the first-round matches follow:

First flight—Allen Moser defeated Edgar T. Lindner, 6 and 4; David Martin defeated George Jue, 4 and 3; Charles Helganz defeated Jack Reese, 2 and 1; Leslie Hensley defeated Richard J. O'Brien, 5 and 4.

Second flight—Dick Richmond (1) defeated William Selkirk (0,) 1 up; Lewis Lapham (1) defeated Errol Williams (0,) 3 and 2; Justin Esbery (0) defeated Russell Pierce (2,) 8 and 4; J. D. Raontree, Jr. (1) defeated J. C. French (3,) 8 and 4.

Third flight—Drury Saunders (0) defeated Jack Morse (3,) 4 and 3; Robert Merrick (1) defeated Alfred Sparks (3,) 3 and 2; Fred Black, Jr. (1) defeated Rolin Philpot (2,) 2 and 1; John Lauritzen (0) 8 and 7.

Davis Tennis Cup Play to be Continued

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

NEW YORK, July 19.—Play for the Davis cup, emblematic of the world's team tennis championship will continue to be an annual event, according to a decision reached at a meeting of the contending nations in London early this month, it was learned today. The United States Lawn Tennis Association was represented at the meeting by Julian S. Myrick, chairman of the Davis cup committee, Watson M. Washburn, Day Kimball, and Dr. Sumner Hardy, president of the California Association. It was the sense of the meeting that the result of the deliberations should be referred for consideration to the various associations interested and that any changes adopted should have the approval of two-thirds of the nations concerned. A committee composed of Hy Monkton, Francis and Watson M. Washburn, was appointed to draft the exact wording of all alterations in the regulations which might be adopted. Among changes in regulations approved were those reinstating Austria as a cup contesting nation, adding Ireland to the list under the title of United Ireland and authorizing Great Britain to make formal application for the inclusion of Jamaica as a separate contestant.

Zbyszko Likely to Clash With Ed Lewis Next

Stanislaus Zbyszko would rather dispose of "Toots" Mondt in their bout at the Philharmonic Auditorium Wednesday night than be elected President of Poland. And that's saying a lot for "Zibby" is one of the best educated men in that land and at one time was a particularly smart lawyer there.

But the Polish mat marvel wants another crack at the crown now worn by Ed "Strangler" Lewis and inasmuch as the champion rates Mondt one of the best grapplers in the game, a win over the Colorado cowboy would put "Zibby" in position to demand a match—and get it. Lewis is said to have refused Mondt a finish match, which rather clearly indicates the champ's respect for Joe.

The other two bouts on Lou Daro's program should furnish a lot of action. Sonsa Kozak, Armenian champion, is slated to engage in a grude battle with Yussif Hussane, known far and wide as "The Terrible Turk." Kozak says he won't be so terrible, only to look at, when the match is over.

Jo Bonomo, one of Universal's handsome actors and called by some the world's most perfect strong man, goes against Emil Maupa, French title-holder, in the other bout.

CALIFORNIA WINS

In the schooner, catch, yawl and sloop race, which was spun off yesterday afternoon at 1 o'clock, starting at Balboa Pier and a run to Newport and the open sea, the winner turned up in California. The Mariposa was second, Malabar third, Parrollie fourth, Rana fifth and Dream sixth.

The Negro National League of baseball clubs is made up of Kansas City (Mo.) Monarchs, Chicago, Detroit, Birmingham, St. Louis, Cleveland, Cuban Stars and Memphis.

ATHLETES SHY ON LONG RUNS

America Needs Middle and Distance Steppers

Expert Asserts Uncle Sam Lacks Walkers

Lads Require Pepping Up in Javelin Throwing

BY WALTER ECKERSALL

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

CHICAGO, July 19.—With America the undisputed winner of the track and field competition of the Olympic games held recently in France, the event plainly indicated that more middle and long-distance runners must be developed in this country if the United States has hopes of winning this branch of the world's games in years to come.

Not only were we sadly lacking in runners who could hold their own with the best of other nations, Finland, particularly, but we are still a few steps behind the Finns in hurling the javelin. America also showed poorly in the walks, while there is room for improvement in other events.

MUST HOLD MORE

It is the general opinion of well known coaches and trainers of our college, university and athletic club teams that not enough long-distance events are held in this country to encourage those who take part in the longer runs. The colleges and the Amateur Athletic Union stage cross-country runs each year, while the marathon run is held in various sections of the country. Still not enough of such races are held to stimulate the interest necessary to develop long-distance runners.

However, there is little or no excuse for our poor showings in the middle-distance runs. Events which correspond to the metric distances of the Olympic games are held in every meet of importance. The athletes start training immediately after the holidays. Meets of importance are held indoors and outdoors. From this small army of runners it appears that more good runners should be developed.

A well-known coach of one of the leading Middle-West universities recently asserted the distance men are given too much work in meets. This mentor maintains an athlete should be developed for one race only and that he should not be compelled to run two gruelling races in the same set of games. In other words this coach believes in specialization and in a great many ways he is right.

ARE BURNED OUT

In numbers of cases, good indoor middle-distance runners have been burned out by the time the outdoor season meets take place. Instead of showing to better ability, this same athlete is relegated to the second string class and all the coach expects of him is to win points awarded for places other than first.

While the marvelous running of Nurmi and Ritola, the great Finn racers, was one of the many features of the games, general opinion is that American runners should have finished better in all the middle-distance and long-distance events. Some of our stars failed to live up to expectations and in another four years their places will be taken by younger and faster runners.

LACKING IN JAVELIN

America has never been able to hold its own with Finland in the javelin throw. The Finns have something which Yankee coaches and athletes have been unable to grasp. American coaches and close students of the event are expected to return with some first-hand information regarding the event and in another four years, we may make a better showing. This year however, America won two of the six places, a much better showing than in former Olympiads.

While this year's American team was weakened with the last-minute withdrawal of Plant and Pearman, out best walkers, this fact alone should impress upon our coaches the advisability of developing more men for the event. The contest, however, should be added to the list of events of all college and university meets according to some coaches as the event now is held only in championships of the A.A.U.

GET POINTERS

The games, however, should be of educational value to our coaches and athletes. Several well-known mentors made the trip as spectators and they are sure to come back with valuable pointers on the development of athletes for various events. This is especially true of Lawson Robertson of Pennsylvania and Walter Christie of California, head coaches of the American Olympic team. Steve Farrell of Michigan took in the games as a spectator and Steve is about one of the best observers in the game. Interchange of ideas will aid coaches of teams of various nations with the result the 1928 Olympiad would be featured by even greater performances than those which marked this year's games and those of previous years.

Leonard May Fight Walker in New York

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

NEW YORK, July 19.—Tex Rickard, promoter of the proposed Mickey Walker-Benny Leonard welterweight title match, will abandon his plans to stage the bout in New Jersey and endeavor to re-sign the principals for a decision match in New York State, according to those close to the Madison Square Garden promoter today.

In view of the attitude of the State Athletic Commission and its ultimatum to Rickard and Billy Gibson, manager of Leonard, it is said that Rickard will not attempt to stage the meeting in New Jersey, where no-decision bouts are in vogue, due to the commission's decision that those connected with the match would have their license revoked in this State.

The State board has agreed to allow Walker and Leonard to fight anywhere in the United States to a decision providing the winner signs to meet Dave Shade.

YANKEE WOMEN CAPTURE TITLE

the finals in both singles and doubles, but, paired with Mrs. Jessup, he is still in the running for the mixed doubles championship.

Richards and Mrs. Jessup this afternoon reached the semi-finals in that event by an easy victory over the Spanish couple, Eduardo Flaquer and Senorita Alvarez, 6-3, 6-1.

Richards was weary, having only a short time before finished in the men's doubles, but Mrs. Jessup more than held up her end of the fight.

The finals for the women's title between Miss Helen Wills and Mlle. Vlasto, France, is scheduled for 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon with the men's title to be decided after the two young ladies have settled their match.

The remaining championship contests—men's doubles and mixed doubles—will be contested Monday.

INTERESTING MATCH

The battle for the women's doubles championship this afternoon was intensely interesting throughout every minute, not only because of the fine tennis on both sides, but also for the changing effect it must have wrought in the hearts and upon the nerves of every partisan spectator. And there were many such spectators who eagerly watched the struggle across the net for British and American enthusiasts came out to Colombes today by the hundreds. When Miss Wills and Mrs. Wightman faced Miss McKane and Mrs. Covell the stands were crowded and it seemed as if half the spectators were English-speaking.

For the British disappointment twice followed hope and joy, their team having led the Americans at 5-2, in both first and second sets. Indeed, the British players were once within a point of taking the second set, 6-2.

On the other hand, the American spectators twice felt certain that defeat was impending and on both occasions, the splendid uphill battle waged by the two American women turned the feeling of disappointment among their compatriots into one of joy and pride.

From the start of the match to the end Miss Wills was the star player of the quartet. Her errors were few, her fine finishing shots were many.

JUDGEMENT GOOD

Throughout her judgement was good, and when she and her partner were behind and seemingly about to lose the set, it was her fighting spirit that flashed out above the solid foundation of the sound, steady tennis that Mrs. Wightman played in emergencies, to lend bright magnificence to their dogged, yet dashing battle against the British women.

Under the fury of Miss Wills's driving and Mrs. Wightman's neat back-hand shots, made in a manner all her own, from mid-court, Mrs. Covell faltered, then failed. This happened in both first and second sets, and all that Miss McKane could do would not ward off defeat.

There were several close line decisions during that match. One of them was called at a time when Mrs. Covell was serving and the British pair had but one point to win, to capture the second set.

It was a high lob which Mrs. Covell lifted deep over the Americans' court and the linesman called it out. There were cries of "No!" in both French and English from the stands, and perhaps Mrs. Covell was not only disappointed, but a bit flustered at the event. She proceeded to serve a double fault, and the score became deuce. From this point of equality, the Americans went ahead and took the game on two more errors, by Mrs. Covell. Then, they took several more games.

In the next to the last game of the match with the score 6-all and Miss Wills serving a similar long lob from her racquet, which was pronounced inside the back court line, evoked a chorus of "booes" from some of the crowd. The shouts of disapproval, however, were not made in English.

Calm and solemn as she always is on the court no matter what happens, Miss Wills awaited for the noise to subside, then went ahead with a good service and ultimately won the game, to lead at 7-6.

It is a new departure in the schools. Mr. White, who, for years was a leading pitcher on the Chicago White Sox, will give up his position at Central. He was not only athletic director there, but also took an active interest in the coaching of the teams and developed several champion combinations. Five high schools will be under his direction.

Special Prize Awarded to the Best Pitcher

California State Fair Opens on August 30

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SACRAMENTO, July 19.—Horseshoe pitchers from all parts of the State are preparing for the biggest sporting event in their line when the seventieth annual California State Fair opens here August 30 for eight days, including in the list of attractions a special purse of $1000 for a State Fair horseshoe pitching championship. Secretary Charles W. Paine has announced the event, and already the names of followers of the ancient game of "barnyard golf" are beginning to appear on the entry sheet.

Last year a minor tournament was held at the State fair in which teams from Long Beach, Oakland, San Francisco, Stockton and Sacramento entered. Gov. Friend W. Richardson, an enthusiastic fan, was one of the participants. The interest shown in this event has led Paine to believe that such a tournament will prove a big drawing card, especially with a valuable purse hung up as an inducement.

Details of the tournament are now being worked out by Paine, members of the Sacramento Horseshoe Pitching Club and others from various sections of the State.

Although teams are expected to enter the tournament, the plan being favored is to have only singles competition in order to devote play to a State fair championship. In view of the large prize being offered the first money is expected to amount to $400 or $500, in addition to the title of State fair champion.

Secretary Paine has issued an invitation to followers of the sport to get in communication with him for further details and the listing of names for the big event.

CLARKE SEEN AS KING SHEIK

Love Physician Declared Obsessed With Notion He Could Dominate Any Female Intellect

The obsession, amounting to a highly developed mania, that he is capable of dominating any female intellect with which he comes in contact, police believe, is behind activities of John Bertrum Clarke, author, minister of the Church of Cosmic Truth, and known as "The Man of a Thousand Loves," who is held by police on a statutory charge while a maze of fantastic love and business affairs is being investigated.

Virtually every woman questioned in connection with the career of the love physician has the same tale of attempted domination to tell. With one Clarke essayed his black magic for the purpose of obtaining money; with another it was for the purpose of satisfying his physical appetite. All who came in contact in a business, religious or social way with the man were subjected to the mesmeric eye and enveloped, so Clarke is believed to have imagined, by his dominating personality.

Clarke lost little time in pressing his attentions on his victims once a contact was established. Where another man would approach with a semblance of diplomacy, Clarke rushed in, believing his powerful mental force needed little assistance in handling any woman. This robbed the man of all diplomacy and, apparently, of all fear of consequences.

No woman was immune from the attempt at domination. Among the victims marked by Clarke was a 14-year-old girl and a white-haired woman of 60.

FOLLOWED ONE LINE

In almost all of the cases so far uncovered by investigators, the love doctor followed the same general line. He immediately discerned great talen in the victim, keen psychic qualities and wonderful temperament. He spoke of motion pictures and of literary success with a lightness which was designed to give his listeners the impression that he had but to speak and their every wish in these directions would be gratified.

The subject of India was introduced always. Clarke spoke of the high esteem with which he was held by the occult leaders in India and of the power and wealth awaiting him there when he had found his proper mate. The mate, Clarke stressed as essential to his own success in the world of occult. Elephants, diamonds, silks, palaces and servants figured prominently in his tales.

On many occasions Clarke declared women to be inferior to men and said they were created for the pleasure of man. No woman, he held, could possibly dominate any man.

Another weird topic of discussion in high favor with the author-minister was that concerning the symbolism of animals. In this connection he maintained that all power emanates from animals; that eventually we will discover that "dog" is "god" because the spelling backward and forward is the same and that animals recognize and pay tribute to such power as Clarke himself possessed.

CITES FANTASTIC CASES

In substantiation of his fantastic utterances, the love physician cited equally fantastic cases. One of these pictured a sea gull flying about his head in acknowledgement of Clarke's power, while another pictured a duck emerging from a pond in one of the local parks to carry sticks which it dropped at his feet in tribute.

Clarke asserts he predicted earthquakes and the rejection of the League of Nations; that he warned President Harding not to come to the Pacific Coast and that he told President Coolidge his son would die. He wrote a bizarre message to President Wilson advising him to recall immediately the ship which was carrying more than 200 alien anarchists back to Europe. In President Wilson's name Clarke saw evil, and he comments on this in his book "The Chart of the Mind."

Much of the conversation carried on by Clarke with his victims was through the use of pencil and pad. Hundreds of these scraps of paper were preserved and filed by Clarke. The name of every woman with whom the man came in contact in any manner was filed with address, telephone number and data concerning her. Every letter received by him in the past four years appears to have been relegated to these files and the copies of many letters written by him are found.

To this penchant for preserving every scrap of paper is attributed the fact that so much of Clarke's career has been disclosed to the authorities in so short a time.

DENVER PUT SEER IN PRISON

Clarke, Under Alias of Cashmere, Mulcted Widows and Girls of Savings; Got Seven to Ten Years

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

DENVER (Colo.) July 19.—John Bertrum Clarke, alias J. Howard Cashmere, was leader of a strange love cult, whose high-priced services as a seer in Denver fourteen years ago gained for him a sentence of seven to ten years in the Colorado penitentiary on charges of obtaining money through a confidence game.

In 1914, four years after Clarke entered the Colorado Penitentiary to begin serving his sentence, he made plans for clairvoyants to start a thought wave to think him out of prison. Sometime the next month Clarke and those who were to take part in the State convention of Clairvoyants said a steady and long continued thought wave was to spread all over the mountains and plains of Colorado, causing a great psychological disturbance and sudden elevation of mental barometers. In that way the seers proposed to think Clarke out of the penitentiary.

MULCTED POOR WOMEN

But Clarke, who had mulcted poor Denver widows, servant girls and other women out of their life savings, getting away with more than $30,000, remained behind the bars to complete his sentence, despite the concentrated thought wave in his behalf.

In order to work his swindle Clarke, working under the name of Cashmere during his Denver manipulations, operated as president of the Psychic Science Company and the Balance Publishing Company. He leased a new three-story building at 1817-19 California street, erected for him at a cost of $50,000.

His method of operation was to interest people in the New Thought ideas through advertisements in which he offered the use of his reading rooms to all interested in New Thought. When they visited the rooms he carefully ascertained the amount of money they possessed and then, to insure their return, loaned them, very appropriately, as a great privilege, a book entitled "Lost in the Bottomless Pit," written by himself.

Clarke organized the Psychic Science Company February 8, 1909, incorporating it "to invest, demonstrate and teach the principles, truths, science and phenomenon of spiritualism." Among other things, he claimed the powers to ordain ministers, grant rights to carry on his teachings, perform marriage ceremonies, officiate at funerals and numerous other powers.

Soon after the organization of the Cashmere Society city authorities sought to prevent him from leasing the building at 1817 California street for his psychic company and Clarke countered with a suit for $50,000 damages, also seeking to force the city officials to let his business alone. He said his body did not come under the class of astrologers, clairvoyants and the like, such as had to have licenses.

On March 12, 1910, Clarke was sentenced to the penitentiary for seven to ten years following his conviction on five charges of grand larceny and working a confidence game.

DENIES SHE IS WIFE

Mrs. Carrie Clark, formerly of 3627 High street, when seen at her present address, 4541 Fillmore street, today denied she ever knew John Bertrum Clarke. She says she is the widow of Dr. Amos A. Clark, a former Denver physician, who died here in 1909. She says she was married to Clark in Belleville, Ill., and resided with him in Denver for many years until his death.

She has one son, Amos, by that marriage. Dr. Clark had two children by a former marriage.

At the time of Clark's death a note was found in his office requesting that in case of his death a post mortem examination be made for poison. An examination was made but no trace of poisoning was found.

Since her husband's death Mrs. Clark has lived in Los Angeles, she admits, but she declares she left Los Angeles about two and a half years ago and has been living until a few months ago in Belleville, Ill.

She is about 50 years of age and is said to be a fortune teller.

INTERESTED IN CASE

While she stoutly denied any acquaintance with John Bertrum Clarke, she appeared to be interested in the reports of his arrest and inquired if he needed any help. She expressed the opinion also that he had done nothing wrong in issuing marriage licenses. When pressed, however, to admit that she knew the man or ever was married to him she repeated her denials.

Her claim to be the widow of Dr. Clark has been substantiated by investigation of her statements in that connection.

seen until it was showed to him by a Times reporter.

"If I had read that trashy letter," Hart stated, "it had never been answered.

In his cell at the City Jail Clarke showed little uneasiness as to his fate. He talks willingly, to newspaper men and appears as grotesquely jaunty as ever.

Whether Clarke realizes that Miss Duncan was instrumental in bringing about his arrest, he displays no animosity toward the girl, police say. Yesterday he declared that she is still his wife.

So cleverly were the plans for capturing Clarke engineered by Detective Lieutenants Berenseig and Hoskins, and so smoothly carried through by Miss Duncan that it is certain Clarke was completely deceived as to the identity of the girl operative for at least a number of hours after his arrest Wednesday night.

S. G. MARSHUTZ BACK FROM EASTERN TRIP

S. G. Marshutz of the Marshutz Optical Company and his wife returned yesterday from a six weeks' pleasure and business trip to the East and Northwest. While in Detroit Mr. and Mrs. Marshtuz attended the wedding of their son, Dr. Herbert S. Marshutz. The newlyweds will make Los Angeles their home on their return from their honeymoon.

Woman May Die of Poison Taken in Suicide Plan

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

VENICE, July 19.—With little hope held out for her recovery, Mrs. Ruby Murphy, 35 years of age, mother of three children, was taken to St. Catherine's Hospital after her attempt to commit suicide by drinking poison tonight.

Mrs. Murphy drank the poison in her room at 309 Center street. Neighbors broke into her room and found her lying on the bed writhing with pain, after their attention had been attracted by her groaning. The woman had written no note and no reason was advanced for her act.

WOMAN GETS FIFTY DAYS

Following her conviction in a justice court some time ago on a charge of possession of liquor, Pauline Coolbaugh, living on the Ridge Route near the county line, was found guilty of manufacturing the same liquor by a jury in Superior Judge Collier's court yesterday. The court sentenced her to fifty days in the County Jail. The woman was arrested three months ago by "dry" raiders from the District Attorney's office, under George Contreras.

EASTERN MEN VISIT PARKS

Kansas City Promoter to Sell Ranch Homes

Tulare County Dairies Show Financial Gain

VISALIA, July 19.—The personnel of an eastern party now traveling over the Southern California Edison Company development into Kings River Canyon and back through Giant Forest, Sequoia National Park, is indicative of the sort of advertising the national parks and great power development bring into this section of the State.

This party was met a few days ago in Fresno by R. I. Carruthers, district manager of the Edison Company, who started them on their expedition into the hills. Stephen T. Mather, director of national parks, was responsible for the coming of the easterners to this section and is one of many such parties directed West by him.

Included in the expedition are James Simpson of Chicago, president of the Marshal Field Company and director of the Federal Reserve Bank and director of the N. W. Harris Investment Company, one of the largest firms of investment bankers in the world; James H. Harper of Chicago, brother of Dr. Harper, formerly president of the University of Chicago, and six boys, ranging in ages from 15 to 19 years. They are: Jack, James and Billie Simpson; Watson Armour, Jr.; Fred H. Scott, Jr., and Stewart Harvey, son of the late Fred Harvey, Santa Fe hotel man.

The travelers will come out of the mountains into Visalia on August 5.

PLANS RANCH HOMES

PIXLEY, July 19.—Subdivision and improvement of about 1200 acres near here is under way in a colonization project being promoted and financed by R. E. Lynds of Kansas City, Mo., who announces purchase of the property known as Summer Homes tract and states that he will soon begin leveling of the land in preparation for installation of an extensive irrigation system.

Lynds will plant the entire tract to alfalfa and subdivide it into small ranches of twenty acres each. His plans call for sale of ranches to fifty or sixty families in the immediate vicinity of his home town, Kansas City, which means that the colony will be peopled by newcomers.

Following leveling of the tract and planting of alfalfa as many wells as needed will be sunk, according to Lynds. There are now four wells on the property. Grading will start at once.

DAIRY BUSINESS GOOD

TULARE, July 19.—Sufficient increase in prices to overcome slight seasonal decline in production gave a gain of $19,280.44 in the combined June payroll of local dairy concerns over the May report. The June pay roll was $263,645.30 as against $244,364.86 for May. Last June the pay roll was $242,838.90. The rise this season, despite the fact that prices were several cents higher last June, shows a greater production for the district and indicates that dairying is rapidly approaching normal, according to local belief.

Cream and milk prices showed a favorable advance of about 4 cents during the month June churning cream bringing 42 cents and 43½ cents as against 38 and 39 cents for May. Sweet cream brought 47 and 47½ cents as compared with 42 and 43 cents in May. June whole milk brought 54 cents as compared to 45 and 46 cents in May, while Grade A milk brought 53 cents and Grade B milk brought 50 cents in June.

Concerns included in this report are the Los Angeles Creamery, Dairymen's Creamery, Alfred Ice Cream Company at Tipton, Paige Creamery, Peacock Ice Cream Company and the Lucerne Station.

PRISON BARS NO LOVE BAN FOR CLARKE

Man Who Had Seer Under Eye in Convict Camp Says Women Idolized Him

Fate was always kind to "Rev." John Bertrum Clarke when it came to women. Even in the Colorado State penitentiary, where he spent seven years of his life, the self-marrying mystic minister was not allowed to merge himself with the spirituals only, for the fair sex came as close to him as the law would permit.

That is the story told Captain of Police Plummer yesterday by A. R. Jameson of 1716 West Adams street, who was in charge of the prison road camp at the time Clarke was a prisoner in the penitentiary.

It may have been a mere coincidence that a woman called to see Clarke the day before he tried to escape from the camp. The corpulent Romeo had been sentenced to serve from seven to ten years in prison on the charges of obtaining money under false pretenses, grand larceny and confidence game—as usual women were involved in the case—and after serving some time was made secretary to the road gang's boss. Clarke was taken to the institution June 7, 1910. The mysterious woman called on him October 9, 1910. The next day Clarke tried to escape but Jameson, whose suspicions were aroused by the visit, followed Clarke and took him back to jail.

Nevertheless, when Clarke was taken back to Denver from the prison, no less than twenty-five women, of all shapes and ages, flocked along the route of his journey and gave him flowers, sympathy and occult messages.

"After he settled down to prison life, Clarke bragged to me about his affairs with women," Jameson told Capt. Plummer yesterday. "He used to tell us there how he worked and how easy women always were for him. He said he could raise $500,000 in Denver if he was let alone. He also told us how he cleaned up at the World's Fair in St. Louis, where he had a fortune-telling concession."

YACHTS START OFF IN RACE ON LAKE

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

CHICAGO, July 19.—As darkness settled over Lake Michigan tonight, twenty-two yachts swept to the northward with a stiff southeasterly wind filling their sails in the start of the nineteenth annual Chicago Yacht Club race to Mackinac Island, the largest fleet ever to start on the longest fresh-water race in the world.

Judging from previous races, the winner probably will reach Mackinac within forty or fifty hours, depending upon weather conditions tomorrow. The yachts Kayoshk II, Sari, Jack Park II and Intrepid appear to have the most likely chance to capture the prize. The Milwaukee sloop Borrello is figured to be a dangerous contender, providing the wind shifts to the northwest.

HONORS OF WAR FOR ENGINEERS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SAN ANTONIO (Tex.) July 19. Battle streamers awarded the Second Engineers by the War Department will be presented to the regiment here during review of the Second Division by Brig.-Gen. Hugh A. Drum on the 23rd inst. Presentation will be made by Brig.-Gen. Preston P. Brown, division and post commander.

The Second Engineers first existed as two companies during the Civil War, participating in the battles of the Peninsula campaign, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. They fought in the Virginia campaign in 1863, and in the Battle of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Petersburg and Appomatox.

During the Spanish-American War the Second Engineers fought at Santiago.

On July 1, 1916, the present regiment was formed as the Second Engineers on Mexican soil from the Second Battalion of Engineers, and has the distinction of being the only regiment in the Army organized on foreign soil.

As a part of the Second Division, the Second Engineers went to France and engaged in the battles of Lorrain, Picardy, Aisne, Montdidier-Noyes, Isle de France, Aisne-Marne, St. Mihiel and the Meuse-Argonne.

AIR STUDENTS TRAIN

Approximately 106 students, including thirteen R.O.T.C. students, are being given ground instruction at the Primary Flying School at Brooks Field here. There are ten instructors now at the field. The course at the primary school lasts for six months and every student is drilled in the various forms of flying, observation work, photo work, machine gunning and bombing, airplane engines, the construction of the plane and the piloting of the ship. After completion of this course the students are transferred to the Advanced Flying School at Kelly Field, where they are instructed in flying the plane, handling and care of the ship.

Of the 175 students entering the school each six-month period about half of them graduate into the advanced school, figures at Brooks Field show. The others who fail to make their grades are transferred to other branches of the service.

PLANES OVERHAULED

An average of one plane each day, seven days each week, is being overhauled and thoroughly reconditioned at the San Antonio Air Intermediate Depot, Lieut. E. M. Powers, engineer officer of Kelly Field, No. 1, asserted yesterday.

Each plane in the air service must be overhauled and repaired after 200 hours of flying. After rebuilding, the planes are subjected to a test of several hours before again being turned over to the flying fields in the Eighth Corps Area. The planes go to Brooks Field, Kelly Field, Fort Clark, Fort Brown, Fort Bliss and Fort Sill, and to the National Guard units of the air service.

FLYERS AID AT FIRE

While giving instructions to a cadet at Brooks Field Monday, Lieut. John D. Corkille, flying a Curtiss "Jenny," discovered the home of a Mexican on fire near the field. Making a quick landing Lieut. Corkille and the cadet made an unsuccessful effort to put out the blaze before the home was destroyed. A small boy was seen leaving the home as the plane landed. The doors to the house were locked and the interior of the home was ablaze before the flyers succeeded in breaking through the heavy doors.

ST. LOUIS, July 19.—"Any old clothes to sell?" asked a man who called at the home of Mrs. Anna McFarlan, 4228 Clarence avenue. Mrs. McFarlan invited him in and had her husband telephone for the police. When the police arrived, Mrs. McFarlan told them the man had called at her home on May 29 last, and obtained two suits for $3 on representations that McFarlan had sent him. She said the suits were worth much more than $3 and that she and her husband had been on the lookout for the man ever since.

NATION'S CRIME COST STAGGERS

Annual Burden Estimated at $10,000,000,000

From 14 to 16 Per Cent of Country's Income

One in Every Hundred Said to be Criminal

BY FREDERICK J. HASKIN

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Criminals and the crimes they commit cost the people of the United States at least $10,000,000,000 annually. This is from 14 to 16 per cent of the total national income and about three times as much as Congress appropriates each year to defray the expenses of running the government.

Since only 1 per cent of the population is criminal, according to the experts, this means that every criminal costs society on an average of $10,000 annually. This estimate is based on evidence that there is an army of at least 1,000,000 men and women constantly at war with the forces of law and order. Approximately one-fifth of that number are in jail, prison or reformatory all the time.

None of the items of this enormous crime budget is definitely ascertainable, but the experts have sound bases upon which to figure. In the first place, from close scrutiny of national, State and municipal expenditures they learn that the detection, prosecution, punishment and prevention of crime cost taxpayers from $3,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 annually. This includes the expenses of maintaining police systems, courts, jails, prisons, penitentiaries, reformatories and other institutions for the care of defectives and delinquents.

ALL KINDS OF GRAFT

The toll which the criminals take from society by one form of theft or another is estimated at another $3,500,000,000. The largest item in this is the loss through speculative enterprises essentially dishonest in character—fraudulent stocks and bonds, bucket-shop operations, land swindles and other confidence games. It is variously estimated at from $2,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000.

Burglary losses total $525,000,000 and embezzlements $125,000,000. Forgeries and worthless checks that are cashed by merchants aggregate $200,000,000, bad debts are placed at $150,000,000 and the losses due to fraudulent bankruptcies and dishonest business failures are estimated at $400,000,000. Political graft of various kinds, including land-grabbing and exploiting of public resources, is lumped at $200,000,000.

ILLICIT LIQUOR TRAFFIC

When it comes to computing the loss due to violations of the prohibition amendment and enforcement laws real experts are so conservative that they will not deal in figures. They merely point out that the yearly consumption of illicit liquor runs from 50,000,000 to 100,000,000 gallons, and possibly more than the latter estimate, and let the average citizen do his own figuring based on his personal knowledge of what the bootleggers charge for their wares. Then they tell you to add to that what the efforts to enforce the law and to punish violators cost, and to complete your computation with your best guess as to the indirect cost to society of violations of the prohibition law.

The last item in the crime budget is the loss to the social organization due to the fact that at least 1,000,000 people are not usefully employed or engaged in undertakings that contribute to the general welfare. If each individual be rated as having an annual productive value of $1500 it is seen that this item runs to another $1,500,000,000.

There is still another item that might be included in the budget but experts agree that it is entirely too indefinite to be even estimated—the loss occasioned by crimes that are never discovered. Police authorities know only too well that society has many birds of prey whose wings are never clipped and whose depredations are never known. Profiteering that is dishonest, measured by any just standards of ethics, but is not criminal in the eyes of the law, might be included under this heading.

Criminal statistics show that until recent years there has always been a great preponderance of male over female criminality. In fact, in most civilized countries there were from four to six times as many male criminals as female. However, it is also shown that as woman gains a greater degree of economic independence her criminality is increasing.

Many factors have an influence upon crime and it may surprise the laymen to know that climate, season and weather are among those factors. An analysis of criminal data shows, for example, that as a general thing crimes against the person increase with a rise in temperature, while crimes against property, on the contrary, usually decrease with a warmer temperature and increase as the temperature falls. Economic activities are determined to a large extent by climatic and seasonal conditions, and these activities in turn determined wage rates and the extent of unemployment. Since life with masses is largely a struggle for existence, scruples are forgotten and crime becomes more frequent as the struggle becomes more difficult.

From two to three-fifths of the total number of crimes are so-called economic crimes, or crimes in which the economic factors predominate, and these economic factors have much to do with causing other crimes. For instance, a man is hungry and out of work. He undertakes a burglary and while in the act is caught and commits a murder in his effort to escape.

POLITICAL INFLUENCE

It is also to be noted that by far the largest number of criminals come from the poorer classes and from the occupations of the poorer classes. Even in the case of professional criminals it is found that economic pressure early in life in the form of a struggle for existence or for a higher standard of living usually has been responsible for their first crimes. Bad associations and perverted mentality may lead them to repetitions of the offences, but as a rule on society by actual physical needs.

Political conditions are also known to have a far-reaching effect upon crime. Inefficient and corrupt government are invariably marked by a sharp increase in crime, for it seems that many men think that if officials betray the public trust it is a case of every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost.

In other words, respect for the law is decidedly conditioned upon respect for the administrators of the law.

Essentials to Remember When You Plant a Garden

First
Your garden need not be large to be attractive, practical and inviting. In fact, the small garden that is carefully planned and planted is just as beautiful as the large estate.

Second
The proper preparation of soil and careful selection of fertilizers, as well as skillful planting, are essentials to be considered when starting a garden.

Third
It is not the quantity of trees, shrubs, plants or seeds that makes the garden charming. The careful selection of varieties adapted to the particular locations which are to be beautified is the key to success in gardening.

Fourth
In every field of endeavor there is one dominant figure; an organization that gives careful attention to the details as well as to the big things in their particular line.

SOUTHERN-PINE TRADE SHOWS HUGE INCREASE

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—A marked increase in new business received by southern-pine manufacturers is indicated by the barometer issued by the Southern Pine Association for the week ending the 11th inst. The amount of orders placed per mill averaged 653,566 feet, or 2 per cent above normal production. Not since the week of January 18, last, has such a volume of business been reported. For that week the average amount of orders received per mill was 801,502 feet, or 26 per cent above normal production, but this represented only a spurt in business which took place during the few weeks following the Christmas holidays, and was not maintained.

Tree That Sheltered Cortez

What is known as the Cortez tree which is said to have sheltered Cortez 400 years ago, recently ended its existence and has been taken down. The pieces are being carefully guarded and it is possible that the trunk will be placed in a Mexican museum. It was also known as "The Tree of the Woeful Night" and it is said that he rested under it when he had been driven from the Aztec capital.

REPAREDNESS FIRST NEED IN FOREST FIRE FIGHTING

ategy in Battling Flames Plays art as Vital as Though Blazing Enemy Was Human Army

BY CHESTER G. HANSON

[illegible] do they actually fight a brush or so-called forest fire [illegible] Angeles county? "Well, lady," a tired and grimy fire [illegible] explained to a mincing young touristette out in Pine [illegible] the other day, "you prays and you works—mostly you [illegible] 'cause the good Lord don't seem to savvy the prayers of [illegible] fightin' crew judgin' from the way the wind blows this fire [illegible] mountain to another."

[illegible] if that fire fighter had not [illegible] tired he might have told [illegible] interesting story. It goes [illegible] months of preparations on [illegible] of both the county and [illegible] forestry services, the [illegible] of an organization of men [illegible] equipment and tactics that [illegible] result of years of experi- [illegible] fighting fires in mountain [illegible]

[illegible] with, using the organi- [illegible] up by County Forester [illegible] and his men as an ex- [illegible] you will find the king pin [illegible] fire-fighting organization in [illegible] of a big warehouse at [illegible] not far from San Fernan- [illegible]. This is the building [illegible] forestry department de- [illegible] and built itself.

[illegible] FOR ARMY

[illegible] are stored equipment, tools [illegible] enough to equip a small [illegible], send them on the fire [illegible] the very heart of the [illegible] country and feed them [illegible] they are there. The tools [illegible]—for there is no [illegible] instrument known [illegible] a brush fire than the [illegible]—axes, mattocks, fire [illegible] and the like. Per- [illegible] not generally known that, [illegible] conditions, the ordi- [illegible] that squirts acid [illegible] when you turn it up- [illegible] is extensively used in [illegible] brush fire.

[illegible] to the main ware- [illegible] the county has fire tool [illegible] located at strategic points [illegible] the county where the [illegible] Warden can quickly [illegible] or twenty men with [illegible] tools for a small local [illegible]

[illegible] comes into the offices on [illegible] floor of the Hall of Rec- [illegible] a fire has broken out in [illegible], it may be reported by the lookout in the tower on top of Oat Mountain, located halfway between Newhall and Chatsworth. Incidentally a man is stationed there day and night during the dry and dangerous summer months. Flintham and his assistants immediately spot the fire on the map and, because they are all men who know every inch of the county, they immediately realize just what the hazard is and just what to expect.

CONCENTRATE AT FIRE

Plans are laid accordingly. Fire wardens and crew leaders, some of them working under civil service out of the main office and others being local ranchers "on call," are ordered to concentrate at the scene of the fire.

The wheels begin to move. A couple of trucks are hurried to the Plaza under the direction of one of the assistant foresters. To the crowd of Mexican laborers and whites, the situation is explained thus: "Fire. Maybe two, three days work. Thirty-five cents an hour, travel time included." One man comes up. Another. Soon a truckload has volunteered. If they don't volunteer, which is seldom, the huskiest are drafted.

Arriving at the scene of the fire, a truck loaded with shovels, food, canteens, water cans and other equipment is found to have beaten them there. Flintham and one or two of his assistants have also sped to the fire in their fast cars. The local fire warden is on the ground. A conference has been held. The lines of the fire have been delineated. The various factors have been considered—the direction of the wind, the chances of its shifting, the topography of the country. These things first are considered. The men directing the fire know then just about what that fire is going to do and what's the best way of attacking it. There is no rushing in blindly, flaying about and wearing the men out with useless toil.

They decide to attack from the

AUTOS AID POWER CUT

of Humble Ford Connected to Motor Supplies Current for Lights at Little Cost

[illegible] Limos, decadent Cads, retired Buicks, cast-off Packards [illegible] of the automobile bone yard have been drafted into [illegible] may be the means of saving Southern California from [illegible] disaster following in the wake of power shortage caused [illegible] of the last three years.

[illegible] in an auto- [illegible] room on Central [illegible] engine of a humble [illegible] connected to an ordi- [illegible] electric mo- [illegible] current enough [illegible] 100-watt lamps at [illegible] 1 to 5 cents a kilo- [illegible] more than making [illegible] per cent saving of elec- [illegible] asked by the power [illegible] and is keeping the [illegible] sign of the au- [illegible] burning brightly [illegible] expense.

[illegible] of generating cur- [illegible] motor is known to all [illegible], but apparently has [illegible] of practical use until [illegible] of this one plant [illegible] attention to the ease [illegible] it is accomplished.

[illegible] SUGGESTION

[illegible] of a practical plan [illegible] by engineers [illegible] California Edison [illegible] and was accomplished by [illegible] of the Los Angeles Elec- [illegible] and Dealers' As- [illegible] under the direction of [illegible] safety engineer of [illegible]. Mr. Smith, who [illegible] assistant chief in- [illegible] the Los Angeles city [illegible], is satisfied [illegible] will serve all the [illegible] of ranchers and [illegible]

[illegible] became apparent that [illegible] shortage was upon [illegible] Mr. Smith yesterday, [illegible] rush to buy gas en- [illegible] electrical generators, [illegible] that in a few days [illegible] exhausted and no [illegible] were possible for [illegible] ninety days. The [illegible] is an emergency [illegible] to be met with ma- [illegible]. This is what prompted us to put into practice a well-known but little-used theory."

Reduced to terms understood by the layman, Mr. Smith's plan is to connect an automobile engine to the armature of an ordinary electric motor, plenty of which are on the market, so as to increase the speed about 2 per cent. The motor used in the experiment ran under its own power 870 revolutions a minute; by the aid of the engine it was increased to 890 revolutions.

METHOD OF OPERATION

Into the field of the motor ordinary light lines, 220 volts of the power company were connected. By starting the engine and then opening the switch the motor is converted into an induction generator, receiving its exciting current from the power company's line. When the plant is in operation it will feed back an amount of electrical energy equal to the horsepower of the motor. On this basis a ten-horsepower motor will furnish one-fourth the necessary current to operate a forty-horsepower pumping plant, and make good the 25 per cent reduction in consumption asked by the power companies.

According to Mr. Smith, the outfit can be installed for approximately $500, with about $250 resale value to the machinery after the power shortage has passed. Operation of the plant will cost just the same as is paid for current by the largest users, and perhaps instead of adding to the cost of pumping it will show a small reduction.

"It is not claimed," Mr. Smith added, "that this arrangement is intended to furnish all the power needed by any rancher or manufacturer, but simply as an aid to the power companies, a sort of booster rather than a generator."

WIFE SAYS RIVAL TOOK MATE AWAY

Asserts Laundry Head Was All Right Until 'Miss Baker' Lured Him from Her

Robert L. White, president of the Paramount Laundry Company, was a reasonably attentive husband—when "Miss Baker" of Long Beach was out of town; but when Miss Baker was in the city, it was different, according to a suit for separate maintenance filed yesterday by Mrs. Minnie White.

Last spring, Mrs. White declared, her husband made the acquaintance of Miss Baker. Thereafter his wife saw little of him, according to the complaint. She reproached him and rebuked him, without avail, until finally in May he promised to reform and did begin to comport himself in a manner fairly satisfactory for several weeks, she declared.

Then she found out that Miss Baker had left the city temporarily. Early this month she returned, and so did White's night-ranging habits, his wife asserted.

Mrs. White said she called on Miss Baker in the Dennie Apartments, Long Beach, to remonstrate and that Miss Baker made strenuous denial of any association with White. The edge was was taken off this rebuttal, however, by the inadvertent arrival of White himself in the apartment just at that time, according to her story.

Mrs. White said White invited her to obtain a divorce, but she asks only for separate maintenance.

ARREST CONTRACTOR

Police Act in Wage Collection When State Bureau Fails

For his refusal to pay $828.67 in wages seven of his workmen declared he owed, police yesterday arrested M. H. Farnsworth, a building contractor, who is said to operate the California Baby Bungalows. The claims were filed originally with the State Department of Labor, which was unsuccessful in collecting the money.

Frank Kreidler, one of the contractor's workmen, who claims $171 in unpaid wages, signed the complaint against Farnsworth. It is asserted by several of the workmen that Farnsworth gave them checks which could not be cashed at the bank.

The contractor probably will be arraigned tomorrow.

SAN DIEGO CLAIMS WATER SUPPLY FOR THREE YEARS

Rainless Period Would Find County Prepared, Say Men Now Out to Vote Bonds for Dam

BY HOWARD C. KEGLEY

If not a drop of rain should fall in San Diego county during the next three years, there still would be enough water there, San Diego citizens say, to supply the requirements of San Diego, Coronado Island and all the smaller communities in the county. San Diegans are at this moment engaged in a campaign for bonds with which to erect another water-impounding dam which, it is asserted, would virtually double the present storing capacity of the San Diego water system.

So far as mean annual rainfall is concerned, San Diego county is worse off than several other counties in the State, but in water supply, developed by the construction of impounding dams, the county and city are believed to lead the entire State. San Diego city has developed the major portion of the existing reserve water supply in San Diego county but private interests have not been far behind in the development of projects which are already changing thousands upon thousands of acres of sagebrushy land into fertile ranches and vineyards.

MOST FROM LEAST

The water development of the county is an outstanding example of making the most from the least. Scattered here and there the length and breadth of the county are at least a dozen dams and reservoirs which are catching all the storm water that runs from the great watersheds. Over a period of about ten years the city of San Diego has spent $12,500,000 in the development of an impounding reservoir system which now, at low stage, contains 36,000,000 gallons of crystal-pure water. It is now advancing a plan by which the storage capacity could be virtually doubled at a cost of approximately $4,000,000.

From a vantage point on the high hills fifty miles east of San Diego one may look down over a far-flung panorama dotted here and there with gleaming mirrors, shimmering in the noonday sun. These are the immense natural reservoirs which the people of that wondrous county are constructing as insurance against a succession of years during which moisture conditions might be subnormal.

The dams are, in many instances, earth and rock fills, with sufficient reinforcement to render them safe. In the case of San Diego's city water supply the system consists of three large reservoirs and one small one. These catch-basins were created by blockading the throats of small valleys and forcing storm water to back up into scores of canyons, where great artificial lakes have been formed.

BOTTLING WATERS

Forty miles east of San Diego, Morena reservoir sprawls lazily in the sun, bottling up such flood waters as have raced down Cottonwood Creek since 1910, or thereabouts, when the Spreckels interests built the earth and rock fill to provide the city with an adequate supply of water for domestic purposes.

This reservoir has a drainage area of 119 miles of hilly and mountainous country. The storage water is drawn off through tunnels in the fill, at an elevation of 2900 feet, and permitted to flow by gravity down to Barrett reservoir on Pine Creek, where it is again caught and held back as a reserve supply, this time in a reservoir created by a concrete dam.

This reservoir has a drainage area of 130 square miles. The water flows down by gravity from an elevation of 1300 feet to Lower Otay Reservoir, which drains eighty-six square miles and acts as a catch basin for Morena and Barrett reservoirs. Upper Otay Reservoir, which lies just to the north, drains twelve square miles and its water flows from an ele-

JAG CURES THRIVE DESPITE VOLSTEAD

Keeley Institute Reports Trade Doubled

Graduates of the Keeley Institute will be pleased to know that their alma mater is doing as well as could be expected.

Graduates of the Neal Institute will but faintly give their college yell after hearing the sad news.

Whether prohibition has increased or decreased the demand for so-called jag cures is the question before the house. From local sources it cannot be answered, and the wets and drys will have to fight it out on some other battle ground. But the status of institutions treating the inebriates, in plain English called drunks, is interesting and curious.

BUSINESS DOUBLED

Taking Los Angeles alone, this fact is clear: Before prohibition there were two private institutions (that is not counting Patton) treating the drink habit, the Keeley and the Neal institutes. Today there are precisely the same. The Keeley Institute professes to be doing twice as much business as before the war; the Neal Institute, like most other such in the country, was put out of business by prohibition, but its manager, G. U. Neal, son of the founder of the system, recently has revived the local branch.

The graduates of these two rival

MAIL DRIVER OF '49 DAYS DIES IN EAST

Irvin Pile Probably Last of Early Day Stage Coach Pilots; Relatives Here

News has just been received of the death of Irvin Graft Pile, who in the early '50s drove a mail pack-train through Los Angeles on the emergency route from San Pedro to Salt Lake City. He died at the age of 93 years and was probably the last of that generation of early stage drivers. His relatives in Los Angeles are Mrs. Cora Sisco, niece; A. M. Row, nephew, and Harry and Frank Chorpenning, grand-nephews.

Mr. Pile, who died at his home in Somerset, Pa., where he leaves three daughters, a son and many other relatives, was one of the California argonauts of 1849. He devoted himself at first to mining, and at one time owned a large portion of the ground upon which the city of Sacramento now stands.

He finally entered the mail service with Maj. George Chorpenning, who a year previously had obtained the first overland contract between Sacramento and Salt Lake. It became necessary in 1852 to relay the route by way of Los Angeles on account of the heavy snows across the Sierras, sending the mail by the Panama steamers to San Pedro, thence by way of Los Angeles, Cajon Pass and San Bernardino to Salt Lake, then back by the same route. It was on this emergency service that Mr. Pile experienced many hardships and attacks by Indians, but always managed to come through without personal injury. For six years he piloted pack-mules laden with United States mail, when he became driver of the first mail coach between Placerville and Salt Lake, for which Chorpenning was awarded the contract in 1858.

At the outbreak of the Civil War he returned to Pennsylvania, enlisted in the Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers and served three years. At the battle of Gettysburg he was shot in the body and carried the bullet the remaining sixty years of his life.

Harmon Is Made Transportation Club President

Glenn B. Harmon, traffic manager of Barker Brothers, was elected president of the Los Angeles Transportation Club at the annual meeting Friday at the Stowell. J. E. Light, district freight agent of the Southern Pacific, was elected vice-president, and Allen T. Smith, publisher of the Southern California Traffic Journal, was chosen secretary and treasurer.

The club is composed of railroad and steamship freight and passenger agents and traffic managers of industries operating here.

The board of directors for the ensuing year was elected as follows: J. D. Rearden, traffic manager, Union Oil Company; W. J. Flaws, traffic manager, General Petroleum Company; Frank Hewson, traffic manager, Union Tool Company; E. D. Briggs, traffic manager, Ce Lite Company; L. G. Wilson, secretary Charmichael Traffic Corporation; A. W. Reese, general agent, Cotton Belt Route; G. S. Squires, assistant to traffic manager, Pacific Electric Railway; S. L. Kreider, proprietor Kreider Shipping Organization, and J. W. Glasgow, chief clerk to general freight agent, Santa Fe Railroad.

Immediately after the election a plan for the establishment of permanent quarters of the club in the Central Building was put forward and adopted. The arrangements for the clubrooms will be completed at the next meeting.

VOCAL TEACHER TO LECTURE

The subjects of Mr. Ruff's lectures will be "Voice Culture in Speech and Song," "The Vocal Muscular System," and "Breathing for Song and Health."

PLANS MADE KNOWN FOR GREATEST OF AQUEDUCTS

Route and Area to be Served by the Colorado River Water Project for Southland Cities

On any working day between the hours of 7 a.m. and 10:30 p.m., one of a crew of draftsmen may be found sprawled full length, heels in the air, at work in an improvised office overlooking Second street on a mammoth map of Southern California, between the Colorado River and the Pacific, from Los Angeles to San Diego. When the task is finished the result will show in contour and in detail the greatest aqueduct ever built by man and the course of 1500 second-feet of Colorado River water flowing seaward to enrich the thickly clustered communities of the Southland.

Thirty men afield and in the office, much of the time working double shifts, have been employed. In the midsummer heat on the desert, the field force has been reduced, but it will be back at full strength as soon as the weather moderates. By October or perhaps November the completed map will be ready to show the Board of Public Service Commissioners. The scale is one inch to 10,000 feet, or, roughly, one inch to two miles. Completed, it will present the proposed route of the Colorado Aqueduct to Los Angeles, suggested branch lines, the location of all tunnels and pumping plants, and the area to be served.

COMMUNITIES IN AREA

The list of principal communities in that area follows:

Foothill towns: Pasadena, South Pasadena, La Canada, La Crescenta, San Marino, Sierra Madre, Arcadia, Monrovia, Azusa, Glendora, Claremont, Upland and San Bernardino.

Valley towns: Alhambra, San Gabriel, El Monte, Bassett, Puente, Duarte, Montebello, Whittier, La Habra, Brea, Fullerton, Orange, Santa Ana, San Dimas, La Verne, Pomona, Chino, Corona, Tustin, Cucamonga, Riverside, Redlands and Beaumont.

West coast towns: Beverly Hills, Sawtelle, Santa Monica, Ocean Park, Venice, Playa del Rey, El Segundo, Manhattan Beach, Redondo Beach and Hermosa Beach.

South Coast towns: Long Beach, Seal Beach, Sunset Beach, Huntington Beach, Newport, Balboa, Oceanside and San Diego.

Portions of Ventura county to the north are not out of reach or above grade. The price at which water may be delivered and the ability and desire of the several communities within range to participate in the enterprise are the factors that will determine their share in the benefits.

HIGH ABOVE SEA LEVEL

The Colorado Aqueduct will emerge from the mountains under the San Gorgonio Pass somewhere near Beaumont at an elevation of approximately 1600 feet above sea level. Flowing 1500 cubic feet to the second, it will have an annual discharge of 1,094,000 acre feet, or sufficient water in one year to cover that number of acres to a depth of one foot.

Estimating the requirements at two acre feet to the acre, the delivery is sufficient to supply 547,000 acres. Ample experience is available to show that one second foot of flow will serve the domestic requirements of approximately 5000 persons, and on that basis the Colorado Aqueduct will provide for a population of 7,500,000 in round numbers. These figures are in addition to the capacity of the Los Angeles or Owens River Aqueduct, established at 2,000,000 of population, and the amounts to be added by flood control to the present Sierra Madre sources of supply.

The flood-control program of Los Angeles county authorized at the special election of last May contemplates an expenditure of $35,300,000 and will provide, as estimated by J. W. Reagan, chief engineer of the Los Angeles Flood Control District, 390,333 acre feet of storage. Its greatest unit is the proposed San Gabriel dam and reservoir, with 420,000 acre feet of capacity.

This San Gabriel storage will lie above the level of the Colorado Aqueduct and will be availabe for areas which the aqueduct cannot suppy except by supplementary pumping. Likewise, in the list of communities already enumerated are many that could and doubtless would be served by substitution. That is, when they need it, they can be supplied from the present Los Angeles Aqueduct, the diversion thus effected to be replaced by the new Colorado supply.

Reagan, in his last published report to the County Supervisors, computes the average price of one miner's inch of water for thirty-two cities of Southern California, from Santa Barbara to San Diego, at $1002 a year. Capitalized at 6 per cent, this revenue makes one miner's inch worth $16,700. Extending these figures to the capacity of the Colorado aqueduct would give a yearly revenue of $75,155,000 and a capitalized value of $1,252,500,000.

Mammoth Map Being Made of Colorado River Project

Southern California's Water Future Outlined

Eight Years Probably Needed to Complete Work

Los Angeles Aqueduct, with allowance for the appreciation in all items of labor, materials and supplies, the Colorado aqueduct will cost somewhere between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000. Nothing more nearly worth calling an estimate can be shaped until the surveys have been completed, the line determined, the length and number of the tunnels estimated and the size and location of the pumping plants fixed.

All these things are literally "in the air." The surveys will show what can be done; it remains for the communities of Southern California to say what shall be done. Not until then can the engineers begin to reckon costs, except in the vaguest way.

In the rough and the large the Colorado aqueduct now begins to take form in something this shape:

There will be an intake somewhere between Blythe and Parker, cut into the Riverside county shore. The Colorado in this stretch flows at the bottom of a channel of its own digging. Near the intake will stand the first pumping unit, one in a series of perhaps three, possibly four, necessary to lift the water "over the hump" between the river bed and the great coastal plain of Southern California. The more nearly vertical the lift the shorter the pipe line, consequently the less skin friction inside the pipe and the more efficient the pumping plant.

The second lift, to which the water will flow by gravity from the head of the first, will be about fifty miles from the river. A third and perhaps a fourth will deliver the water to the aqueduct proper near Shaver's Summit, about seventy miles from the river and at an elevation of approximately 1700 feet.

BY GRAVITY TO CITY

Thence the flow will be by gravity to Los Angeles. Pumping will add to the delivery price, but there is an offset factor. It is cheaper, in terms of delivery, to build a large aqueduct than a small one. Doubling the dimensions of the conduit multiplies the carrying capacity by more than five. Los Angeles city water sells from as low as 1.4 cents to as high as 10 cents for 100 cubic feet. Pumping will add another 3 or 4 cents and still leave the retail price reasonable compared with that charged by many other cities. It would be possible to build a gravity aqueduct, but the cost of the extra length necessary and the interest on the fixed investment would be higher, it is estimated, than the capital investment, sinking fund, interest, depreciation and operation charges on a pumping system.

Beginning near Cabezon, about ninety miles from Los Angeles, comes the crux of the problem, the first length of between forty and fifty miles of tunnels to be driven. Much of this tunneling is through short spurs of the San Bernardino and San Gabriel mountains and can be undertaken simultaneously by as many gangs as there are tunnels, but the Cabezon bore at its shortest will be about thirteen miles long.

On the length of time it takes to drill and blast that bore depends the time it will take to build the aqueduct. Ultimately, the aqueduct must tie in with intricate problems of storage and clarification and power generation, but in case of emergency, such as the city squeezed through just before the Los Angeles Aqueduct was completed, in the anxious months of the 1913-14 season, when the storage reserves in the city reservoirs were being figured at hourly intervals, it would be possible to set up emergency pumping plants and get water direct from the river without waiting for a hydroelectric power plant above the intake.

SIX YEARS ALLOWED

It took five years to build the Elizabeth tunnel of the present Aqueduct, or a mile a year. William Mulholland, chief engineer of the Aqueduct, always has allowed six years for the Cabezon bore. Nobody can predict the period necessary with certainty. Exceptional difficulties were encountered in the Elizabeth tunnel and Mulholland bases his estimate on a much broader basis of experience.

To satisfy legal requirements, harmonize differences of opinion, solidify the engineering preliminaries, authorize the initial bond investment and get to work will take probably not less than two years. Add six for the Cabezon bore and the minimum expectation is water not earlier than eight years hence. At the rate increased consumption is encroaching on the Aqueduct capacity and the subsurface supply as population grows not a moment should be wasted by the communities interested. They ought to begin a survey of the opportunity and of their needs today.

FACES DRUG CHARGE

Reputed Son of Mexicali Police Chief Awaits Hearing

Jesus Delgardo, arrested on a charge of selling morphine in violation of the State poison law, was turned over to Federal narcotic agents yesterday. He is held on a warrant charging violation of the Harrison Narcotic Act pending hearing before Stephen G. Long, United States Commissioner.

According to Federal Agent De Spain, Delgardo is a son of the Chief of Police at Mexicali, and formerly was a policeman in that city. De Spain said he was arrested on March 24, last, by Federal agents after an asserted sale of morphine. Later, according to De Spain, the defendant escaped after he had been released on his own recognizance on a promise that he would assist the government men in locating another asserted dope peddler.

vation of 520 feet to the lower reservoir, from which it then flows, at an elevation of 400 feet, into the conduits which carry the water to Coronado Island and to the high and low pressure mains of the San Diego city water system. One later passes Chollas Reservoir, just east of the city. This reservoir is used merely as a division basin, from which the water passes at an elevation of 285 feet, with abundant gravity pressure to meet the requirements of the city's system.

NEW SYSTEM PLANNED

The plan upon which the city of San Diego is now working, and upon which it will conduct a bond election September 16, is that of creating an entirely new domestic water system by going about ten miles up the San Diego River, in Mission Valley, and there building a dam about 125 feet high, to impound the flood waters of San Diego River. It is the belief of competent hydraulic engineers that if this system is successfully developed it will virtually double the present supply of San Diego's city water system. The city is laying claim, in the courts, to all the waters of San Diego River not already appropriated for irrigation or domestic purposes.

The city's reservoirs, according to engineering reports, can store 18,000,000,000 gallons of water. The city now has a supply from its four reservoirs and, in addition, has a two-year contract with an option for a third year for 2,000,000 gallons of water per day from Hodges Lake, an impounding reservoir belonging to the Santa Fe Railway and located about eight miles south of Escondido. It is said that at present San Diego and Coronado are using approximately 12,000,000 gallons of water per day.

San Diego city and county, hydraulic engineers assert, must depend for water supply upon the conservation of surplus waters during floods, which occur at intervals of about ten years. The city itself has a mean annual rainfall of about ten inches, the precipitation ranging up to twenty inches at places in the hills east and north of the city.

It was one of these floods which filled the Morena reservoir to overflowing several years ago, causing the lower Otay reservoir to burst and flood the lower valley, drowning several persons. This reservoir has since been restored in a manner which engineers regard as absolutely safe. At the present stage of water in all San Diego city reservoirs, making full allowance for evaporation, it has been estimated by capable engineers that the stored supply is sufficient to meet the needs of San Diego and Coronado for three years, if no rain should fall.

According to reports in San Diego, the Spreckels interests, which control Coronado Island and get their city water from the San Diego reservoirs, are endeavoring to develop an independent supply from the waters of the Tia Juana River, just south of the international border. If this project is carried through successfully, it will release a considerable amount of San Diego city water for other use.

NO WATER ON FARMS

At present no water from any of the San Diego city reservoirs is used for agricultural purposes. The city does not consider that there is a sufficient amount available to justify its use for farming, but if the Mission Valley project is developed, the city would, according to engineers, have much more water than it could use for a long period of years to come. Those who are working in behalf of the project, however, contend that the present supply of water is diminishing almost as rapidly as the population of the city and its environs is increasing, and that the community must act now if it expects to provide itself with a permanent and adequate domestic water supply before an actual shortage develops.

The Mission Valley project has been favorably reported upon to the San Diego City Council by two of the best-known hydraulic engineers in the West—H. N. Savage, former hydraulic engineer for the city, of San Diego, and John R. Freeman, who has been consulting engineer upon some outstanding water projects on the Pacific Coast.

Another water conservation project which is proving to be of great value to the county is the Hodges Lake reservoir, eight miles south of Escondido. This project is a combined irrigation and domestic water supply development. It consists of a gigantic impounding dam in the mountains below Escondido, where a lake several miles in length has been created by storm waters caught during rainy seasons during the last six or eight years. San Diego gets 2,000,000 gallons of water per day from this reservoir, and a considerable amount of the remainder is used for domestic purposes in communities all along the line from Lacosta to La Jolla.

ACREAGE INCREASES

The total amount of agricultural land under irrigation in what is known as the Santa Fe Irrigation District by the use of water from Hodges Lake is 8352 acres, but this amount is gradually being increased, and it is expected that ultimately the project will water 50,000 acres of fertile lands in that section of the country.

The Santa Fe Railway is developing in that locality a 9000-acre tract of land which was for centuries nothing but grazing land. This land has been laid out into 400 attractive small ranches, planted in avocados, lemons and walnuts. The project is known as Rancho Santa Fe, and is being developed around a community center patterned architecturally along true Spanish colonial lines. These lands are being irrigated from the Hodges Lake project.

Lower down in the county, not far north of the city reservoirs, is the Sweetwater reservoir of the Sweetwater Water Company. Higher up in the county is Henshaw dam and reservoir, adjacent to the Santa Ysabel Indian reservation. This project was completed late in 1923. It appropriates much of the water from the watershed surroundnig Warner's ranch, and supplies the city of Escondido with its domestic water supply in addition to providing irrigation water for thousands of acres of choice agricultural land. It is said to be capable of supplying water to irrigate 45,000 acres.

OTHER PROJECTS

In addition to these projects there are Cuyamaca reservoir, Sutherland reservoir, Fletcher Lake, El Capitan reservoir, Merriam reservoir, San Clemente reservoir, Murray reservoir and perhaps half a dozen others, either completed or projected, or in course of construction.

All of the projects now in use are either of the earth and rock fill type, or of concrete construction, not unlike some of the projects which have already been completed in the general flood control and water conservation plan of the Los Angeles county flood control district. Most of the San Diego county projects were originally private enterprises, and many of them are still maintained and operated by private interests.

SOUTHLAND EDUCATOR IS HONORED

Societe de Internationale de Philologie Membership Bestowed on Dr. Flewelling

Dr. Ralph Tyler Flewelling, A. M., S.T.B., Ph.D., head of the department of philosophy of the University of Southern California, has been given the right to add another three letters to his already long list of degrees with the bestowal of membership in the Societé Internationale de Philologie, Sciences et Beaux-Arts, which has its headquarters in London and in which membership is prized as a special honor.

M. S. P. are the new initials to be added to the list included by Dr. Flewelling, who is widely known both for his work at the university and as head of the department of philosophy in the educational work carried on for American soldiers in France immediately at the close of the war, when he became prominent at the famous Sorbonne in Paris.

The societe, which has members in every continent in the world, was founded in 1875 for the advancement and encouragement of all branches of science, literature, music and the fine arts and to promote the science of philology.

Dr. Flewelling received his A. M. degree from the University of Washington, the S.T.B. from the Boston University school of theology and the Ph.D. from the Boston University. He came to the University of Southern California in 1917 from the pastorate of the First Methodist Church in Boston.

Dr. Fleming is the author of "Christ in the Drama of Doubt," "Personalism, the Problem of Philosophy," "Relgion and Ethics," "Philosophy and the War," "Bergson and Personal Realism" and "The Reason in Faith," which has just recently been published. He is the founder and editor of "The Personalist," a widely read magazine circulated among students of philosophy of many countries.

BAR HONORS SOUTHLAND LAW SCHOOL

Legal Association Gives First Rank to University of Southern California

Word has just been received from Dean Frank M. Porter of the college of law, University of Southern California, who is in Chicago, stating that the college of law has been given Class-A rating by the council on legal education of the American Bar Association, in the classification of law colleges of the United States now being completed by the council.

Other law colleges in California receiving this rating are the University of California, the Hastings College of Law, San Francisco, and the Leland Stanford Junior University.

The survey just being completed of educational work in the field of law in the United States has attracted much attention, the council appointed by the American Bar Association being composed of widely known educators and attorneys.

The college of law of the University of Southern California is one of the widely known institutions of legal education in the West and during the last school year had an enrollment of 455 students, 122 legal students being enrolled in the summer session quarter of the college, preparing for legal degrees.

REPORT ON ANIMALS

Humane Commission Turns Over $44,463 During Year

The activities of the Humane Animal Commission during the fiscal year just closed enriched the city by a total of $44,463.02, according to a report issued yesterday. The commission during the year investigated 1883 cases, examined 10,981 animals, suspended 484 of them from labor and destroyed 304 others. It also issued 347 warnings and reprimands and caused twenty-five arrests.

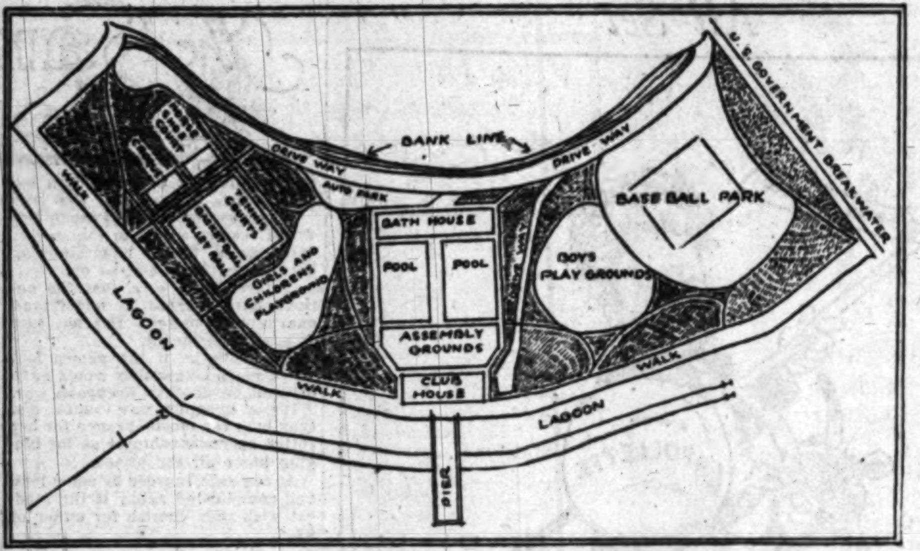
Licenses also were issued by the commission for 28,969 dogs. A total of 4830 were impounded and 4004 destroyed. There were also 1997 cats destroyed and 342 head of stock impounded. The total receipts of the year were $73,329.40.

The work of the commission is carried on by fifteen employees, though the commissioners themselves work without salary.

RUSSIAN ARTIST TO TALK AT UNIVERSITY

The University of California, Southern Branch, has arranged a series of lectures on Russian art, which will be the feature of the coming week. Alexander Kaun of the department of Slavic languages at the university in Berkeley will discuss the art of Russia as it has developed through eleven centuries. Three days will be devoted to these lectures, which are scheduled for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in Millspaugh Auditorium at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Kaun is himself a Russian. His comprehensive collection will give the audience an opportunity to see reproductions of paintings and other interesting examples of church architecture from the tenth to the eighteenth century.

Map of Proposed Beach at Point Fermin



Where Sea Will be Pushed Back

Forty-one acres to be reclaimed as free playground for service men and people of city.

CITY BEACH WORK TO START

Playground Commission Plans Approved and Funds Available; To Be Free to Public

Reclaiming the ocean for a place to play sounds like serious business. But the City Playground Commission went on record last week favoring the expenditure of $250,000 for the creation of forty-one acres of land where the surf of the Pacific now washes against Point Fermin. When finished, this strip of hand-made land, extending for nearly a mile along the cost, will be dedicated to the pastimes and pleasures of Los Angeles as the first of her two proposed municipal beaches.

It is planned to name the proposed playground Cabrillo Beach after Don Juan Roderiguez Cabrillo, the Portuguese navigator who set out from Navidad, Mex., in 1542 to find a strip of land along the Pacific Coast called Alta California. On October 8, 1542, Cabrillo sailed into Los Angeles Harbor after discovering the islands of Santa Catalina and San Clemente.

President Frederick G. Leonard of the Playground Commission calls the project "the most daring thing Los Angeles has done in a recreational way." Los Angeles has set the pace by acquiring four municipal playground camps in the High Sierras and San Bernardino Mountains. Other cities are now following suit.

But Cabrillo Beach, adjoining Los Angeles Harbor, is to be the "big plaything" for Los Angeles—and the wonder of a nation.

NO CONCESSIONS

It will give to the city its first breathing space along the ocean and forever will assure for Los Angeles an unobstructed view of the Pacific from her expansive inland. There are to be no beach-front sideshows at Cabrillo Beach and no high-board fence requiring a dime-in-the-slot for a peep of the briny deep. Concessions and hot-dog barkers will not be allowed.

From the United States government breakwater at the southern end of Los Angeles Harbor a twenty-five-foot sea wall 1000 feet from shore is to be built around Point Fermin. Within the wall new land is to be made and an extensive recreation park of forty-one acres shaped over the area.

The feasibility of the plan has been given the unconditional approval of many experts, Mr. Leonard declares, and has been accepted on the absolute assurance of its entire practicability. Engineers have examined the ocean currents about the point with reference to their possible action on the sea wall, prevailing storms and the treacherous southeasters have been studied and all possible records bearing on weather conditions at the Harbor were thoroughly gone into before acceptance was given. A canvass of old residents of San Pedro even was made, Mr. Leonard said, to ascertain from possible eyewitnesses any peculiarities coast storms have exhibited around Point Fermin.

PLANS DRAWN UP

Engineers of the Board of Harbor Commissioners estimate that the actual work of building the wall and filling in the land will cost $147,500. The odd $100,000 more which the Playground Department stands ready to spend will go for the improvements to make play worth while in a score or more ways. The fill is to be completed in fifteen months time and two years hence should see the project ready for use, according to President Leonard.

Preliminary sketches, which the commission has had drawn up, outline a comprehensive plan to make the beach playground a complete unit. Just within the sea wall and extending for its entire length a 100-foot salt water lagoon is to be created. Sandy stretches will slope down to this still-water area on the park side of the lagoon as an ideal bathing beach, while the ebb and flow of the ocean tide will constantly change the water within the lake. Small boats will be allowed on the lagoon and a break in the wall near the harbor end will permit of access to the ocean proper.

Out from the sea wall a jetty is to be built and a pleasure pier some 400 feet in length will go up on top.

FOR SERVICE MEN

Within the playground area itself the commission is tentatively planning to set aside a space for sports of the soldiers, sailors and marines. A suggestion has been made, which the commission has under consideration, to name the proposed athletic field the Mississippi Memorial Athletic Field as a fitting memorial to the forty-four men and three officers who lost their lives on June 12, last, in the tragic gun turret explosion on the crack battleship.

As far back as 1915, when Cabrillo Beach was first discussed by the Military and Naval Affairs Committee and referred to the Chamber of Commerce for action, it was considered of primary importance that men in service should be given a playground at the harbor.

"There is no factor which contributes to the popularity of a port, so far as the Navy is concerned, so much as a suitable and accessible place for athletic sports," it was said. "It not only affords recreation and keeps the men of the Navy fit, but also adds largely to their contentment and their morale."

Before retiring from command of the Pacific Fleet Admiral Wiley told President Leonard of the need of such a playground. It will give to the boys what they want and need and will assure for the city a peculiar distinction among the harbors of the world, he said. Admiral Pratt, now ranking commander of the fleet, has expressed to Mr. Leonard a similar high esteem for what Los Angeles is planning to do.

REACHED BY TROLLEY

With this in mind the Playground Commission is now proceeding to create Cabrillo Beach, first for the men at arms from all nations, and, secondly, to provide the entire city of Los Angeles, as well as residents of the harbor, with a municipal beach. There is a second city beach under consideration north of Santa Monica, but Cabrillo Beach will be the first and only one accessible for those who cannot go in automobiles. It is served by the Pacific Electric.

Baseball diamonds, tennis, handball and horseshoe courts, a football field and a cinder track will be provided at Cabrillo Beach. In addition, there probably will be a warm-water indoor plunge, and bath and clubhouses. A pavilion is to be erected at a central point in the playground, where band concerts or other public affairs may be held. Drives for automobiles and walks are to be laid out and extensive lawns bordered by flowers and shrubs and trees are to be planted. Picnic accommodations will be an important feature and tend to attract the State picnics to the beach-front grounds. The children are not to be forgotten. They will be provided with a suitable water-front playground.

By a fortunate occurrence the commission will be able to save approximately $18,750 in building the seawall and making the fill. The United Dredging Company, under contract to dredge in an ar south of Dead Man's Island, has agreed to deliver rock and earth material on the proposed playground site for 9 cents a cubic yard. Otherwise the commission would have been required to bring rock from the nearest quarry, located on Catalina Island, at a much greater cost. While the cost of making the fill will approximate $3500 an acre, the Harbor Commission estimates that the reclaimed land will conservatively be worth $25,000 an acre, or seven times its original cost.

MONEY AVAILABLE

Following the initial conception of the municipal beach by the Committee on Military and Naval Affairs the City Council, the Los Angeles and San Pedro chambers of commerce, the Board of Harbor Commissioners and its entire staff of engineers and the Park and Playground commissions all inspected the project and heartily indorsed the plan. The United States government promptly granted a permit for the use of the national coast line.

The Playground Commission has been assisted in planning Cabrillo Beach by the Board of Harbor Commissioners, which originally turned over the jurisdiction of the area to the playground officials.

The actual construction program of reclaiming the area has been put in the hands of Supt. C. B. Raitt of the playground department.

At the 1923 bond election Los Angeles voted a $1,500,000 bond issue for use in acquiring municipal playgrounds throughout the city, and especially for the purpose of obtaining the two beach playgrounds. Of this sum $250,000 was allotted to the Cabrillo Beach project and the money is now available.

ANTHROPOLOGIST WILL GIVE LECTURE SERIES

The University of California, Southern Branch, which has been conducting a series of lectures on outlines of general science, has just announced that Grafton Elliot Smith, noted anthropologist from the University of London, will be on the campus for five lectures on anthropology to be given daily beginning tomorrow and ending Friday at 11 o'clock in 201 Berkeley Hall. Dr. Smith is an honorary member of numerous anthropological and medical societies. During his long residence in Egypt, in the Egyptian government school of medicine at Cairo, he made an exhaustive study of the great monuments and tombs of the Pharaohs. The art of mummification has deeply interested him. At this time he knew Mr. Howard Carter, who has recently attained international prominence as a result of the excavations made for the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen.

The Shy Bridegroom

One of the strangest marriage customs is that observed by some of the women of Assam. There the bride sometimes takes the initiative. She goes to fetch the bridegroom, and it is etiquette for him to hide and resist until carried off. Women of means are permitted to choose a temporary husband and when tired of him pay him off and take another.

SYSTEM COUNTS IN FIRE BATTLES

north. A base camp is established at a strategic point.

If it's a big fire driven by a high wind through heavy brush in the day time, very often it is useless to waste energy trying to stem it. The fire that swept over the Santa Barbara National Forest in the county last week swept through Elizabeth Lake Canyon at the rate of ten miles in three hours. What chance would a fire-fighting crew have against such a running sheet of flame?

If the brush is not very heavy and the fire is climbing up the side of a hill in a V-shape with not much of a wind blowing, the fire-fighting crew is split in two. Under leaders, they begin picking at the fire on the flanks, keeping away from the head or crest of the blaze. Little by little, by throwing dirt on it, raking away and nibbling at it, they begin to narrow the blaze down. Waiting their chance—a lull in the wind or a momentary halt of the fire because of barren spots at the head—they might easily rush in and beat the life out of it in a few hours.

But with the big fire it is a different matter. The Pine Canyon fire was a fine example of the heart-breaking work of fighting brush and timber fires. There the fire was of such great area and the flames so hot that the best work could be done by the fighters at night only.

It is unbelievable what a difference there is in the burning of a brush fire in the day and in the night. Along about sundown the wind begins to fall, the fire slows down and soon appears to be burning at a standstill. It is then that the fire fighters who have been resting in camp are routed out and, under leaders, move up the side of the mountains, over ridges, through canyons and right into the very heart of the fire. Except for sporadic blazes here and there, the fire smolders. The smoke hangs heavy and the embers glow along the fire line.

DEPLOY IN SKIRMISH

The crew of 50 or 100 men deploys like a line of skirmishers along the edge of the fire, and soon the ring of axes and the clank of shovels tell the story of the fire fighters "going over the top."

The aim is to clean off the edge of the fire so as to prevent its spreading when the wind comes up. This is done by taking shovels and scraping the leaves, humus and vegetation along the fringe clean down to the earth, making a path two or three feet wide bordering the fire. Brush is cut down and everything is thrown back into the burned area. Great care is exercised to see that in working no sparks or embers are thrown out beyond the burned area into the adjacent brush.

Within the fire line close to the border, all smoldering trees, logs and stumps are covered with sand. Any standing trees that are burning and are likely to spread the fire by falling over into the unburned area are cut down and buried. The yucca, that great and noble member of the plant family, protected by the law against the ravages of hikers and picnickers, is one of the meanest things with which fire fighters have to contend. It is the greatest fire spreader known in these parts, for the reason that once the bulb catches fire it burns and burns and burns. And after it burns a couple of days, unless taken care of, it topples over and rolls down hill, carrying its burning embers into unburned brush and starting new fires. So it is that the only thing to do with a burning yucca is to knock it down and bury it completely. This is no small task when they have to be handled by the hundreds.

BURROS BRING FOOD

About 5 o'clock in the morning the camp cook sends up a pack train of burros carrying water and lunch to the men. The county forester has fifteen or twenty burros which are used not only in fighting fires, but also in between seasons to build fire breaks across otherwise inaccessible mountain ranges. A bite of lunch and the work proceeds. This cleaning up the edge of a fire is the toughest kind of work, the men returning red-eyed from the smoke, grimy, holes burned in their clothes and utterly exhausted. One thing the crew leaders have to look out for in picking up their workers is to be sure their shoes are good or their feet will be burned and blistered.

Daytime work is confined largely to cutting firebreaks some distance ahead of the fire and to mopping up along the rear and sides of the fire when opportunity presents itself.

Two of the great obstacles the fire fighters have to contend with are wind and excited persons who start back-fires because of a false notion extant that if you can't do anything else start a back-fire.

As far as the wind goes, all the fighter can do is to hope and pray. With a big fire under way, the wind cuts up foolish capers. It blows one direction one minute, the opposite direction the next and then the same thing over with variations. A whole night's work will sometimes be undone by a freak wind that picks up sparks and drops them hundreds of yards into the dry brush, starting new fires.

The danger attendant upon fighting a brush fire is reduced by having experienced crew leaders who know the country and who know where to take their men. The one axiom of safety is never to get in front of the fire. In spite of the precautions, however, men do get trapped because of shifting winds, and there have been some narrow squeaks. A word to the morbid public: Keep away from a brush fire if you don't want to handle a shovel and go to work.

WINDOW DISPLAY HONORS

Five gold and silver medals and as many more blue ribbons and "honorable mentions" were won by Barker Brothers for its window displays at the International Association of Display Men's convention conducted recently at Buffalo, N. Y. The local company competed for honors with concerns from every part of the world. In the furniture division the local store carried off all three major prizes. Paul Francisco Lupo, display director of Barker Brothers, is president of the International Artists Club of Los Angeles.

TRIO OF NEW DISTRICTS IN CITY LIMITS

Santa Monica Canyon, Fairfax and Wagner Vote Annexation

Three new districts were added to the territory of the City of Los Angeles Friday as a result of annexation elections.

Residents of the Santa Monica Canyon addition voted to enter the city by a vote of 38 to 21. This election renders the city limits of Santa Monica and Los Angeles contiguous to each other for the first time. The Santa Monica Canyon addition comprises about 100 acres at the foot of the canyon used mostly for residence purposes except for a small business district near the Santa Monica city boundary line on the southeast. It is bounded on the north by the Uplifters' Ranch, already within the city limits, and on the west by the Pacific.

Included in the territory annexed is more than 1000 feet of beach extending from the northern limits of Santa Monica to the Pacific Palisades property.

The Fairfax addition, west of La Brea avenue, voted unanimously in favor of annexation—16 to 0.

Wagner addition was annexed by a vote of 38 to 17. This district is south of Santa Monica Boulevard.

Newsboys Will Soon Own Their Own Building

Newsboys of Los Angeles are to have a building all their own as a result of a movement launched by Fred H. Solomon, who has made the first subscription of $250 to the Los Angeles Newsboys' Athletic Club. At present the organization maintains headquarters on the upper floor of 105 North Spring street.

The dance man also plans to conduct a whirlwind one-day campaign on the downtown streets, having his three orchestras play on different corners of the business district and sell autographed newspapers at $1 a copy.

Every KNABE "Specially Built"

IT is a known fact that practically all artists using pianos other than the KNABE carry their own concert pianos with them on their tours. These pianos, whatever the make, are constructed to meet the individual demands of each artist.

KNABE Artists such as Godowsky, Nyiregyhazi, Ornstein, Rosenthal, Munz, Leginska and hundreds of others who repeatedly appear in concert DO NOT carry pianos with them—they use a stock concert grand from the warerooms of the KNABE dealer in the city in which they appear. The Supreme Pianoforte, the is so perfectly manufactured that EVERY instrument—whether in your home or on the concert stage—is "Specially Built."

THE LAST LAUGH

The girl who asserts her ability to take a joke often ends by marrying one.

THE ACCIDENT COLUMN

In the last fiscal year of the City Receiving Hospital more than 58,000 cases were treated. Of these more than 10,000 were of persons injured in motor accidents in the city streets. Of every dozen dwellers in our fair town one is booked for the hospital before the year is over. We are surely careless folk.

THE CLOCK CASE

Clock has struck. Judge Clock declines to be again a candidate for the bench. Finds the work too trying for his physical condition. It is a fact that the business calls for twelve to fourteen hours of alert application to the cases in court and this is something of a strain on any man. Still there is no absolute shortage of judicial candidates.

TRUE EFFICIENCY

There's a splendid capacity behind the Republican nominees. Both Coolidge and Dawes represent patriotic service of the highest type and they have also both demonstrated an almost spiritual devotion to the business in hand. When there is something to be accomplished they approach it with zeal and competence. They are the Steadfast Brothers, the clean-up men.

WONDERS OF NATURE

Explorer Ashton tells of a peculiar race of Troglodytes or cave-dwellers he found in darkest Africa. Almost any hole in the ground is home to them. Bring one of these primitive souls to America and he would be properly amazed at beholding a modern cliff-dweller who sleeps in a peek-aboo apartment on the sixteenth floor of some skyscraper. It is all in the point of view.

JUST LIKE HONEST CAL.

Republicans of the country will be generally pleased by the announcement that President Coolidge does not propose to lie down and let La Follette walk away with Wisconsin. The President's record shows that he is a strong fighter without making much noise about it and that he has always been a winner. Robert may shake his hoary locks in anger. He will meet a less demonstrative but no less determined foe in Calvin Coolidge.

BUILDING A NATION

Gov.-Gen. Wood shows himself a cool, reasonable, resourceful American gentleman in his constructive message to the Philippine Legislature. It is characterized by no hot words of criticism or rebuke; but, looking forward, he calls for "economic development and education upon which political development very largely depends," as the only way to permanent independence. Gen. Wood is noted for making a good job of anything he undertakes. He has done just that so far in the Philippines and it is hoped he may stay by it until the task is completed.

THE RENTED HOME

According to a survey made under the auspices of the real estate boards of the nation, house rents are being readjusted on a down grade in three-fourths of the cities of America. In perhaps 10 per cent of the cities they are still showing a slight advance, but the general tendency is downward and the peak of rental rates in America has long since been passed. In the cities of over 300,000 population the highest rents in preferred locations will not exceed an average of $25 a room. Good housing can be had at $10 per room. This is a notable reduction from the rates which prevailed the year after the war. But the country is catching up on its building program. Nobody is suffering for a roof and naturally the drift would be toward lower rentals. Los Angeles is still leading the nation in the matter of creating new homes, but they seem to fill up quickly. There are numbers of old houses to rent, but the new ones built for tenants find them readily.

MAKING CITIZENS

Some of the big corporations employing much labor from overseas countries are adding citizenship schools and departments to their service. They find it to their advantage to make full-fledged Americans and voters out of their workers. The Rock Island Railroad, for instance, has a regular bureau on Americanization and such employees as are not yet accorded full citizenship are taken in hand and trained in the proper preliminaries. They are given a simple schooling in the Constitution and the privileges of citizenship and are assisted through the essential legal steps to make real American voters of them. Genuine American citizens seldom lapse into the doctrines of anarchy. They feel a certain responsibility and they recognize their opportunities. They defend the rights of property because they have already begun to acquire property of their own. Socialism is the creed of the lazy and shiftless. The corporations realize that the worker who is a full-fledged American citizen has more respect and consideration for his job and more purpose to carry it on.

PERIL TO FREE HARBOR

THE TIMES views with concern negotiations now under way whose tendency is toward an agreement whereby the railroads shall take over and complete the municipal belt-line railway which is the key to our free harbor.

The unification of terminal facilities at the harbor, which is stipulated by the government as a requisite to the Federal program of development, is a factor of immense importance as well to the future growth of the port. But it must be owned and controlled by the city as a safeguard to the huge investment which the people of Los Angeles have in their harbor. To relinquish that control of the harbor approaches would gravely imperil control of the harbor itself.

In the front wall of The Times Building is set a stone tablet, the gift of the People of Los Angeles, commemorating "their appreciation of the effective services of The Los Angeles Times in the contest for a free harbor." Of that contest The Times said, on April 28, 1899, that it was "in many respects the most remarkable and important contest that ever had been fought to a finish between a community and adverse private interests—the struggle for the creation of a free, deep-water harbor at San Pedro."

Many residents of Los Angeles today will recall that eight-year battle between the railroad-controlled interests who sought to create a "Southern Pacific harbor" at Santa Monica and the Free Harbor League of Los Angeles, led by Senator Stephen M. White and Gen. Harrison Gray Otis, owner of The Times. It began in 1890 when Congress made provision for a deep-water harbor to be located "somewhere near Los Angeles." It ended a little more than eight years later when Congress appropriated $400,000 to be used in the development of the San Pedro site—the beginning of the Los Angeles Harbor of today.

In one of its editorial declarations on the subject The Times said that "a great majority of citizens are strongly in favor of the establishment of the harbor at a location where it will be free to all lines of transportation and not dominated by a single railroad company."

Substitute the words "railroad group" for the words "single railroad company" in that declaration of a quarter of a century ago and it fits the situation today. The alignment is the same. It is the people on one side, the railroads on the other.

No harbor is more than a way station on the trunk lines of world commerce, a point of trans-shipment. Nobody yet has bottled up the ocean, but it is wholly possible on shore to bottle up any harbor by control of access to and egress from it—that is, by ownership of the transportation facilities that serve it.

The Army Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors know that. As a condition precedent to the appropriation by Congress of $7,000,000 for building another wing to the breakwater, the board stipulated that there must be created first a port district, the officers of which should have "full jurisdiction over the development and operation of the ports and port facilities" within the district, and second, a "publicly owned belt-line railroad, or the equivalent, serving uniformly and without discrimination all railroads entering the port and all terminals of the port."

If the formula of unification works out here to the solution obtained elsewhere, a terminal corporation must be formed, holdings in which will be proportionate to the property interests now on the ground, which are strictly railroad interests. The preference of those interests would be to buy up and consolidate the broken and scattered links of the municipal belt line. At second best, it would enter willingly enough into a long-term operating lease.

And what would become then of that other community of interest, also on the ground, the public interest? Where would be the millions invested already in piers and wharves and rights of way and tidelands? Safe in the encircling arms of the terminal corporation.

Such corporations, it has been said, have worked well elsewhere. Yes, but with one reservation—where the railroads owned the water front, and the equities to be adjusted were all railroad equities.

But in Los Angeles Harbor the people have a permanent investment of $19,800,000. They have $5,000,000 more, cash in hand, waiting to be spent. They have $5,000,000 more in bonds, authorized and waiting to be sold. They have total assets valued by the Board of Harbor Commissioners at $65,000,000. They have 40.5 miles of belt line which cost them $1,166,797 to build. Ten miles more of double track, to cost anywhere between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000, according to the number of bridges and the location finally adopted, will complete the system.

The position of The Times is that the belt line should be completed, and completed by the city. Nothing else will secure the unimpaired value of property held in trust by the city government for the people of the city as a whole. Holdings of such magnitude cannot be placed at the mercy of any association of private interests, no matter how benevolent their dispositions or how altruistic their intentions.

In making this declaration The Times yields nothing of its convictions against the principle of municipal ownership. The city owns a tremendous property in the harbor and it would be folly to do otherwise than to protect it.

The Times holds no brief against the railroads. It suspects them of nothing, it accuses them of nothing. In their present agreeable situation, it is difficult to imagine how any railroad man, working for his salary and his shareholders and his bondholders, could behave in any more seemly manner. The railroads are not conspiring, they are politely waiting.

Some things are not in human nature. One is for private interests to administer their own property and the public property jointly, to the best advantage of the public, when that advantage necessarily competes with their own. No, not even if they wish to.

A public service corporation possessing a monopoly may have sufficient enlightened selfishness to perceive that efficient service and reasonable rates are its only hope of continuing that monopoly. There are such corporations and they give better service than political monopolies but there is always behind them, if not actual competition, the threat of it, or worse.

To assure free competition at the harbor, equal rights for the railroads among themselves and equal opportunities for the shipper, with fair rates and prompt service, a completed, municipally-owned belt line, serving all shipping facilities and open to all on equal terms, is necessary.

That the Chamber of Commerce, the Harbor Committee of Two Hundred or any other body of Los Angeles citizens whose members have had a part in the twenty-five-year fight to build and maintain a great free harbor here should countenance any move jeopardizing its freedom is unthinkable.

THROUGH THICK AND THIN

Dr. A. H. Waterman of Chicago, in an address before the American Institute of Homeopathy in Cleveland, excoriated the women of America in biting terms. The cause of his denunciation was what he called "their insane desire to retain their girlish figures." According to him, the "American women are becoming fair, fat and flabby and inclined to become narcotic addicts from taking obesity cures."

Since he made this startling assertion physicians all over the country have leaped to the defense of the fair sex. They deplore the doctor's lack of gallantry, as well as his overstatement of the case. The pills that take off flesh do not, they aver, always contain narcotics, although they are highly injurious to the health. They are made up largely of thyroid extract, a substance that works irreparable injury to the constitution if taken too often. It should not be taken at all except upon the advice and under the watchful eye of a physician.

The doctors do admit, however, that these patent pill reducers have a tremendous sale among the women. A stylish-stout partakes of a hearty meal, topping it off with pastry and candy, and then takes a pill with the serene knowledge that she is doing her best to reduce. Fat people, as a rule, will do anything possible to get thin, except give up their food. And the doctors cruelly stress the point that there is only one royal road to leanness and that leads far away from the flesh pots and the confectionery stores.

ONE MORE RECORD NEEDED

Ever since the war breaking records has been a constant performance by single aviators and airmen in groups. If breaking records were the only proofs of progress the science of aeronautics should be leading all other world advance and airplanes should be as comman and plentiful as motor cars.

At present the world is supposed to be speed crazy and in almost continuous succession of brilliant feats the airmen keep pushing forward the time and space equation till it threatens to stop short at nothing less than infinity. In catering to the human fever for ever more speed the airplane can make the automobile look like a snail on a fly paper.

Altitude records also go glimmering in the fresh heights attained from time to time by ambitious airmen. Mt. Everest itself can be made to look like an ant hill if the rising capacity of the airplane is pushed to its utmost capacity. The ether is the only limit in this direction.

A French airman has just broken the duration flight record by remaining in the air thirty-eight hours. An American flyer has crossed this continent at a hop; a British airman some years ago performed the same feat for the Atlantic Ocean. United States Army flyers are on the point of circling the globe through the medium of the upper air.

In spite of the spectacular publicity, however, attained by the triumphant airplane, its most loyal advocates cannot pretend that it is as yet a commercial success. It has one more record to break first, a simple record, not calling for special effort by any superflyer, but for a steady combined campaign by makers and users of airplanes.

Aviation has to set some kind of a record for safety. It must demonstrate that the airplane is somewhere nearly as reliable as the motor car, the steamship, the locomotive, the covered wagon, the horse, the human leg in reaching its destination before the public at large takes as kindly to wings as to wheels.

CONSERVATION

If history repeats itself, and it undoubtedly does at times, the curtailment by householders of the use of electricity will cost the electric companies money long after the power shortage is over.

People saved wheat during the war and the normal per capita consumption of wheat products has never been reached in any year since. That is one of the things at the root of the farmers' difficulties, together with the European shortage of money and slow recovery from the great catastrophe.

The curtailment of light in the home will grow to be a habit with many people before the rains fall next winter, and many a monthly bill will be smaller in consequence for years to come.

It will run counter to the demand for more and better light that means increasing business for current producers. It is possible to reverse the tendency under the pressure of necessity, but the reversal will take time.

On the other hand, the shortage may be a good thing for the producers in the long run if it "flattens out the peak." The demand for power will revive faster than the demand for light and will give the companies new business that does not require additional generating equipment.

THE SAGE OF CALABASAS

The great trouble with invented schemes of reform, such as Socialism and the like, is that they are wholly theoretical. When attempts are made to put them in practice it is discovered that due allowance has not been made for various freaks and quirks of human nature; and that, while theoretically it seems they ought to work, and work beautifully, in fact they fall down miserably.

Socialism is founded on the false premise that the present system of production and distribution is something that has been thought out and planned and that, accordingly, something else that has been thought out and planned can be substituted for it. In fact, the system is a growth to which everything in the whole history of the race has made contribution, and making an oak into a eucalyptus is a simple problem in horticulture compared with changing it wholesale.

It is not a machine, it is a living thing. Changes are taking place all the time, but consciously directed changes must be made hesitantly or there is danger of killing it, just as too vigorous pruning kills the tree. We can lop off a little here, twist it a bit here and so in time alter its form, provided we give it time for adjustment. We can cut it down, as was done in Russia, and suffer terribly for lack of its shelter until it sprouts again from the roots—and grows up again in much the same shape as before.

AIN'T IT JUST SO?

Professor Dink Beeson says the Belief that a thing is easy be-

The commonest errors that flesh
Is prone to, and the prof used
To think cooking was easy and
Cooks a common sort of people.
And if he hadn't got caught in Quarantine last spring and had
To cook his own victuals for Fifteen days he might have felt
So till plumb yet, but the quar-

Nightmare of bum coffee and bum
Oatmeal and bum fried eggs and
Bum everything else and he has Decided now that the man who
Mixes up the bread for the Home
Bakery and bakes it is a wiser
Man than he, and the bird who Makes the pies and cakes and Doughnuts at Shulf Brothers' has
A keener brain than, say, John W.

Decided that the man who can

THIS IS THE DAY

Col. Theodore O'Hara first read his poem, "The Bivouac of the Dead," at Frankfort, Ky., in the year 1847. The occasion was the burial of the remains of Kentucky soldiers who fell upon the battlefield of Buena Vista, Mex.

Congress of the Confederate States met at Richmond, Va., in the year 1861, where the capital had been removed from Montgomery, Ala. Howell Cobb was president of the Congress.

The Lancer

THE greatest of all modern humorists is the blithe soul who told us that the Olympic Games would restore peace to the world: "promote a better understanding between nations" and so on.

It's true, in a way, that the nations have learned to understand one another better. But not just in a way he meant.

The truth is, if the games had lasted much longer they would have brought on another European war.

It's a question now which one they hate the most—France for her rotten sportsmanship or us for lugging home all the prizes.

At any rate, murder by some long and complicated agony is the kindest wish they cherish for either of us.

France's Mistake

FRANCE never should have attempted to manage an international sporting event of any kind.

It just isn't their stuff. In the bottom of their hearts they regard the whole idea of half-killing yourself to finish a race you know you have lost as silly sentimentality.

They have been trained too long in making commercial bargains.

Suzanne Lenglen, for instance, takes a good look at Helen Wills, the little California whirlwind, and in that look she knows that somebody has arrived who can take her championship away from her.

Suzanne is, personally, an excessively unattractive young lady. Her tennis celebrity is all that keeps the world from remembering that she is a very homely girl with a big nose. Her championship is all that stands between her and oblivion.

With what must be admitted as logic, she promptly decided that it would not be a good bargain to take the risk; so she announced that she was ill and backed out.

Meanwhile she goes on playing tennis just as vigorously as before in practice matches.

The Dog and Cat

THE French athletes seem to adopt the philosophy of the fighting tom cat.

A pit bulldog will hang on to the death but a tom cat will always excuse himself and go over the back fence when convinced that he has tackled the wrong kitty.

He can see no sense in carrying on a fight already lost. And who can say the tom cat is any the less desperate or ferocious fighter?

He just has more logic.

We have been trained to a bulldog line of athletes. According to our standards, the only way you can leave the field, once you have entered the contest, is to be carried out.

When Ad Fought On

A NOTABLE case that I recall was a fight between little Ad Wolgast, then the lightweight champion, of the world, and a boy named Tommy McFarland.

In one of the early rounds of the fight Wolgast broke his arm.

It was a slivering break that left a long jagged spear of bone sticking out from the flesh of his forearm.

He refused to stop, although fainting from pain.

The end of this shattered bone was so sharp that it kept jabbing into his leg as he fought on.

His seconds bound the broken arm to his side with tape so the broken bone, hanging limp and helpless at his side, couldn't stab his leg.

At the end of every round he fainted from the pain and was carried like a bag of grain to his corner. His seconds would let him lie there during the intermission in an unconscious state. As the bell rang they would give him a whiff of ammonia. Then he would stagger back into the fight.

He kept this up, fainting from pain at the end of every round, until he finally knocked out Tommy McFarland and won the fight.

From the French point of view such an ordeal for nothing but a sporting honor is absurd and sentimental and senseless.

She Wrote "Abie"

OF ALL the self-sufficient interviews I ever read on a printed page I recommend one in the American Magazine with Ann Nichols, the Georgia girl who wrote "Abie's Irish Rose."

This play was first produced in Los Angeles, where it stayed long enough to wreck forever our reputation for artistic taste and discrimination; then it went to New York, where it was greeted with a derisive sneer by the critics and tarried on and on. There is every reason to believe that this ill-favored brat of a drama will make $5,000,000, breaking all known theater records.

Ann apparently sees it merely as proof of genius. To read the interview one would think she had taught Shakespeare his job; and that "Abie's Irish Rose" was the crowning literary achievement of the ages.

I have met a lot of authors in my time. One curious fact stands out.

It is the authors of the crudest best sellers who think the best of themselves. Those who write real literature are often dubious and self-depreciatory. They usually do not think much of their own stuff. But the Marie Corellis of the world are in no doubt about it; they are dead certain that they are great artists; nothing to it.

I diplomatically pick out Marie Corelli because she lived a long way from here. There are others, nearer home.

The reason for the apparent anomaly is very plain.

The great artist—whether painter or writer—sees a glorious vision which he tries to transcribe—whether by brush or pen. And his heart is sick because he could not catch its fleeting shadows.

The crude best-seller hasn't much of a vision to begin with; and feels a naive smug satisfaction in setting down his crude dream in crude colors.

POLITICS

THE WATCHMAN

Trend of Political Thought and Action

—BY THE SENTRY ON HIS BEAT—

Expiration at midnight Thursday of the time for filing nominating petitions for the August primary election was attended by few departures from the expected. All told, more than 200 men and women in Los Angeles county—Republicans, Democrats, Prohibitionists, Socialists, and nonpartisans— filed their candidacies with the County Registrar of Voters for the State Legislature, Congress, State Supreme Court, Appellate Court, Superior Court, District Attorney, County Board of Supervisors, and party committees.

Undoubtedly, there will be a general feeling of gratification that no opposition in this county developed to the retention of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court Louis W. Myers, Associate Justices John W. Shenk and John E. Richards, and Justices Jesse W. Curtis and Lewis R. Works of the Appellate Court.

Their election now virtually is a matter of form. Seldom in the history of the California judiciary has there been a more striking or, in the opinion of The Watchman, a more fitting tribute to the worth and honesty of incumbent judges than that accorded these five occupants of the higher State courts. The failure of other aspirants to take the field against them must be accepted as conclusive evidence not only of the wholehearted indorsement of the bar of California, but of the tremendous confidence reposed in them by the people as a whole.

Incidentally, this remarkable indication of trust and approval indirectly sheds a distinct light of approbation upon the discrimination of Gov. Richardson, who appointed Myers, Shenk, Richards and Curtis to the places they occupy.

If the anticipated contests for the higher courts have simmered down to mere ratification affairs, however, the race for the fourteen vacancies on the Superior bench in this county will be all the more vigorous by reason of the small number of candidates entered for the available places.

In one contest, at least, for the unexpired term of Judge Myers, the race will end at the primaries, but two aspirants, Walter S. Gates and John J. Craig, being entered. It is even possible that but one of these candidates will be on the ballot after a formal check of their nominating petitions has been made. Three are entered for the unexpired term of Judge Shenk, Harry A. Hollzer, ad interim appointee, former Justice of the Peace Edward Judson Brown and Cornelius W. Pendleton.

For the long-term vacancies, there are twenty-six candidates, including eleven incumbents. Of the latter, Judges York and Valentine are seeking re-election, and Judges Burks, Keetch, Collier, Hardy, Fleming, Archbald, Shaw, Guerin and Thompson are seeking election to the posts to which they were appointed.

Several well-known attorneys and lower-court judges are among the list of those attempting to acquire a seat on the Superior bench, including Justice of the Peace Baird, former State Senator Henry M. Willis, former United States Commissioner Stephen G. Long, Police Judge Frederickson, Justice of the Peace J. Walter Hanby, Police Judge Hugh J. Crawford, and E. Marion Crawford.

It is probable that three or four judicial candidates, possibly more, will be elected in the primary.

Dist.-Atty. Keyes, who holds office by appointment from the County Board of Supervisors, has but one opponent, Police Judge Sheldon, and this contest, therefore, will be decided as between these two candidates in the primary.

Considerable interest attaches to this race. Police Judge Sheldon, comparatively unknown despite his service on the police bench for nearly two years, is one of the youngest aspirants to enter a race for the District Attorneyship here. He has accomplished results in his court work. His backing appears somewhat varied.

Mr. Keyes has not been regarded as a particularly strong candidate. His friends say, however, that he has been striving earnestly and honestly to improve conditions in his office and that success has crowned his efforts to an extent not generally known to the public at large.

The office of District Attorney is the most important, from many standpoints, in Los Angeles county and one of the most important in the State. Doubtless the people of the city and county will give strict attention to the arguments Messrs. Keyes and Sheldon will advance both in favor of their own candidacies and in derogation of the opposition.

In the Supervisorial division, where three vacancies occur, Supervisor J. H. Bean is unopposed; R. F. McClellan, chairman of the Board, is opposed by Walter L. Peck, and Supervisor Henry W. Wright is opposed by O. B. Manchester and Charles C. Fife. The re-election of Chairman McClellan, whose record in conducting the county's business affairs has won hearty commendation and whose candidacy for re-election was demanded not only by his own district constituents, but by the citizens of the county generally.

Congressman Lineberger of Long Beach, who represents the Ninth Congress District, appears to have no opposition. An aggressive committee has undertaken to handle his campaign during his absence in Europe on government business and despite the absence of a contest it is more than likely that a report of his work in Washington will be made by this organization to the Congressman's constituents.

Congressman John D. Fredericks, elected to complete the unexpired term of the late Congressman Osborne, and who consented to become a candidate for reelection only upon the insistent requests of a representative group of the influential men and women of the Tenth Congress District, is not opposed for the Republican nomination, but may possibly be forced to try conclusions with any one of three Democratic aspirants—Councilman Criswell, Patrick F. Kirby or Robert W. Richardson.

Congressman Fredericks, whose record of service in the last Congress is a remarkable one, will not personally campaign for re-election. He has submitted his candidacy on its merits and a committee of leading Republicans headed by Attorney Joe Crail will conduct his campaign.

A few changes are to be found in the line-up for the various State Senatorial and Assembly vacancies in this county.

State Senator Harry A. Chamberlin in the Thirty-first District is unopposed for the Republican nomination, but will face a Democratic opponent, Jay M. Love, in the November election.

Cadet Taylor, Republican of Pomona, and Carl E. Slatt, Democrat of Long Beach, will contest in the Thirty-third Senatorial district for the seat left vacant by the withdrawal of Senator Joseph A. Rominger, whose long and efficient service at Sacramento places the retiring official in the front rank of those who have fought for better governmental conditions in California during the last decade.

Five Republicans, H. E. Evans, Harry H. Taylor, George H. Wilber, Frank M. Smith and Freeman A. High; a Democrat, W. Fleet Palmer, former Assistant United States Attorney in this district, and a Socialist, Samuel Glass, are seeking election to the State Senate from the Thirty-Fifth District, formerly represented by the late Egbert J. Gates.

Newton M. Allen, incumbent in the Thirty-Seventh Senatorial District, is opposed by Henry M. Hurd, Republican, Newton Van Why, Democrat, and Gilbert L. Wilhite, Socialist.

Assemblyman Joseph L. Pedrotti, Frank Mouser and Vivian E. Linden are entered for the vacancy created by the withdrawal of Dwight Hart, incumbent, in the Twenty-ninth Senatorial District.

In the various Los Angeles county Assembly districts, the following incumbents are candidates for reelection: Frank C. Weller, Sixty-first; Sidney T. Graves, Sixty-third; Harry Lyons, Sixty-fourth; Eleanor Miller, Sixty-seventh; Frank F. Merriam, Seventieth; Henry E. Carter, Seventy-first; Willard E. Badham, Seventy-second; Frederick M. Roberts, Seventy-fourth.

Attorney Walter J. Little appears to have an edge on his two opponents in the Sixty-second Assembly District; Thomas L. Dodge, well-known hotel man, has no opposition in the Sixty-fifth District, formerly represented by Pedrotti; M. T. Poling is regarded as the strongest of five candidates entered in the race in the Sixty-sixth District; Howard W. Davis appears to enjoy a considerable advantage over his five rivals for election to the lower legislative house from the Seventy-third District, formerly represented by Elmer P. Bromley; Mark A. Pierce is assured of such support in the Seventy-fifth District as to give him a lead over his two opponents; Harry F. Sewell and Frank W. Forester will decide the issue in the Sixty-eight District, and there is a division of opinion as to the relative strength of Samuel M. Dudiext and Jerome V. Scofield.

State Senator E. P. Sample of San Diego, who is seeking the Republican nomination for Congressman in the Eleventh Congress District in opposition to Phil Swing, incumbent, continues to make such headway as to indicate the strong probability of his election.

The San Diego Senator has invaded the so-called Swing stronghold in San Bernardino and Riverside counties and received material indications, in the form of personal commitments and newspaper indorsements, of the popularity of his candidacy.

Inevitably, the contest between Swing and Sample has centered around the Colorado River-Boulder Canyon water conservation project and the Swing-Johnson bill and the aggressive attitude assumed on this subject by the San Diego Senator has placed the Congressman decidedly on the defensive.

And in Imperial Valley, where Swing had depended upon virtually unanimous support, sentiment has crystallized in favor of Sample on the very issue—Colorado flood control—which Swing planned to use as his chief issue.

This unexpected development is due in large part to a growing feeling in Imperial Valley and other sections of the Eleventh District that Swing's activities with regard to water conservation and flood control have been wholly political and of such a nature as to defeat the ends most desired by the farmers whom he was expected to represent.

A typical expression in this regard is voiced by the editor of The Date Palm, a weekly newspaper published at Indio in the Coachella Valley. The editorial follows:

"There will be a 'Swing to Sample' movement of voters in the Eleventh Congressional when the district as a whole learns that the people of the Imperial Valley are rapidly coming to a realization that it has been Swing who has spoiled the program of flood control and conservation of water development along the lower reaches of the Colorado River, instead of helping it. All of the people will realize that fact eventually, when they learn that the tacking of the All-American Canal impossibility onto the Boulder Canyon Dam project, immediately made it such a controversial subject that it effectively blocked it.

"Congressman Swing will be very fortunate instead, if he is able to carry his own county of Imperial, owing to this one issue, which has been the most misunderstood of any that has ever been before the people of the West. With its high sounding and patriotic suggestion one might readily believe that it is something not to be opposed excepting by the disloyal. As a matter of fact, men well informed upon all the details of the situation, state that the territory proposed to be served by the so-called All-American canal, couldn't afford to operate and pay the interest upon it, though it were given to the people free, not to mention the burden imposed by a bonded debt that would be anywhere from $32,000,000 to $50,000,000.

"Until Clarence Barton of Riverside, hired by the Imperial Valley Irrigation District to make a report upon the facts involved, disclosed the facts, the people of the Imperial Valley were living under the delusion that the future of the valley was dependent upon the All-American canal myth. Now they have suddenly come to a realization that it is the biggest mirage that ever deluded a desert people; and it has unnecessarily delayed one of the greatest projects for flood control and water conservation ever considered by the American people.

"The trouble in the past has been the guilible public has taken the Swing-Johnson bill at its face value as something beneficial. They have confused it with the whole Colorado River movement; and the man who had the temerity to oppose it was immediately looked upon as an alien enemy in league with Mexico or some great unseen menace that threatened the prosperity and happiness of all the people.

"This is the principal issue which has turned Congressman Swing's own county against him. That fact has not yet become generally known among the voters of the rest of the district. When it is, coupled with the knowledge that Swing is not friendly with President Coolidge's policies, that he has never been friendly to the economy and efficiency program of the State administration and that there is a candidate for Congress available of the high standing of Senator Edward P. Sample, there is assured a heavy anti-Swing vote at the August primary."

Wife Declares Liquor Pursued Them on Voyage

When it appeared that Demon Rum was getting the upper hand of Thomas Albert Tooey, wealthy former resident of Beverly Hills, he and his wife decided that what he needed was a long ocean voyage, during which he would be safe from temptation, Mrs. Margaret E. Tooey related in a divorce complaint on file yesterday.

So Tooey bought tickets for a trip through the canal and right there, according to Mrs. Tooey's story, some one blundered. For as she went aboard the ship, she glanced at the jack staff, and three fluttering in the breeze was the Union Jack.

Tooey's sobriety endured just twelve nautical miles, she asserted. Thereafter and for the balance of the voyage he was in his cups most of the time. In the Canal Zone, she declared, he enjoyed several notable sprees, all with the result of anxiety, worry and mental anguish on her part.

Their home in Beverly Hills she valued at $150,000 and asserted it has been leased at $800 monthly. She also listed a ranch near Paso Robles worth $162,000 and declared her husband owned securities returning an income of $1000 per month.

GRADING BIDS SOUGHT ON NEW HIGHWAY UNIT

ESTIMATED COST OF 5.15-MILE STRIP APPROXIMATES $115,000

Bids for the grading of the new Coast Highway between Corona, Del Mar and Laguna Beach are being advertised for by the State Highway Commission, Commissioner Edwards announced yesterday.

The work will require the grading of 5.15 miles, estimated to cost approximately $115,000. The bids are to be opened August 18.

According to the commissioner, the highway department and the county have reached an agreement whereby 2300 feet of roadway through Palmdale is to be widened to the curb and surfaced. Under the arrangement the county agrees to widen the street and the State will surface the area.

An additional $10,000 as an appropriation for the day labor gangs, now constructing the Coast Highway through the Rindge ranch, has been voted by the commission, Mr. Edwards said, at the request of the State engineers. The grading work on this section of the road should be finished within a year's time, according to the commissioner.

BOYS REVEL IN MOUNTAIN CAMP

Five Hundred Scouts, Rangers Live Among Hills

Radford and Seeley Thrown Open for Fortnight

Big Bear, Arrowhead Lakes Explored; City Host

Have you missed your newsy lately—the clever lad next door—the gang of fellows who usually play ball in the street after supper? Ten chances to one any or all of these are among the 500 Boy Scouts and Western Rangers who have had full sway at Camp Radford and Camp Seeley, the two municipal camps which were thrown open to these Los Angeles boys for one glorious fortnight.

Under the able leadership of E. B. DeGroot, chief camp executive and his assistants, C. H. Hannason, L. E. Hoffman and Murray Lee, 250 Boy Scouts have been introduced into the lore of the mountains at Camp Radford, four miles from Big Bear Lake. An equal number of Western Rangers have made Camp Seeley their headquarters for the camping period, taking their excursions into the region about Arrowhead Lake.

Picturesque groups these boys make as they go about their many activities in the mountains, the Scouts in their khaki uniforms and the rangers in their striking costumes consisting of overall trousers, lumberjack shirts, bandana neckerchiefs, and Ranger hats. Regular hours, something to do every minute and absolute discipline and courtesy are factors which enter into the making of these boys into the unqualified successes they are fast becoming.

"ANOTHER DAY DAWNS"

For the Western Rangers at Camp Seeley, the day begins with the imperative note of a brass gong, followed by the rising summons sounding out on the clear morning air, "Western Rangers, awake, open your eyes, arise—another day has dawned—be joyous—be glad—."

For the Scouts, reveille is sounded by the camp bugler.

Setting-up exercises on the athletic field, a quick dip into the cold water of the swimming pools and then the race to dress for breakfast stirs up real boy appetites for the porridge, bacon and eggs, hot muffins, prunes and chocolate served on the breakfast menu at 7:30.

At the Scout camp, inspection of cabins and cleanliness of the Scouts, formation at the flag pole and raising of the colors precede breakfast. The hours from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. are largely "go as you please." The camp bank is open for one hour when Scouts may procure the limited amount of spending money they are alloted for each day. Scout tests and instruction, fishing, hiking, games, sports, necessary laundry work and the return of lost and found articles make this a busy period. Swimming periods for beginners and advanced swimmers and swimming tests occupy the rest of the morning. The usual afternoon schedule is much the same as that of the morning. Tournament play in tennis, quoits and baseball usually comes in the twilight period after the early supper with the camp-fire entertainment at 7:30 and taps at 9:30 p.m.

WORKING FOR HONORS

Boys at both camps are busy working for honors during their stay in the mountains. Sleeping out-of-doors, increased proficiency in roping and swimming, with able instruction in both these lines, nature study, reports on observations made, study of the stars through telescopes are among the things which add to the glory of a Scout or a Ranger. The Rangers also have a silence test to which candidates for membership in the various clans are submitted before he is considered a full-fledged member. For several hours these initiates go about camp with their red bandanas tied firmly over their mouths, speaking not a word. This does not necessarily mean that they do not communicate with their fellows—every sort of sign language from the deaf and dumb signals to writing in the dirt is employed for making wants known.

Rangers and Scouts are excellent fishermen and find much opportunity to display their skill in the streams near the camps. Indeed, one Ranger succeeded in landing a 16-nch trout with an improvised line and a blanket safety pin for a hook, to the intense chagrin of the most expert fisherman in the vicinity of Camp Seeley (Billy Martin, camp cook) who had been angling for that very fish for three months.

Kitchen police duty is one of the experiences to which new Rangers and Scouts have to be introduced. Dish washing for a camp of 250 is no small undertaking, but under trained supervision and with boy leaders in charge of each crew, the work progresses with rapidity. One amenity for the K.P.'s—they are the first in the servng line.

CAMP FIRE POWWOW

Camp fire entertainments in the lodge before the roaring fire or about an open camp fire in the pow wow center is the regular evening occurrence. Clever demonstrations of skill along many lines, improvised skits, delivery of the mail, singing of camp songs and story telling make this period fly. In addition to their evening assembly the Rangers have two other council meetings during the day when their chiefs give out necessary information and instructions.

The special hikes which are taken by parties of Scouts are to Big Bear Lake, Barton Flats, Mt. Gorgonio and Forsee Falls. From Camp Seeley the Western Rangers take excursions to Saw Pit Canyon, the Mojave River and Lake Arrowhead.

In explaining the aim of the Summer camps, Scout Executive De-Groot has said, "The purpose of the Los Angeles Boy Scout Summer Cocation Camp is to furnish an opportunity for joyous living, the fullest self-expression and the pursuit of all things dear to the heart of a boy. But no boy will be permitted to infringe upon the rights of others, slump in manners or morale, or fail in prompt and full obedience to properly constituted authority."

It is in accordance with the spirit of this declaration that both the Western Ranger Camp and the Boy Scout Camp are being conducted this year.

CITY CONTROLS CAMPS

Although granting the boys the courtesy of the exclusive use of each of the camps for two weeks, the Los Angeles Playground Department reserves the complete control of the camps which are operated under its jurisdiction. The same staff remains in charge during boys' weeks as at other times in the summer, with the boys' leaders in charge of those things which pertain to the boys alone. Miss Iva French is director at Camp Seeley and Miss Mildred Wiley is in charge of Camp Radford. These two directors with their staffs of paid and volunteer assistants co-operate in every way with the men in charge of the boys to give the most enjoyable and beneficial vacations to the hundreds of boys who avail themselves of this opportunity.

During the one week-end that the boys are in camp a large number of parents are entertained and shown the sort of an outing their sons are receiving. Several of the Western Rangers' directors were also week-end guests at Camp Seeley.

For Boy Scouts who were unable to attend this camp because of work or summer school, another outing has been planned at Camp Seeley from August 25 to September 6. The fee for the Camp Radford outing, including transportation from Los Angeles, food and housing is $17. The charge at Camp Seeley for the two weeks is $15.50.

OTHER OUTINGS, TOO

Other outings which are scheduled for the two camps, all of which will be open to any residents of Los Angeles who care to take them, at the same prices paid by the boys, are as follows: Camp Seeley—the 21st inst. to August 2; August 4 to August 16; August 18 to August 30; September 1 to September 13; September 15 to September 27. Camp Radford—the 14th to the 26th inst., the 28th inst. to August 9; August 11 to August 23; August 25 to September 6; September 8 to September 20.

HAWAII WOOS LOCAL CAPITAL

Chance in Pineapples, Says Lacy, Head of Chamber

Plantation Canneries Beckon to Cash in Southland

Invasion of Islands Means Boost for Harbor

There are untold opportunities for Los Angeles capital in the pineapple industry in the Hawaiian Islands, according to President Lacy of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, who has just returned to Los Angeles along with about 400 other Chamber members from a trade excursion to the islands.

"All the land suited to the growing of sugar cane is practically taken up by pioneers who have preceded Los Angeles capital," declares Mr. Lacy, "but it is reasonable to believe that if local interests would go to the Hawaiian Islands and invest a little capital in the pineapple business, establishing a cannery to serve their plantations, it would mean more freight for lines now operating between the islands and Los Angeles Harbor.

"I cannot help feeling that those people over there will send all the freight that we can handle from Honolulu to this market. Especially will they do so if we try to consume what they produce. We can develop, I believe, to a large extent the banana business and take it away from those who have been shipping from New Orleans across the continent to us. I believe this trade rightfully belongs to Los Angeles.

GOOD BUSINESS CHANCE

"The pineapple business in the way of fresh fruit also can be developed. As far as canneries are concerned, they must be taken over by capitalists who will build them. Everything else in that line now is owned by capitalists in San Francisco.

"When the Chamber of Commerce excursionists, nearly 400 strong, arrived in the islands, we sensed some doubt on the part of the people as to whether we had come to take away from them something in the way of business which they had already built up. But we talked to them and were not long in assuring them that such was not the case and that we had come merely as wooers.

"This last excursion, I believe, removed the last bit of doubt as to our true purpose in visiting the islands. We told them that we were there for their good as well as our own and that we were not going to take away from them the business that had been built up by our neighbors in the northern city. We told them that we were there from the most wonderful tourists' city in the world, visited by people who would be glad to visit the Hawaiian Islands on the palatial liner City of Los Angeles.

DOUBTS SET AT REST

"We told them of how the attraction to tourists was all we had to offer at one time and how the building of the Raymond Hotel by the Santa Fe in 1886 had started a flood of tourists toward Los Angeles. These statements showed them that our purpose was a bighearted one and that Los Angeles intended to help the islands grow as it had grown. Words cannot describe the hospitality of the residents of Hawaii.

"Nor can they describe the beauty that the islands possess. It is a beauty that beggars description. We of Southern California boast of the beauties of our country, and rightfully we can. But the Hawaiian Islands are another Southland. They form a vacationland of which everyone should take advantage. Six days across the placid Pacific; out of sight of automobiles and out of hearing of telephones; deck parties like garden fetes; swimming parties in a salt water plunge on the decks of the liner, and finally the islands themselves to enjoy the comraderie of fellow-passengers of the voyage across—these make up a vacation which one can ill afford to miss."

FATHER ARRIVES JUST TOO LATE

Daughter of St. Louis Man Wins Race to Altar

Irate Parent Smiles After He Meets Hubby

All is Forgiven and Young Folks Return Home

SPRINGFIELD, (Ill.) July 19. J. B. Ehrhart, St. Louis, ended a wild chase in search of his daughter at the Leland Hotel here when he found she had eloped with Rudolph Schubert, also of St. Louis, to East St. Louis, then came to Springfield on her honeymoon.

Ehrhart, a St. Louis real estate man, accompanied by his son, appeared at the Leland Hotel before daybreak and said he was looking for his daughter, Ruth, 18 years of age. Jack Walsh, criminal investigator for Sheriff Lemon was summoned. He found the girl and Schubert registered as man and wife.

Walsh and E. J. Perry, manager of the hotel, warned the father and son to keep a safe distance away and they knocked on the door of the room. The groom answered. Walsh explained his mission and Schubert produced his marriage certificate.

The drawn face of the St. Louis man eased and a smile showed beneath his tear-dimmed eyes. His daughter appeared on the scene, shouting:

"Oh, papa, I'm so happy."

Daddy kissed her and forgave.

The father informed his new son-in-law and daughter that his wife was frantic at her home in St. Louis.

"If Mrs. Ehrhart feels that way about it, we must go to her at once," Schubert told his bride. "We can finish the honeymoon later."

They called Mrs. Ehrhart on the telephone, explained matters and told her to have the wedding dinner ready. The parties returned to St. Louis by automobile.

"We went to East St. Louis and found the slowest justice," the bride said. "He just talked and talked about everything. Finally we were married and started for Springfield. We thought father would be after us, but arrived some time before he did."

"Oh, father, isn't this exciting," she said as he entered the automobile to return home.

J. B. Ehrhart, father of the bride, is the owner of the J. B. Ehrhart Real Estate Company. The bridegroom, Schubert, is 24 years of age and is connected with the Mancha Storage Battery Locomotive Company. The young couple will continue the interrupted honeymoon, which will include a two weeks' trip on the Great Lakes. They will make their home in St. Louis.

WHAT KIND OF IRON HAVE YOU BEEN TAKING?

The Newer Compound of Iron Containing Organic Iron Like the Iron in Your Blood, or Ordinary Metallic or Mineral Iron—It's Important to Know the Difference—How to Tell.

A child must have lime to make bone, but it gets organic lime from milk and not mineral lime from lime rocks. So the millions of red blood corpuscles in your blood must have iron, but nature put food iron—not mineral iron—for your blood in the husks of grains and the peels and skins of vegetables; modern methods of cookery throw them all away, hence the alarming increase in anaemia—iron starvation of the blood, with the devitalizing weakness, nervousness and other attendant ills it brings. You should either go back to nature or take the newer form of food iron to make up for this great loss and maintain your bodily and mental vigor. The iron that people usually take is mineral or metallic iron and is made merely by the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron. The newer form of iron is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in the husks of grains and peels of vegetables. It is so prepared that it is ready for almost immediate absorption and assimilation by your blood, while some physicians claim mineral iron is not absorbed at all. This newer form of iron may be had from your druggist under the name of Nuxated Iron. It costs much more to make Nuxated Iron than it does to make mineral or metallic iron. But when your health is at stake, get the best. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain perfectly satisfactory results. For sale by all druggists.

ELECTRICITY TAKES JOYRIDE

Current Skids by Order of State Power Supervisor; Pooled in Face of Shortage Crisis

Electricity is taking the joyride of its life today—by order of the power supervisor. And by that same command, which overnight has comes nearest to equaling the monarchical dictums of medieval kings, millions of people and billions of dollars are directly concerned.

H. G. Butler

By order of the power supervisor electricity now is flashed around the State in a weird crisscross of currents. The sitting-room light in a Los Angeles home is lit by a conglomerate mixture of power generated from high Sierra lake water, Long Beach steam plants, sugar mills of Orange county, gas engines of an irrigation pump, a cement mixer somewhere, a farm tractor 500 miles away and assisted by the moon.

The intense spotlight playing on a magician while he does his cunning before a downtown vaudeville audience is itself a slight-of-hand trick. It is a hybrid affair of at least a triple parentage, yet by the manipulations of a prestidigitator the light has all the qualities it formerly exhibited.

By order of the power supervisor livelihood, habits and pleasures of millions of people in Southern California are directly concerned; machinery for which some $250,000,000 has been invested is vitally affected; nine large electric utility companies and twelve smaller ones are operating their entire resources under regulations which the power supervisor directs, and agricultural, industrial, mercantile and amusement activities, in addition to all domestic consumption, abide by the rules laid down by the office.

POWER IN POWER CZAR

This is the way they have put the word power in power supervisor. And while it is the most powerful position in all of California today its strength lies only in co-operation. Should the authority of the office be questioned there probably is not a court anywhere in the State which could not wipe out the force of the dictatorship.

On June 26, last, the State Railroad Commission, after being advised that the Southern California Edison Company would have to curtail the distribution of its power because of lack of available water for generating hydroelectric energy, created the position of power supervisor and vested the office with royal authority.

Then followed a remarkable campaign for co-operation with the result that the twenty-one electric power companies, competitors only a month ago, pooled their power to save the situation.

Before this was done consumers on the Edison lines were confronted with a 37 per cent curtailment. Today the city supply of current has been reduced 25 per cent and the balance has been distributed generally over the entire portion of the State affected. Companies with surplus power have curtailed their distribution to assist in making up deficits on other lines. Privately owned plants, many of which have laid idle for several years, now are in operation turning out additional energy to meet the shortage.

And out of this has come electrical hash. Units in every part of the State, in the San Joaquin Valley, the high Sierras and in practically every Southern California county, are supplying current. In Los Angeles three separate companies are supplying power and in the process of making it uniform it is magically transformed so as to make the characteristics of all companies conform.

ONE QUARTER BOUGHT

The Edison company, according to the latest report, is buying approximately one-quarter of the power it distributes. Of this purchased amount the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company supplies nearly half. The remainder is made up from Pasadena, San Diego, Riverside, the Anaheim Sugar Company, Los Alamitos Sugar Company, Standard Oil Company and the Santa Ana Sugar Company.

And the man behind all this with plenary powers extraordinary is Harry C. Butler, a San Francisco consulting engineer, who was appointed power supervisor by the Railroad Commission. During the World War he held the same position for the State. He has been called the power czar, power boss, power dictator and officially designated as power supervisor. But he is more the power diplomat. Every branch of the activity which has fallen under his direction bears testimony to the fact that his orders, while firm, have been accomplished by great consideration for the interests affected.

The present supervisor was associated with the Railroad Commission until 1921. He graduated from the University of Illinois in 1906.

In 1911 he went to Panama for the government to take charge of the railroad yards in the Canal Zone during the construction of the canal. Upon its completion he joined the staff of the Railroad Commission.

SUPPORT OF GUARD URGED

Civic and Commercial Organizations Ask Members to Give Employees Camp Time Off With Pay

Support of the One Hundred and Sixtieth Infantry, California National Guard, is requested of members of leading civic and commercial organizations here in a communication signed by heads of the various bodies.

This support, the communication states, may be given effectively during the two-weeks' training period of the regiment in camp at Del Monte, August 1 to 16, next, by allowing employees who belong to the regiment to go for two weeks with pay. That form of encouragement, it is said, is followed by the State, county, city and many private business concerns.

Organizations that have voiced support of the regiment and its camp are: Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, Better American Federation, Wholesale Dry Goods Association, Chamber of Commerce, Clearinghouse Association, Retail Drygoods Association and the Realty Board.

The letter, appealing for support of the regiment, follows:

"From August 1 to August 16, inclusive, the One Hundred and Sixtieth Infantry goes to camp for two weeks' training, under the supervision of selected officers of the Regular Army. The encampment is a vital adjunct to the training which has made your regiment an effective unit in the plan of national defense adopted by Congress.

"The One Hundred and Sixtieth Infantry is fully organized and completely equipped for instant service in case of national or local catastrophe of any kind requiring the service of protection by organized military effort. It is the only organized regiment in California, in United States service, located south of San Francisco.

"Your moral and physical support is urged. Perhaps a member of your regiment is in your employ—he should go to camp—give him two-weeks' vacation for this purpose and commend the good work he is doing for you, your family and your business interests.

"The State, the city and the county, and many Los Angeles business interests give to members of their organizations belonging to this regiment, two weeks for camp, with pay, plus their regular vacation, with pay.

It is the sincere wish of the of the organization of which you are a member that you do everything within your power to encourage and help your regiment—it is a wonderful body of men—it stands among the best in the United States—it deserves your support."

YES, WHISKERS GROW IN SEA

Japanese Ship Brings in Fifteen Tons of 'em Cut from Ocean Floor; Hirsute Substitute, in Rough State as Agar-Agar, on Way to Factories in Nippon

False whiskers, as worn by screen heavies and such, come from the bottom of the sea.

Fifteen tons of them, clipped from the floor of the Pacific by Japanese divers, came into Los Angeles Harbor yesterday aboard the Japanese motorship, Suma II, for trans-shipment to Japan.

If the false whisker market is slow, they will return to America some months hence as gelatine, isinglass or in the form of kouri cakes, a tasty Japanese confection.

In the rough state, as it arrived here yesterday, the shipment was a cargo of agar-agar, a gelatinous sea grass growing on the bed of the Pacific off the Lower California coast. A year ago a Tokio firm sent fifty expert deep-sea divers and 100 assistant to Ensenada and established an operating base. At present 500 tons a month are being cut off the rocks 100 feet beneath the surface, packed and sent to Japan via this port for manufacture.

The finer quality of agar-agar goes to the whisker trade, explains Capt. Hiroichi Uyeda of the Suma II. The remainder is ground up for gelatine to make high explosives, isinglass or fancy cakes and medicine.

Tank Car Haul Rate Protested by Oil Shippers

Six oil companies operating in Southern California complained to the State Railroad Commission yesterday that the Santa Fe for two years has been collecting excessive rates for the transportation of crude oil in tank cars from producing points near Santa Fe Springs to refining points near Los Angeles. The companies are the East-West Refining Company, Harbor Refining Company, Hercules Gasoline Company, J. W. Jameson Corporation, Sierra Refining Company and the Wilshire Oil Company.

The commission is asked to fix an equitable rate for the service and to award reparations for the amounts collected during the last two years in excess of the proposed rate.

It is asserted that the rate of 5 cents per 100 pounds in effect prior to February 15, 1923, and the rate of 4 cents per 100 pounds collected from February 15 to April 26, 1923, were excessive. The companies now collect 3 cents per 100 pounds for this haul.

HUMOR MAKES WORLD KIN

The "Times" "Local Laugh" Film Fame Circling Globe; Joke Mailed in from Czecho-Slovakia

If that widely known verse had read "one touch of humor makes the whole world kin," it would apply to The Times' popular "Local Laugh" film which rapidly is extending the boundaries of its fame, and promises to create for itself an international reputation.

Yesterday's mail brought a letter plastered with the curious postage stamps of far-off Czecho-Slovakia. The writer, Charles Adamek, living in Frydek, Dolni, ul. 72, had read the The Times' "Local Laugh" film, and decided that the brand of humor they have over there can hold its own with the Southern California variety any day.

Should the committee of judges, which selects jokes for the film, agree with Mr. Adamek and award him, for example, the first prize of $5, it would amount at the present rate of exchange to approximately 150 crowns—enough to buy a suit of clothes in Czecho-Slovakia.

Local humorists also are working their wits overtime creating laughs for The Times' screen weekly. The last week has brought a greater avalanche of mail to the "Local Laugh" editor's desk than at any time since the wit and humor weekly made its bow to the public.

"Local laughs" is exhibited each week at Loew's State Theater, Los Angeles, beginning on Saturdays, and thereafter at many other theaters in adjoining cities and towns, as well as in Los Angeles and suburbs. A complete list of theaters is given in the "Local Laugh" coupon printed elsewhere.

Every reader of The Times has a standing invitation to contribute jokes and witticisms to this film—as many as they wish and as often as they care to—the only requirement being that jokes must not exceed thirty words each.

For the best joke each week a $5 cash prize is given; the second and third best jokes receive $3 and $2 respectively; and twelve others $1 each.

And here is perhaps the most interesting part of the competition: The names and addresses of winners appear with their creations on the screen. No announcement of winners is made in The Times, this being done on the film itself. After the film has been released prizes are mailed out.

Owing to the large volume of mail, it is impossible to acknowledge contributions, nor can manuscripts be returned. Those who wish to preserve their jokes should keep copies.

Jokes may be written on coupons printed in The Times—one appears each day—or on separate sheets of paper, with name and address on each sheet.

TWO HELD ON CHARGE OF HORSE STEALING

Horse stealing is not yet entirely a lost art in California, according to officers who yesterday arrested T. E. Davis and H. B. Moxley on a charge of stealing two horses they had rented from the Griffith Park Riding Academy. The old California law making horse stealing a capital offense having been abolished, the men are charged with grand larceny.

CURES FOR JAGS STILL THRIVING

institutions of learning (for one learns much in a liquor cure) are as jealous as the graduates of Yale and Harvard of one another, and the feelings of neither must be injured by noxious comparisons.

The local Keeley faculty says that before the war there were eighty-odd institutes, branches of the fountain head at Dwight, Ill. Now, they say, there are from forty to fifty branches, but they declare these branches are doing a greater sum total of business than the eighty before the war. The numerical reduction, it is explained, was due to the economic shake-up produced by the war and not by prohibition. The Neal institutes were sixty-eight in number before the war, says Mr. Neal; they were almost all put out of business by prohibition. Those are conflicting facts.

DR. BROWN RETICENT

Dr. W. M. Brown sat yesterday in an arm chair on the steps of the Keeley Institute at 1305 South Westmoreland avenue, and allowed that he was tired. Tired, he said, because he has been running Keeley institutes for thirty-six years, the oldest man in point of service in the Keeley system, and one who probably has treated more alcoholics than any other man in the United States.

"I am really too tired to talk much," said Dr. Brown, and he looked tired. But he sat and listened and now and then said something while his associate, Dr. J. B. Thompson, was being interrogated.

"It appears to me," said Dr. Thompson, who speaks very methodically, "it appears to me that statistics on this liquor question are more unreliable than reliable. We have no neutral to look into the matter; we have only the wets and drys who color their propaganda. Now, in the matter of whether there is more or less drinking since prohibition, all we know is that the business of the Keeley institutes is greater, the Los Angeles institute about double. You see some men just quit drinking of their own accord; we do not hear of them. Some drink in secret and nobody knows they drink. Some go to institutes for the treatment of alcoholism, but drink afterward just the same. After all, we find that much of the success of the work depends on the will power of the individual; these treatments are merely aids to will power. We do not encourage treatment for persons who are forced by their friends or families to take the treatment against their own will."

Dr. Thompson was interrupted here by one of the patients, who had arrived that morning and who had been listening from the doorway, a much sunburned man who had come all the way from the Mexican border and who was not yet cold sober.

"Excuse me, gents," said this gentleman, who, turning to the two physicians, continued: "You don't know what you're talkin' about. Now, I'm a practical drinkin' man; I've drunk in all parts of the United States. I know conditions. I'll have to leave; I just can't listen to this; you don't know what you're talkin' about. There was more drinkin' before the war, and I tell you there has been more drinkin' since the war, also."

After this illustration of the inevitable conflict between experience and theory, Dr. Thompson, without the slightest sign of irritation, continued:

"Regarding the comebacks, that is those who are not properly benefited by the treatment, it is my impression, but I have no figures to prove it, that there are more since the war. It is not a difference of temptation, but the effect of the bad liquor on the nervous system. Have You Ever Seen Niloak Pottery Made?

Niloak pottery—from clay long hidden in the foothills of the Ozarks! Niloak pottery—no two pieces alike, though 50,000 have already found their own particular niche in the beautiful homes of the world.

Niloak is moulded from clays in the natural colors which Mother Earth gives them. A single piece holds the colors of the Grand Canyon—the tints of a sunset! Rich creams, dull browns, warm reds, a tinge of slate, a bit of rose.

The potter starts each piece with all his colors, but each piece finds them in a different form, which is the reason there are no two pieces of Niloak alike. This makes Niloak a delight to collect and affords a delightsome and inexpensive collecting hobby!

Watch the colorful beauty of a bowl take place! See the vases take graceful form in the hands of the potter.

Women's & Misses' Apparel Has Moved to the Third Floor

When the rearrangement of this floor is complete, it will be one of the show-places of Los Angeles—an entire floor of this great building, devoted solely to women's, misses' and juniors' outerwear, millinery and furs.

At present, however, the women's and misses' departments will occupy a somewhat contracted space until the balance of the floor can be cleared and fixtures erected. Consequently, our patrons may be inconvenienced—for which we apologize. The condition is only temporary, and the magnificent store which will result after all the changes are made will, we hope, compensate for all the discomforts resulting from this year of many "moving days."

The Half-Price Sale Continues

in both the women's and misses' wear sections. Hundreds of desirable coats, suits and dresses have been halved in price for clearance. And by half-price, we mean half of the latest marked price—in other words, if a garment had been reduced prior to the beginning of the Half-Price Sale, you can buy it now at HALF OF THE REDUCED PRICE.

The Fur Department has also moved to the Third Floor, adjoining the apparel.

MISSION TRIO IS KHJ TREAT

Julie Kellar Company from San Juan Capistrano Pleases; Selected Whitney Boys' Quartet Sings

BY CLAIRE FORBES CRANE

The glories of San Juan Capistrano were carried from KHJ to eager listeners through the courtesy of Mrs. J. L. Hunter of San Juan Inn, San Juan Capistrano. The excellent program presented the Julie Kellar Trio, composed of Julie Keller, harpist; Lucy Fuhrer Genter, 'cellist, and Bessie Fuhrer Erb, violinist; with the added artist, E. Emmett Flood, baritone.

To say that the Julie Keller Trio interprets each ensemble number with a tone as closely woven as tapestry and as colorful as a rare oriental rug would be merely repeating what has been said of this excellent trio on previous occasions. True to the standards Julie Keller has set the program last night was brilliant in its luster, perfectly proportioned in its variety and artistic in the manner in which it was rendered.

Julie Keller contributed several harp solos with an individuality of interpretation that left her hearers impatiently awaiting her next effort. The other two members of the trio, Lucy Fuhrer Genter, 'cellist, and Bessie Fuhrer Erb, violinist, shared honors with their leader by their rendition of selections from the classics. E. Emmett Flood, in addition to a splendid baritone voice, displayed his sense of the dramatic in several readings.

Upon conclusion of this program six members of the Whitney Boys' Chorus, which is giving a concert at the Hollywood Bowl Monday evening, presented a program consisting of a vocal quartet and a duet of trombone and cornet, and Alex Gubanyi, boy contralto. The quartet was composed of Ashley Dees, Maurice Carleton, Bill Shuler and Theron Dees, the four best voices selected from the Whitney chorus totaling 150 voices. The trombone and cornet duet was played by Harvey and Harry Clemons, twin brothers.

Continuing his task of idealizing to the multitudes of Radioland the events in America's past, Prof. Walter Sylvester Hertzog delivered another romantic tale of American history. Vivian Marple, 10-year-old reader pupil of Zella Dodge, read several short stories in a delightful fashion. She was followed by Evelyn Woods, 6-year-old pianist, who played two solos. Paul Gemilere, but 5 years of age, sang three numbers in a manner somewhat beyond his years. The children's hour was brought to a close by Uncle John's bedtime story.

In the majority of cases in this modern age dance orchestras are created by material selected from the ranks of established musicians. In this case we find a dance orchestra which has grown slowly but steadily into an enviable position by sheer devotion to their work. This group of young men, who have not yet reached the voting age, appeared yesterday noon at KHJ under the name of the Long Beach Californians. This aggregation, which has been heard many times by Radioland, is under the management of R. M. Moore, Jr., and is composed of Herbert Chase, leader and violin; Bob Rockwell, pianist; Reg Banks, saxophone and clarinet; Jerry Bryant, saxophone and clarinet; William Gray, banjo; Art Thompson, drums; Martin Heflin, trumpet, and Don Gilkerson, trombone.

FRUIT PUNCH FACTORY TO BE ERECTED

Mission Orange Juice to be Made in Enterprise Street Plant

Through J. E. Hennessey, vice-president and general manager of the Mission Orange Punch Company, Inc., it was announced this week that his company has purchased the property located at 2465 Enterprise street, on which will be erected a one-story class C brick factory and warehouse for the purpose of manufacturing and distributing Mission orange juice. Special machinery will be installed to care for extracting the juice and packing.

The Mission company was founded in 1917 by Carl Glattner of Long Beach. From its first store the business has grown until there are four retail stores in Los Angeles and today Mission orange punch finds a market in practically every State. An exceptional market has sprung up for this Los Angeles product in the ice cream business of America and the company plans to specialize in this field.

Negotiations for the purchase of the Enterprise-street property were conducted by E. R. Knerr, manager of the industrial department of the W. Ross Campbell Company, business property brokers. Ground for the new building will be broken shortly.

Engineer Uses Water Spout as Invisible Aerial

One day a Washington telephone subscriber and a fan called WCAP requesting the services of a radio engineer and one was sent to his house.

The subscriber, who had just moved into a fine new city house, desired an invisible aerial. The expert asked why he did not use an inside loop. He was informed that, although the set might operate well with a loop antenna, the owner desired maximum distance and consequently wanted an outside aerial. "But," he admonished, "it must not show; this house is the pride of both myself and the architect and we do not want unsightly aerials overhead."

Realizing the impracticability of installing a real aerial without its showing, the engineer climbed to the roof to look over the arrangement of the eves and chimneys, hoping he could string an aerial that would not be seen from the street below. He found this impossible. Ready to give up, he was crawling down over the gutter when he made a discovery. He descended, inspected the down spout and gutters all around the house, then climbed back and soldered the lead into the down spout. Inside he hooked up and tuned in several stations with fine results. He called the owner, who was delighted and wanted to see the aerial.

"There isn't any," replied the expert. "You have a very fine copper gutter, completely insulated from the house by a slate roof, and other nonconductors; even the down spout leads into a terra-cotta pipe. So I soldered a lead into the down spout just outside your library window and there you are. Incidentally, it's probably the first invisible aerial," he added.

TRAVELER LISTENS IN ON KHJ ON JOURNEY

Having just returned from a three weeks' vacation, which took him through the Owens Valley and as far north as Lake Tahoe, C. A. Bergh of Los Angeles wished to express the pleasure he was afforded by KHJ programs on a one-tube set, and he wrote, in part, as follows: "My set that I took along for this purpose is a one-tube set with dry batteries; my aerial is installed under my auto top and consists of forty feet of ordinary bell wire; my ground is the body of the car, and with this outfit I was able to hear KHJ clearly and loudly at all times after 8 p.m. Many campers would be interested to learn how to get reception while out and I find that they overlook many things that should be taken into consideration, for instance, many of them set up under trees and expect to receive; this I have never been able to accomplish, and I always try to get in the open when possible."

MOTORIST IS JAILED IN ATTACK ON WOMAN

Mark Hanna Strong of 821 Hillvale avenue, Laguna Park, was arrested yesterday by Motorcycle Officers Watkins and Rock after he is said to have attempted to attack Mrs. May Redwine of 908 Johns street, Belvedere. It is charged that Strong overtook Mrs. Redwine in his automobile, leaped from the car and tore her sweater from her. A pedestrian, L. W. Eckhardt of 1206 South Ford street, Belvedere, witnessed the attack and hailed the two motorcycle officers. They sped up and placed Strong under arrest. He was lodged in the County Jail and deputies are investigating his past record.

CANDIDATES TO USE RADIO, IS PREDICTION

Before the campaigns are fully launched we shall see that campaign managers have laid plans for broadcasting the speeches of their candidates and auxiliary speakers, wherever arrangements can be made with broadcasting stations, and again we will tune in to hear what we shall hear.

Every fan in the country also will prepare to listen in when the polls close on November 4. The returns will be gathered directly from precincts in all the States. It is foreseen that broadcasters will co-operate with local papers or precinct headquarters and election boards so as to carry minute-by-minutes bulletins on returns. Those who do not possess sets of their own will join the crowds in front of newspaper offices where loud speakers will be active.

AIR SERVICE RADIO LIGHT AND COMPACT

The recently demonstrated Army air service radio transmitting and receiving set for observation planes is remarkable for its lightness, weighing only 110 pounds without the batteries. It is also compact, as all airplane sets have to be, and provides for both sending and receiving. It is shut down by a single three-way switch in the observer's cockpit. A remote-control switch also operates the transmitting power plant when thrown by the operator.

The transmitter, which is composed of three major parts, uses four tubes and a master-oscillator circuit, and has a wave band of approximately 500 kcs. Three means of sending signals are provided: telephone, telegraph with cw, and telephone with icw, with a number of various pitched tones.

ANGEL CITY GAINS NEW GLASS FIRM

Ruby Product for Motor and Signal Lights Will be Manufactured

The addition of still another glass factory to Los Angeles' long and rapidly growing list of works of that type was announced last week by H. W. Shepard, chemical expert for the Chamber of Commerce.

The newcomer is the Sunset Glass Company, which has located at 4001 Goodwin avenue. W. C. Williams, general manager, expects to have the plant in operation by August 15, according to Mr. Shepard.

The company will produce ruby glass at first, made up into automobile tail and stop lights, lantern globes and signal lenses. It will also turn out opal street-lighting ball globes. These have not been made in Los Angeles heretofore, according to Mr. Shepard. Illuminating glassware constitutes an important classification for which there is a large market on the Pacific Coast.

RADIO WINS MANY BOYS FROM PLAY

Baseball and Marbles Give Way to Operation of Wireless Sets

It has been said of Dr. Lee DeForest, inventor, who made possible radio broadcasting and receiving, that he has changed the bedtime regulations of the nation. Children no longer cry themselves to sleep—they doze off to a bedtime story or to the tuneful melody of the latest musical selection. Their parents play less bridge, do less dancing and remain more at home than they ever did. Boys play less marbles and fewer baseball games, spending the hours instead in putting together and taking apart radio sets, "tuning in" and talking in a language that resembles Kickapoo Indian to one unfamiliar with radio terms.

Dr. DeForest receives many letters from boys each day from various parts of the country, asking questions of every kind. And, although he is one of the busiest men he tries to answer them all, giving advice and encouraging the boys.

"I believe that the interest displayed by the boys in radio will have a great interest in their future lives," says Dr. DeForest. "It is really amazing the amount of knowledge many of the boys display on the subject of radio. It used to be that boys talked mostly about 'shinny,' 'playin' hookey' and 'shootin' marbles.' Now they discourse on radio frequency, selectivity, amplification and triodes as glibly as their fathers.

"From the number of letters I receive, it seems to me that half of the boys of the country must be experimenting with radio; and half of the fathers that I know tell me of the wonderful things that their sons are doing in assembling radio outfits—'making their own,' as it were. It is a splendid thing, and has done much for the development of the art. But the greatest benefits will come in the future—in the improvement of the minds of these young Americans. I like to receive letters from them, and I am glad at all times, to give them such advice as is possible."

WOMAN GOES TO JAIL

With Dozen Others Was Taken in Asserted Gambling Den Raid

Edith Johnson, arrested recently with twelve men and women in a raid on an asserted gambling den at 1214 South Lake street, was sentenced to 100 days in the City Jail or to pay a fine of $500 by Police Judge Pope yesterday. She was unable to pay the fine and went to jail. The other women arrested were released on recommendation of officers who conducted the raid. Miss Johnson was charged with vagrancy.

Another home is to be erected by J. H. Brunworth at 1109 East Center street at a cost of $10,000. Work on these homes will reach valuation of approximately $20,000, which will bring the total for the year to $737,988 and the total for the month to $24,850.

ALIENS TO BENEFIT BY TAX RULING

Refund to be Allowed Nonresidents Under New Revenue Act

Instructions received yesterday by the Collector of Internal Revenue regarding the refund of income tax in the possession of withholding agents will benefit thousands of nonresident aliens owning property in Southern California, the collector announced. The instructions are that under the 1924 Revenue Act, which reduces the normal tax on the net income of nonresident aliens from sources within the United States from 8 per cent to 6 per cent, a refund of 2 per cent is due on payments made after the law became effective June 2, last.

Reduction of the tax does not apply to the compensation for labor or services performed in the United States by aliens who are residents of a contiguous country as this tax is at the same rates as in the case of citizens, namely 2, 4 and 6 per cent.

Withholding agents, the collector pointed out, have in their possession at this time taxes withheld under the 1921 Revenue Act at the rate of 8 per cent from the payments in income made prior to June, 1924. Regulations issued by the Revenue Bureau provide that any sum withheld for tax since December 31, 1923, in excess of the amount required to be withheld under the new law may now be released by the withholding agent and paid over to the person from whom it was withheld, or to his proper representative.

In the case of interest on corporate bonds not containing a tax-free covenant clause, the monthly returns already filed for 1924 will show tax withheld at the rate of 8 per cent, the collector explained.

LONG-TIME HOME

Brick House in New Hampshire Said to Have Been Built in 1638

Few families of the earlier settlers in New England are able correctly to trace their lineage and produce a true family tree, but the Weeks family of Greenland, N. H., are fortunate in having preserved for them their genealogy. Not only that, but the tenth generation of the family is still living in the old homestead.

The first of the family to settle in the vicinity was Leonard Weeks. This name appears in the York county, Maine, records and also in the Portsmouth, N. H., records, which tell of his receiving a grant of eight acres of land in Portsmouth. Greenland was at that time a part of Portsmouth.

Leonard Weeks received two different grants of land from the king, thirty-four acres and ten acres, respectively. About 1660 he settled at Winnicutt River in Greenland and much of the land granted to him has remained in the possession of his descendants until the present day.

The Weeks homestead, a two-story brick house, has the distinction of being the oldest brick house in New Hampshire. According to tradition, the house was erected in 1638.

The house is 36 feet long by 22 feet wide. The walls of the lower story are 18 inches thick. The timbers of the house are massive oak beams, hewn 12x14 inches, and the floor timbers, red oak, with bark still on. The house was damaged by an earthquake in 1755, but was stayed by large iron rods running through the entire length of the house.

Early historians, speaking of the house, state "the house was evidently built as a sort of garrison, with a view of safety from being burnt by the Indians."

John W. Weeks is the present owner of the house.—[Greenland (N. H.) letter to Boston Globe.

STATIC RUINED FAMILY OUTING

Interference Was of Most Vociferous Sort

Father Bought Portable to Amuse the Joneses

Row Follows Program That Didn't Suit All

BY G. ALLISON PHELPS,
The Radio Philosopher

Every year a new baby was added to the Jones family. Every year Theodosius Rogerton K. Jones was forced to buy a longer and wider automobile. Always, on the floor of the car in the back there was a clothes basket with a new baby in it. The rear seats of the latest machine were all filled by the eleven miniature Joneses. They fought and argued and screamed whenever they were out for a ride; and when the Jones car passed down Broadway it sounded as though the Binkville High School football team had just won the State championship and was trying to let the world know about it—and succeeding.

Theodosius Rogerton K. Jones thought he would sometimes go crazy with all the noise. He loved his family, no doubt, but there were days when he dreamed of the Spreading Pepper Tree Cemetery and wondered how it would feel to spread out six feet beneath the tree with nothing but a softly murmuring breeze to disturb him.

LIVELY BUNCH

Theodosius had tried everything from chewing gum to muzzles to keep the gang quiet when he was taking the crowd for its usual Sunday outing. All to no avail. Each and every child seemed to have oratorical talents and they all practiced in the family car on Sunday mornings. Evidently there was nothing on the face of the earth that would keep 'em still.

Then Theodosius Rogerton Jones discovered radio.

"Me for a portable set in the back of the car!" he cried. "Sweet music will tame their wild little breasts and I can drive in peace."

He bought an elaborate outfit. It might be mentioned that Theodosius Rogerton K. Jones had a lot of money as well as a lot of children, which was a good thing.

T. R. K. spent many long hours installing the portable receiver in the back of the Jones car. Overhead there were sixty feet of cotton-covered copper wire—the aerial. Beneath the back seat was a six-volt wet-cell A battery, and several B batteries. On one side of the back seat Theodosius built a shelf on which he placed the cabinet and the loud speaker.

ATTITUDE OF GLEE

All was ready. T. R. K. smiled and rubbed his hands with glee. "That'll keep 'em quiet," he chuckled. "I'll let Phenolac, the oldest boy, sit next to the cabinet and operate the set."

Sunday a.m., after Mrs. Theodosius Rogerton K. Jones had used 11,000 gallons of water, a ton of soap powder and enough elbow grease to fry all the eggs of the nation's breakfast washing the ears of the eleven little Joneses, so that they would be sure and hear the new radio, T. R. K. bundled them into the back of the car, cranked her up and was off.

They hadn't gone very far until there was the usual wild roar from the back seat of the car, catcalls, screams and cries of pain as Meander Jones pinched little Palmyra, or Paprikus, who had been named after a hot Roman general, stabbed the coy little Frances Dissenter Jones with a hatpin.

"Tune into something, Phenolac!" yelled T. R. K., confidently, as he took a sharp corner on two wheels.

Proudly the trusted Phenolac stuck a nickel-plated plug into a nickel-plated jack. A piercing whistle that made Paw Jones turn pale and the eleven little Joneses yell with glee issued from the throat of the loud speaker. Theodosius missed a fire hydrant by the width of a thin hair. But Phenolac came to the rescue and turned a dial on the receiving set.

SHEZA COOK

"This is Radio B U N K," said a loud voice. "Miss Ima Cook will now deliver a lecture entitled 'What the Family Oughter Eat on Warm Sundays.'".

"I don't wanna hear a lecture!" cried Theodosius R. K. Jones, Jr. "We get enough of them at home."

"Turn into some jazz," demanded 14-year-old Sophisticater Jones, who had forgotten more than her mother had ever known, and who had just finished reading 'The Sheik.'

"Isn't there, by chance, a good wholesome sermon being broadcast?" asked Paul Percival Pierre Jones, who was studying for the ministry.

"Give us the baseball scores!" shouted freckled-faced Johnny Sand Lot Jones.

"Children should have ice cream cornucopias on hot Sundays," screamed the voice from the loud speaker.

"I want one!" cried three of the Jones offspring in unison.

"The baby's malted milk should be served cool in the bottle on warm days," declared the lecturer's voice in penetrating tones.

OVERHEARD REMARK

Unluckily the new baby, sucking its thumb in the clothes basket on the floor of the car, overheard this last remark. Then pandemonium broke loose.

"Aw wanna baughwa milk!" cannoned the baby.

"I wanna cornucopia!" roared another.

"Baseball scores!" screamed Johnny Sand Lot.

"A wholesome sermon!" demanded Paul Percival Pierre.

"Jazz!" shouted Sophisticater angrily and made a lunge for the tuning dial.

In the fight that followed the portable receiving set and the loud speaker were reduced to scraps of twisted metal, tangled wire and broken vacuum tubes. Paul Percival Pierre got hold of two wires that led to the A battery and swore shockingly. Johnny Sand Lot gave Phenolac a black eye. While dancing about, Sophisticater got her foot stuck in the baby's mouth and Paprikus ended the riot by hitting his paw, Theodosious Rogerton K. Jones, over the bald head with a 43-plate condenser. T. R. K.'s eyes crossed as he lapsed into unconsciousness and the Jones car went hurtling through the windows of a radio store.

ALL ARRESTED

In a few minutes the entire Jones family had been arrested for disturbing the peace, reckless driving and other charges, and carried away to the police station on a wave of indignation that was more powerful than any other wave that ever left a broadcasting station.

When the judge asked Theodosius to explain to him what the cause of the riot was, he staggered to his feet, rubbed the lump on the top of his head tenderly, and muttered wearily — "static!"— which is another word for interference.

Moral: Don't buy a radio receiver set unless each member of the family likes the same kind of entertainment or a regular schedule has been devised so that the tuning dials will be in control of a different member each night.

Showing Temporary Equipment During Experiment

"GUIDED wireless dispatching" has been put into operation by engineers of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company for the transmission of messages between the Vaca-Dixon substation near Vacaville, and the Pit River powerhouse about 202 miles away.

This system is said to be the longest guided wireless system ever operated.

The system consists of special 250-watt sending sets with standard receiving equipment. The messages are transmitted to the high voltage power lines, and the waves travel in the immediate vicinity of the wires. They do not interfere with any other transmission and are not broadcast.

One of the unusual new features is the unique method of calling, which is accomplished by mounting a calling microphone in the horn of the loud speaker which, when the calling circuit is completed, will oscillate and howl in much the same manner [illegible] ordinary telephone will [illegible] the receiver is placed [illegible] transmitter. "A platitude is simply a truth repeated till people get tired of hearing it," said Mr. Stanley Baldwin. Rather platitudinously put, sir! We like better this definition from the Arkansas Gazette: "A platitude is an epigram suffering from anemia."

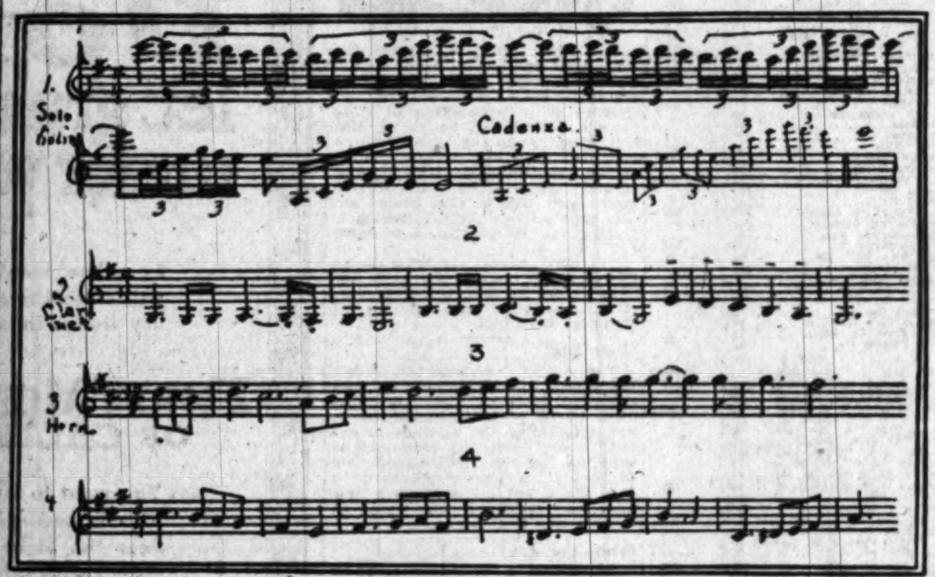
THEMES FROM BOWL CONCERT CLASSICS

Second Group Reveals Messages of Great Composers



Try Them on Your Piano

Now that you have tried on your piano the themes which appeared in these columns two weeks ago, we now present another group for your trial and possibly a medium through which you may gain a better understanding of the music which will be played at the Hollywood Bowl. To the unpracticed ear, the selections from which the above themes have been taken would undoubtedly, when heard, appeal to nothing but the emotions. But how startling is the discovery, when one becomes trained to the various themes of what lies in the music as the many movements swell forth from the stupendous Hollywood Bowl orchestra.

Therefore, it might be considered advisable to finger these themes on the piano and imprint their melody upon your mind. In their order they are as follows:

No. 1—Scheherazade by Rimsky-Korsakow.

It will be played Tuesday night, and is considered one of the most collosal works ever conceived in the mind of man, and one of the greatest contributions to musical literature.

No. 2—First, second and third movements, respectively, of the Fifth Symphony by Tschaikowsky.

It will be played Friday night, and is one of the best compositions of that master of orchestral works.

Try them on your piano.

they may add and not oppose each other. If the voltage generated in both sides of the loop were in the upward direction at any one instance, then these two voltages would cancel each other, but if the voltage on one side of the turn was up and on the other side of turn, it was down, then they would add and if the loop were connected to a receiver, a current would flow around the turns of the loop. This is, of course, exactly what we wish to have happen.

ON WAVE CREST

Now, in order to have the voltage generated on one side of the loop in the opposite direction to that generated on the other side of the loop, the loop would have to be one-half a wave length long, that is to say, it would have to be long enough in the horizontal direction so that one side was in the crest of the wave when the other side was in the trough of the wave. Since the distance between the crest of the wave is the wave-length itself, then the distance from the crest to the trough is one-half the wave-length.

The higher the sides of the loop are, that is, the longer the vertical wires are, the greater will be the voltage generated, and, of course, the voltage generated in each turn is added to the voltage generated in all the other turns.

It is obvious that the only way in which this could be done would be by so arranging the loop that it had no length at all. That is to say, arranging it so that the two sides were exactly in the same position in space. This would mean that the horizontal wires across the top and bottom of the loop would cease to exist and the loop would become nothing but a wire laced up and down between pegs on the plain surface of a board.

If the loop is rotated so that its horizontal wires are at right angles to the direction in which the signal is coming, then the loop has no length so far as those signals are concerned. The passing wave strikes both sides of each turn in the loop at exactly the same instant and the voltages generated are therefore equal and opposed and there is no terminal voltage. This is, of course, the fact which gives the loop antenna its very useful directional property. It is to be noted, however, that if the loop is turned ever so slightly from this zero position then the voltages no longer cancel and there is a voltage at the terminal. This means that the zero position of the loop is very sharp, but the maximum position is very broad.

In applying the loop antenna to an actual radio receiver, it is necessary that provision be made to tune it to resonance with the desired signal. This is accomplished by means of a variable air condenser and since this condenser has a very definite maximum capacity, the amount of inductance which the loop can have also is limited. This maximum inductance with the maximum capacity of the variable condenser, must give resonance to the longest wave to be received. The specification for the best loop antenna, therefore, is that it shall have just as many turns as possible, each turn being just as long as possible and just as high as possible and still have no more than the required maximum inductance.

GREATER VOLTAGE

The higher the loop is, the greater will be the voltage generated in each side of each turn and the longer it is, the greater will be the difference in time at which these voltages are generated in the two sides of the loop and consequently the greater will be the voltage at the terminals, but it must not have an inductance value greater than that required for tuning.

Now the inductance of a coil of wire increases very rapidly as the turns are wound closer together. The maximum inductance is obtained with the minimum number of turns when they are wound just as close to each other as possible. In order to get the maximum number of turns for a given inductance, which is what our loop requires, the turns should be wound just as far apart as possible. Now it is found that this spacing is best accomplished by winding the loop on a frame which has the form of a vertical cylinder. The wire goes up one side of the cylinder across the top and down the other side and across the bottom and the turns are spaced around the circumference of the cylinder so that the complete winding covers an arc of about 120 degrees on each side of the cylinder.

UTAH STATE PIONEER FETE

The 24th inst. will be a great event in Utah, commemorating the day the pioneers rolled into the State in 1847. Here the Utah people will celebrate the 26th inst. Plans are made to meet in front of the Ocean Park Municipal Auditorium. Seats for 5000 will be provided and the program will open at 3 o'clock. The picnickers will have their basket dinners at noon. There will be music by Utah singers and oratory of the mountain brand.

CONTACTS IN ARCTIC ZONE INTERESTING

Experience of MacMillan Radio-Rigged Vessel Deals in Various Phenomena

HARTFORD (Ct.) July 19.—Now that a year has passed since Capt. Donald B. MacMillan, on board his "radio-rigged" schooner Bowdon, left Wiscasset, Me., on the first leg of his arctic journey, it is interesting to review the extent of his radio contact with amateur operators of the American Radio Relay League. Out of this period, including the complete cycle of Arctic daylight and darkness, positively reliable communication was maintained for nearly seven months, while intermittent contact was had at various periods of the remainder of the trip.

Much information regarding radio conditions in this region has been gathered that will be of use in future expenditions of the kind, but some of the phenomenon experienced cannot be explained with present knowledge of the effect of the aurora on radio transmission. The most surprising condition encountered was the directional shift of the Bowdoin's signals as the little ship went farther north. The belief that once the explorer's ship reached winter quarters its signals would be heard equally well on either coast was not borne out.

While the vessel was on its way up the coast of Greenland, Donald Mix, radio operator, was in good two-way contact with radio amateurs in the eastern part of the country, but just as soon as the most northerly destination was reached signals, instead of being heard in New England, were picked up on the west coast. This peculiar condition continued all through last winter, except for brief periods when the barrier was lifted temporarily and short messages from Mix were picked up at widely distributed points all over North America. MacMillan will soon start for home and it is expected better contact will be renewed again.

Alexander Carr May Remain as Radio Star Here

Alexander Carr, stage and screen star, who was the headliner in KHJ'S welcome home party to Uncle John, may stay in Los Angeles after the completion of his present filming production. This is good news for the radio family of KHJ, because, if he does stay, he will broadcast from time to time from his station, and those who heard his inimitable recitation and stories last Monday night will find considerable pleasure in looking forward to his further visits on the air.

Despite rumors, Carr is not bound under contract to any producer after the conclusion of "In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter," which will occur in about a fortnight. A prominent theatrical producer in the East, who has starred Carr heretofore on the stage, has a stage play awaiting him in New York, but there is strong probability that Carr will not accept this offer, but will choose to remain in Southern California.

At present he is considering several motion-picture propositions, and Uncle John and his KHJ family hope he will accept some of them.

NEW ZEALAND LETTER LAUDS KHJ PROGRAMS

From far-off New Zealand, and to be more exact from the town of Moteuka, came this letter which reads in part as follows:

"After hearing your splendid programs so clear and strong, I am compelled to write to you and tell you we have been receiving your programs with much pleasure. My son, 18 years of age, took up radio less than twelve months ago and since then we have been hearing you louder and stronger as the days went by. We heard the bugle call, the kettle drums and we heard the announcer change from the studio to the hotel. I could fill several pages with what I have heard, but I think I have told sufficient for you to judge how much we enjoy your programs."

Hope of World Peace Through Unity of Radio

NEW YORK, July 19.—What promises to be an important step to promote international unity of peoples and further peace throughout the world has lately been inaugurated, according to an announcement made by Alfred M. Caddell, secretary of the American Radio Association, with national headquarters at 50 Union Square, New York City. It means no less than the establishment of international relations to be carried on directly by the public by means of radio. Heretofore all international communication has, in the main, been conducted through diplomatic and commercial channels, but an open forum to be conducted by the various peoples themselves is now being sponsored by the American Radio Association.

"Public associations already have been formed in France, Spain and other countries and the A.R.A. is taking the forward step to form the International Radio Association, to be composed of associations representing each country. In this way it is hoped to bring about lasting cordial relations between the many peoples of the earth and effect the breaking down of political and language barriers. In this connection the International Radio Association will co-operate with international language societies and radio amateurs of the world in an effort to unify all peoples by providing the communicative means for the discussion of intergovernmental and sociological questions."

Radio Inventors Plan Display at 'World's Fair'

The first Radio World's Fair, to be held in Madison Square Garden and the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory, New York City, September 22 to 28, next, is attracting attention of the radio geniuses of the world and scores of them are preparing to introduce their latest inventions.

Managers of the exhibition have been compelled to enlarge the "New Inventions Section" to a size which will allow showing 100 devices. Among the noteworthy American discoveries to be shown will be at least three different instruments designed for the purpose of radiocasting photographs in motion. Europe also will be well represented in this department. Several continental inventors will display new inventions of a most unusual character.

Half a dozen recognized engineers are engaged busily trying to perfect systems for radioing pictures and the management has high hope of being able to broadcast the world's first program of "Radio Motion Pictures" on the opening night of the exposition.

Sixty nationally known manufacturers of the United States will have exhibits at the fair and England, France, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland and Austria will have proper representation in the "foreign section."

TREAT PROMISED BY KHJ

Hellman Bank and Barker Brothers to Start Off Week; Series of Radio Talks Planned

Having completed a week of entertainment which will remain long in the memory of Radioland KHJ has filled the horn of plenty to the brim with music for the coming week. The first gem of the program will be the presentation by Hellman Bank of the ever popular Orpheus Four. Another group of artists will appear through the courtesy of Barker Brothers. An announcement to the effect that the Hellman Bank and Barker Brothers are sponsoring programs is tantamount to a promise of the best in radio entertainment.

Monday will be brightened by the presence of Carl Allen and his Rendezvous Orchestra from Crystal Pier at Santa Monica. Arrange your luncheon dances for this day.

RULES FOR GARDENS

Arthur Raymond Hill will sing the overture for Tuesday's programs, entertaining with a medley of popular and character songs. Queen Titania and her Sandman will descend to earth and according to reports will bring many surprises for the lads and lassies. Another recruit has been obtained to the forces of radio god-fathers in the form of the Western Auto Supply Company, which will invade Radioland with a delightful program. Dr. Thomas Lutman will deliver another of his scholarly lectures.

Wednesday will welcome at noon Fred C. McNabb, who will deliver his group of rules for the care of gardens. An instrumental trio will appear through the courtesy of the Piggly Wiggly Company. In the evening an appreciation program will be given by Roy F. Chesley, the Bell Ford dealer. Upon conclusion of this program Al Schiller, youthful pianist-composer, and the Hoffman Hawaiian Trio will perform.

SERIES OF TALKS

At Thursday noon the Greenwich Village Orchestra will furnish the wherewithall for those who wish to dance. Harry James Beardsley will present his own program in the evening. This night will mark the beginning of a series of talks to be given by Daniel Nelson Clark of the Radio Journal. Later in the evening Anton Chris and his Hawaiian guitar will appear as will also Charlie Wellman and Bill Hatch. The latter two young men form an irresistible combination and carry an original type of entertainment.

Friday will present Alika's Hawaiian Syncopators at noon. Later in the day a special program will be presented by Margaret Coutche and the Hoffman Hawaiian Trio will play.

The week will be brought to a close by the Long Beach Californians at noon, and in the evening by an excellent program arranged by J. Howard Johnson.

Radio Does Not Curtail Sales of Sheet Music

While the Washington hearings on the copyright matter were tense, there were some good laughs.

The busiest reporter at the hearings was the Washington representative of two theatrical papers who cater largely to music publishers.

The so-called American Society officials were painting a doleful picture of the decadence of the sheet-music business. Sales had almost vanished, they said, and one gained the impression that various poorhouses were being surveyed with an eye to future residence. Dire calamity had overtaken the music business. It was a black picture, and this was all due to the terrible curse brought upon their trade by this evil thing called broadcasting.

And this reporter for the aforementioned papers was with them heart and soul and apparently only regretted that he could not lend his voice in support of the squawking.

Judge Tuttle rises. He is speaking for broadcast listeners and broadcasters. With grave mien and determined manner he addresses the lawmakers, but out of the corner of his eye he watches this particular reporter. In his hand he holds a current issue of the identical paper which said reporter represents. He reads a dispatch in the paper labelled from the Washington bureau of that paper wherein said reporter had furnished his paper with a report from the Department of Commerce showing that sheet-music sales in certain chain-store systems were the largest in the history of the music business.

Seaboard Bank Adds Several Directors to Staff

Union Bank and Trust Company Celebrates Birthday

Telephone Rights Defined; New Exchange Head

George L. Browning, president of the new Seaboard National Bank, has just announced that two new directors have been named to serve on the board of the institution. They are Edward W. Murphy and K. L. Carver. Mr. Murphy is president of the firm of Johnson, Carvell & Murphy, wholesale merchandise brokers. Mr. Carver is a native son and is general manager of the Crescent Creamery Company. "The Seaboard's board of directors," said Mr. Browning, "has been selected with a view of getting a diversity of interest and putting the new bank in close touch with almost every line of industry in Southern California."

TENTH BIRTHDAY

Many of the original depositors of the Union Bank & Trust Company, who remember the day of its founding, ten years ago by Kaspare Cohn, have been congratulating the officers of the bank this month on the growth of the institution. The bank has just passed its tenth anniversary, having been opened by Kaspare Cohn on July 1, 1914 as the Kaspare Cohn Commercial and Savings Bank. When the bank was founded it had a capital stock of $300,000. The bank finally became known as the Union Bank and Trust Company, and especially during the last four or five years its growth has been rapid. Today its capital and surplus and undivided profits amount to $1,885,000, with deposits of more than $12,000,000.

The bank moved into its present location, the Union Bank Building at Eighth and Hill streets, in 1921 where its wide activities as a banking institution have been measured by the ideals of its founder and are still actively carried on by Ben R. Meyer and Milton E. Getz, president and vice-president, respectively of the institution.

TELEPHONE RIGHTS

Mitchum, Tully & Co., advise that the warrants evidencing the right to subscribe to the new $150,000,000 issue of American Telephone and Telegraph Company stock, must be in New York on August 1, accompanied by payment for the stock. After that date the rights become valueless. The rights are selling on the New York Stock Exchange at $3.37 to $4 each.

NEW EXCHANGE HEAD

Eustace Cullinan, a practicing attorney, has been elected president of the San Francisco Stock Exchange. He was selected by the board of governors because of his wide experience in public affairs, and his professional and business connections.

NON-CALLABLE

In these days of cheap money it is a real opportunity to be able to obtain a prime preferred public utility stock on a liberal yield basis, and especially one which is non-callable.

The Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation, with property valued at $66,700,000 and a long record of increasing success, is one of the outstanding public utility organizations of the world. Its securities hold first rank in safety and stability.

The preferred stock of this corporation may be purchased and put away as a permanent investment with the knowledge that it cannot be called by the Company for redemption. On the other hand, it is readily marketable in case of emergency. Dividends are mailed promptly on due dates four times a year.

At the present price of 90 the yield is 6.67%. The stock is exempt from personal property tax in California and the dividends are exempt from normal Federal Income Tax, which means that the yield to the average investor is net.

COFFEE SHORTAGE IMPENDS

Rebellion in Brazil May Force Los Angeles Addicts to Forego Their "Morning's Morning"

Rebellious outbrusts in Brazil, center of the world's coffee industry, are threatening the temporary existence, or at least the price, of the morning cup of coffee on the breakfast table of the American consumer from New York to Los Angeles. Unless the revolt in the State of Sao Paulo is suppressed within the next few days, wholesale merchants assert the visible supply in the United States will diminish to the vanishing point and prices will advance accordingly.

Los Angeles importers do not attempt to minimize the seriousness of the situation. In the entire United States, there is not more than 1,000,000 bags or one month's supply in the primary warehouses, according to an estimate made yesterday by A. P. Lazarus, secretary of Newmark Brothers, wholesalers and importers. Pacific Coast ports are supplied with Brazilian coffee by one steamship line, according to Mr. Lazarus, and it takes these ships one month to make the voyage from Santos, the leading coffee port of Brazil. The wholesalers received word yesterday that the July boat was unable to enter Santos because of the revolution, and consequently, the coast cities are left with only a thirty days' supply for over 6,000,000 consumers.

If the revolution continues for only a few weeks, the coffee situation in the United States will be serious, Mr. Lazarus states, and if the port of Santos is closed for one month, a decidedly drastic state of affairs will exist throughout the United States. The next steamer for the Pacific Coast is scheduled to leave Santos on August 22, and even if it is allowed to load, it will be October 1, allowing for delays in distribution, before the local supply will be affected.

WE'RE HEAVY DRINKERS

In Southern California it is estimated that the impending shortage will affect the normal daily consumption of 2,250,000 cups of coffee, or 75,000 pounds that are prepared for the tables of residents in the territory contiguous to Los Angeles. To those addicted to the use of coffee, the shortage will undoubtedly mean an increase in the price of each cup, and to others, either a total or a partial elimination of the beverage from the table.

Eastern consumers are in the same situation since the voyage of the coffee steamers from Brazil requires approximately the same time as to the Pacific Coast. Already the wholesalers in some of the cities east of the Mississippi have raised the price, but Los Angeles distributors have refrained thus far from announcing increases. Even without the revolution, according to Mr. Lazarus the statistical position of coffee would probably warrant materially higher prices later in the year.

The threatened shortage is aggravated by the fact that the other coffee-producing countries, principally the Central American nations, have practically concluded their shipping season, which began about January 1. The supply from Brazil, which is normally about 75 per cent of the world's available stock, began to move on the 1st inst. on which date the 1924-1925 crop enters the market. The Brazilian carry-over from last year is estimated at 5,000,000 bags, which, added to the estimated 1924-1925 crop, makes a total supply available for consumption to July 1, 1925 of about 20,000,000 bags. Normal consumption is estimated at from 22,000,000 to 23,000,000 bags.

LIMITED SHIPMENT

The depleted state of the American stock of coffee is attributed by Mr. Lazarus to the Brazilian government's method of regulating the export of the commodity. Only 35,000 bags are permitted to leave Santos daily, which leaves control of price practically in the hands of the Brazilians. In the present emergency the situation is fraught with grave dangers if the Santos merchants are disposed to utilize their advantageous position when shipments are resumed.

Once the revolution is quelled in the State of Sao Paulo it is anticipated that Japanese tramp steamers may assist in the alleviation of the stringency by taking out cargoes, although their voyages require about two months to the Pacific Coast. However, it is pointed out, by those familiar with the operations of the coffee industry in the city of Sao Paulo, that a narrow guage mountain railway carries the coffee from Sao Paulo to Santos, and if the revolutionists dynamite this road at a stretegic point, the industry may be tied up indefinitely.

Grain Traders Make Study of World Figures

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

CHICAGO, July 19.—The world's crop conditions came today to the fore as the dominating influence in shaping the course of the wheat market. Lowest prices of the day were made early on selling induced by more optimistic crop reports from the Canadian Northwest, with soaking rains over parts of the three provinces.

Offerings on the decline were absorbed by commission houses and later cables telling of dry weather in Australia, and that Indian shippers had bought back three cargoes, caused a resumption of general buying with an advance of 2⅝ to 3⅝ cents from the early low with net gains of 1⅜ to 2 cents. Corn was unsettled, ¼ cent lower to 2 cents higher with the new crop deliveries leading. Oats were 1 cent lower on July and ⅛ cent higher to ¼ cent lower on the deferred futures, while rye gained ¼ to ⅝ cent for the day.

While there were numerous sharp setbacks in the grain markets the past week, the trend was distinctly upward and active deliveries were not far from the best figures on the crop at the close. As compared with a week ago wheat was up 7⅞ to 9⅝ cents, corn 1⅛ to 8⅛ cents, the former on the July. Oats gained 1⅜ to 2⅜ cents on the deferred futures and was ⅝ cent lower on July, while rye was 4⅞ to 5⅛ cents higher.

Winnipeg wheat showed more strength than Chicago and closed 2¾ to 2½ cents higher and up about 4 cents from the low point of the day.

Rain and unseasonably low temperatures for this time of year were regarded by the trade as decidedly bullish on the deferred deliveries of corn. At no time were they more than a fraction under the finish of Friday and at the top December equalled the best figure on the crop. Commission houses and local traders were good buyers. Trade in July was limited and it closed at 109¾ after a range of ⅝ cent for the day. September was 103 to 104⅞ at the last with December at 92 to 91⅞ cents and May at 95⅝ to 95¼. Cash corn declined 1 to 2 cents with receipts 181 cars.

July oats are apparently going through the period of readjustment from an old to a new crop basis, and with a relatively slow eastern demand and further easiness in the spot market it closed 1 cent lower at 53⅝. Strength in corn helped the deferred deliveries. Receipts, 65 cars.

Rye was easier early, but quickly reversed its action later in sympathy with wheat and with Winnipeg and closed at the top. There were 300,000 bushels reported sold for export at the seaboard.

FLAXSEED MARKET

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

DULUTH (Minn.) July 19.—Selling pressure was in evidence at the opening of the flaxseed market here today, mostly from speculatives who were seeking to collect their paper profits. OIL NEWS

BY HOWARD C. KEGLEY

The Shell Company yesterday completed its second well of the week in the Dominguez field, bringing in its Reyes No. 6 with an estimated daily production of 1700 barrels. This well began to flow last Monday during a production test, but was killed, and drilled deeper into the sand. It is the first second line well on the Reyes lease, and offsets the Union Oil Company's Carson No. 2, which is rigging up. Reyes No. 6 is down 4230 feet.

The Shell expects to bring in its Childs No. 1 within the next few days unless trouble prevents. Yesterday the crew was running oil string at 4277 feet.

Skids Rig

The Austin No. 1 of the Julian Petroleum Corporation in the northern area of the Rosecrans field, north of the Athens No. 1, has abandoned the attempt to extract tools from 450 feet, and is skidding the rig. Drilling officials decided it would be cheaper to skid the derrick and start a new hole than to waste time trying to extract the drill pipe.

Crude For June

According to figures collected by the American Petroleum Institute, Pacific Coast office, the total production of crude oil in California for June amounted to 18,807,999 barrels, an average of 626,933 barrels per day. This is a decrease of 12,860 barrels per day under May production.

Stocks increased during the month 1,065,918 barrels. The total stocks at the end of the month were 100,57,855 barrels. The total stock increase for 1924, up to June 30, was 8,652,702 barrels.

Eighty-eight wells were completed during the month with an initial daily production of 32,209 barrels, compared with 150 wells completed during May with an initial production of 56,451 barrels.

Gets Comanche Lease

The Twin Six Oil Company has purchased from the Security Trust Company of Bakersfield sixty acres in Section 29, 32-29, according to an indenture filed with the Recorder of Kern county. The land is in the Comanche Point district near where the General Petroleum Corporation is drilling a deep test well.

Long Job Completed

The Shell Company, after a year of experimenting, has placed the Davenport No. 6 in the Huntington Beach field on production with a flow estimated at around 1000 barrels per day. The well originally was drilled to 5000 feet, but was never on production at that depth due to water trouble. It was plugged back to 3550 feet, and at this depth a shut-off was made, and the well brought in. Pressure is said to register 400 pounds at the casing head.

Old Wells Produce

The South Basin Oil Company, recently organized by Joseph B. Dabney and associates as a marketing organization, has recompleted three wells in the Long Beach field, according to official reports.

The Tehmescal well, which was taken over from the Tehmescal interests, is back on production with about 130 barrels daily, and Herwick No. 7 and No. 11, which were taken over from Ed Herwick, are doing about 150 barrels a day between them.

May Quit Wildcat

The Petroleum Midway Company is seriously considering the abandonment of its Neal No. 1 wildcat well in the Carmenita district, it is reported. The hole is drilling at 5417 feet, and has had no important showings at any time, it is said.

Considerable interest has centered in the Carmenita district since the Neal well was started about six months ago. The Petroleum Midway is the largest leaseholder in the district, but other companies, including several of the larger corporations, have protected themselves against possible developments by tying up virtually all the surrounding acreage.

Near Completion

The Petroleum Midway Company's Brown No. 4 in the Huntington Beach field is nearing completion, according to official reports. The hole is down past 3100 feet, and the well will be completed at around 3500 feet, it is said.

Well Recompleted

The Sun Oil Company's No. 5 well in the Huntington Beach field, which has been off production for several months, was placed on the pump with a daily production of about 200 barrels, according to drillers. The well is down about 3200 feet, and was brought in by the Union Drilling Company.

Gets New Lease

J. C. Flickinger, Los Angeles operator, has acquired the old Mulholland property in Ventura county near the Ventura-Ojai Highway. The deal includes a number of shallow wells, and it is reported that Flickinger intends to clean out these old projects, which have been unproductive for some time, and place them on the pump.

The Fazio well in this district, which Flickinger is drilling, is still standing cemented, the first shut-off test showing wet, it is said.

Shallow Showings

The Blackstone-Champion well being drilled by Los Angeles capital in New Mexico, twelve miles southwest of Thoreau, is reported to have found oil and gas showings at 327 feet. The well is located in Valencia county.

Sidetracking

The California Drilling Company is sidetracking in the Regina Judd well in the Signal Hill field, near the milk sanatorium, according to officials. Work in this well was delayed considerably by a prolonged fishing job. The bottom is at about 4600 feet.

Spud New Well

The Monarch Development Company expects to spud in its No. 3 well in the Newport Beach field this week, according to drillers. The well is on the Fulkerson property north of the town of Newport Beach, on which two wells are now getting production of heavy oil.

42 3-4 attracted widespread attention and brokerage circles found the movement difficult to explain. Union Oil of California made a fractional gain to 140½ with final transactions at 140 and Union Associates made some progress toward closing the wide gap between its market and Union's. Union Associates opened at 58 3-4 and advanced to 59 7-8, a record high. The close was at 59 5-8.

President Kingsbury of the Standard Oil Company of California in a public statement Thursday expressed the belief that no reduction in the price of crude oil in this State is probable. The opinion, coming from that source, is believed to have been responsible for a stimulated demand for shares of the important California oil companies toward the close of the week's market.

Excepting the three issues mentioned above, oil stock prices pursued an uneven course throughout the week's relatively quiet market, fluctuations generally being of a narrow character and in some cases establishing new lows for the current movement. California Petroleum was under pressure during the early trading and sold below 20, a new low, and Shell Union sagged to 16, the lowest price recorded since last December. After slumping to 56, Standard of California rallied to 57, while United Oil fluctuated all week between 25 and 26 1-4 and Associated Oil rose from 28 to 28 1-2.

Rio Grande Refining was heavy on unabsorbed offerings at 78 and the Julian Petroleum issues again resumed their movement toward record low levels. The preferred opened around 17⅛ and declined steadily to 11, while the common sagged from 11 3-4 to 6 3-4. United States Royalties recorded a further recession and new low at 5 cents and closed at 5 1-2, a loss of 1½ cents for the week.

PUBLIC UTILITIES

Fractional improvement was shown by Edison common which sold up to 99 1-2, dividend on and closed at 97, ex-dividend. The 7 per cent preferred was unchanged around 103 1-2. Los Angeles Gas preferred strengthened to 90 3-8 and Pacific Gas preferred to around 91 while the common maintained its previous high level in the neighborhood of 95.

Advancing to 97 3-4, San Joaquin prior preferred was up a quarter and the 7 per cent regular preferred continued in good demand around 87 1-2. The common opened slightly inclined to heaviness around 31, but buying of excellent quality made its appearance and considerable stock was absorbed in the subsequent uninterrupted upward movement. The high was established at 33¼, ¼ point under the previous week's top. Southern Counties Gas 8 per cent preferred around 98 5-8 was up fractionally.

In anticipation of favorable dividend action, Globe Grain common early in the week rose to 49½, but the annual stockholders' meeting and the directors' meeting which followed developed only an announcement of earnings for the fiscal year ended June 30, at a rate equivalent to approximately 6.25 on the common. Subsequent selling of this issue around 45 was ascribed to speculative disappointment over the failure to declare a dividend at this time. Goodyear preferred moved up to 92 and sales of Laguna Land and Water preferred were recorded at 1.15, off 5 cents. Pacific Mutual Life was in improved demand at 600 and West American Insurance changed hands at 248. Mortgage Guarantee gained a point on bids at 116. Los Angeles Investment rose to 3.54, ex-dividend 5 cents, slumped to 3.45 and closed around 3.50.

BANKS AND MINES

On sales at 250, Bank of Italy reached a new high, but trading later in the week was at slightly lower prices. Merchants' National showed improvement with sales at 190½ and a closing demand at 191. Citizens' National was unchanged around 300 and Security Trust sold again at 325. Bank of America made a new low since organization with sales at 129. First National sold at unchanged figure, 375.

Declaration of a 5 cent dividend by United Eastern stimulated an improved demand for that stock and the close was around 43 cents ex-dividend. Tom Reed was unusually inactive at about former levels and Telluride was inclined toward heaviness around 12½ cents. United American advanced fractionally to 4 1-2 cents and the balance of this list was inactive at around former quotations.

BOND QUOTATIONS

Prices Creep Upward

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

NEW YORK, July 19.—With trading marked by typical midsummer dullness, bond prices continued their quiet advance in today's brief market session.

Low-priced rail issues shared to some extent the buoyancy which carried these stocks to new high levels, prices of convertibles strengthened materially. St. Paul, Erie, Frisco and Chicago and Eastern Illinois liens led in activity.

Improved prospects for heavier copper consumption and increased purchases of silver, produced by a number of copper companies, led to accumulation of these issues. Magma 7s advanced 1 3-4 points.

Erratic fluctuations of Brazilian obligations continued with several issues displaying rallying tendencies on more favorable revolution news.

Following are closing quotations on bonds listed on the New York Stock Exchange, furnished by Logan & Bryan, 636 South Spring street:

RAW WOOD MARKET

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

BOSTON, July 19.—New price levels have been established this week in all of the medium and finer grades both of fleece and territory wools. Stocks in some of the finer grades have been reduced materially. Pulled wools have moved freely. Some speculation is in progress in lamb's wools, and a considerable demand has developed for this class.

NEW YORK CURB

Industrials Strong

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

NEW YORK, July 19.—Industrial issues, including public utilities, maintained the most prominent position on the curb market all through the week and several stocks in the various groups rose to new high records.

Petroleum issues were depressed by the reductions that came in crude oil during the week. Prairie Oil sold down from 206½ to 194, but had a sharp rally from the low level. Standard Oil of Ohio yielded from 286½ to 276, South Pennsylvania from 123½ to 118, and Ohio Oil from 60 1-4 to 58 1-4. Miscellaneous oil stocks were fairly well held. There was special buying of Lago Petroleum which rose from 4 1-4 to 4 3-4. Mutual Oil and Royal Canadian were steadily bought all through the week.

Following are the closing quotations on the New York Curb market, furnished by Logan & Bryan, members of the New York Stock Exchange, 636 South Spring street.

RUBBER MARKET

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

NEW YORK, July 19.—Crude rubber firm. Prices ranged from 21½ cents per pound on spot rubber to 22½ cents per pound for Para and amber No. 1 during the week. The last day of trading this week caused prices to recede ¼ cent on the Para. According to the buying representatives of the tire companies that operate in the local crude rubber market some stabilization will have to be shown here and London before they will venture to take on more rubber. They did not deny that a demand for rubber still exists but they said that they could wait for a while before placing new orders.

ORANGES

The general tone of the California Valencia market shows no change from last week. The market on large size fruit has improved in some markets. Valencias prices would be very satisfactory if the proportion of large sizes approached that of normal years. Auction markets are paying the highest prices for large fruit while the smaller sizes are bringing better prices in private sale cities.

The volume of shipments is dropping and from now on will probably average around 600 cars per week.

Reports from growers indicate that the setting of fruit for next season's orange crop is not heavy. This should result in a more satisfactory distribution of sizes.

LEMONS

Failure of weather in the East to continue hot has resulted in heavy accumulations of California lemons in all markets. This has left the market in a demoralized condition; so much so that f.o.b. California quotations are not a matter of record. Very few shipments are going forward. Real summer weather in the East would relieve the situation.

There are on hand and available for sale at all United States ports approximately 338 cars of foreign lemons. This compares with 593 cars for same date last year and 543 cars for 1922.

CATTLE—Normal receipts estimated at 3300 encountered active demand, the forepart of the week and advances of 25 to 40 cents on steers were made. However narrow demand developed toward the close and the early advance except on good steers was wiped out, and prices at the close are about steady with a week ago. Shipments from outside the State continue to put in their appearance, mostly from Arizona, Texas, Idaho and Oregon. However, California is still supplying the bulk, having furnished 2925 head of this week's supply. The quality and condition of offerings for the week showed an improvement over the previous week. Best steers were good, 1040-pound Imperials at 8.65. Most steers were medium grades averaging 950 to 1100 pounds and cashed from 6.50@8.00, a few more desirable kinds selling upward to 8.50. Common steers sold downward to 5.00, with several loads on the cutter order downward to 3.35. Fat she stock sold actively most of the week and values at the close are 15 to 25 cents higher than a week ago. No good heifers arrived. Best cows were good 1134-pound Californias at 6.25, with several loads good grades from 6.00@6.25. However, odd head sold upward to 6.50. The price spread of 4.00@5.85 took the bulk of fat she stock, mostly common and medium grades averaging 850-1050 pounds. Canners and cutters held firm with the bulk largely 1.50@3.00. Bulls were weak with spots a shade lower, most bolognas going over from 3.00@4.00.

CALVES—Liberal receipts of calves have given buyers a chance to reduce prices mostly 25 to 50 cents for the week. Calves from Arizona, Texas and Utah as well as from California showed up. A load of choice 173-pound vealers from California topped at 9.00. The bulk of offerings were good 190-250 pound vealers at 7.75@8.50. Common light weights and medium heavies sold largely from 6.00 to 7.25, with a few on the canner order downward to 3.00.

HOGS—Sharp advances at the river markets with values there highest for the year has forced prices unevenly 50 to 75 cents higher. Fairly liberal receipts have been cleaned up readily. The bulk of good and choice 166 to 195-pound butchers cleared from 8.75@9.00 with most at the latter figure. Top was 9.00 although butchers unsold late Friday were held higher. Garbage hogs averaging upward to 260-pounds sold mostly 8.00@8.50 with kinds upward to 300 pounds and above from 7.00@7.25. Packing sows advanced around 25 cents with the bulk from 6.25 to 6.50.

SHEEP—Firm prices prevailed in the ovine division with receipts small. Actuals for the week being 1571. Best lambs were two decks good and choice 77-pound wool skin at 11.75, without a sort. Two decks good and choice lambs averaging 70 pounds cashed for 11.75, sorted 20 per cent at 8.00. A deck of good and choice 67-pound wool skins realized 11.50, sorted, 20 per cent at 8.00. Several decks good to choice 70 to 73-pound clipped lambs cleared from 10.40 to 10.50, sorted about 20 per cent at 7.50. Sheep held steady with 154 head choice 94-pound shorn yearlings at 8.00 and 76 head of 112-pound kinds at 6.00.

MARKET REVIEW

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

NEW YORK, July 19.—Under ordinary and normal circumstances the markets are dull places on a Saturday morning of mid-July. However, present conditions are neither ordinary nor normal and there is no evidence of a case of the doldrums even on a day in which holiday influences usually would have large effects. Today's markets were brisk and active on the stock exchange in the general markets and in the foreign exchange markets. Prices were held down, of course, by an extraordinary amount of profit-taking, such as is to be anticipated at the week-end. But so strong was the underlaying tone in these markets, that even the moderate heavy selling occasioned by the profit-taking did not have the effect of holding prices down.

On the stock exchange the railroad shares continued their advance with a new group, that of the oil shares, forging its way to prominence in trading activity. The opinion prevails in our financial districts at least, that the readjustments which have taken place during the week in the oil industry are the final ones which will be necessary this year. It is one of the Wall street characteristics in this respect, that it is apt to take a cheerful attitude on any group of securities, when "the bad news is out" about that group.

In the commodity markets wheat and corn added approximately 2 cents to their net gains for the week in the face of a reaction at the opening of the markets, which carried prices moderately lower. It is one of the outstanding features of the present market in grains that each reaction attracts fresh buyers, who are seeking contracts for foreign as well as domestic delivery. Speculation in these markets has, of course, been a tremendous factor in the past few weeks, but it is now reported to be giving way to the more natural factor of actual demand. European buyers of our grain crops have been particularly active in the market, during the latter part of the week. Foreign crop reports do not present a very glowing picture of the prospects for autumn, especially in so far as the wheat crop is concerned, and it is considered likely that there will not be very much complaint this fall—at least not so much as last fall—at the volume and character of the foreign buying of our grain crops.

The foreign exchanges rose vigorously in the brief trading today, sterling getting through $4.38, within approximately 1 cent of the year's best prices. The other exchanges were strong too, the guilder being one of the outstanding features. Just at the moment, the chief factor in the strength of the exchanges is doubtless the London conference, and such an upturn as occurred today must be put down to banking optimism over the progress thus far of the inter-Allied conference on reparations.

Short Session Rally

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

NEW YORK, July 19.—Total sales stocks, 449,800 shares.

	20 industrials	20 rails
Saturday	97.80	89.37
Friday	97.14	89.39
Week ago	96.97	87.67
High 1924	101.24	89.39
Low 1924	88.37	81.00

Aided by increased public participation, particularly from western points, speculators for the advance succeeded in bringing about another sharp rally in prices in today's brief, but active, stock market. Continued strength of the railroad shares, twenty of which established new peak prices for the year, was the outstanding feature.

Industrials showed a more uniform upward trend with the best gains being recorded by the coppers, western oils and a select list of specialties. Baldwin and American Can each moved up about a point, but other pivotal issues showed little or no advance.

Low-priced rails were in brisk demand, New Haven leading the advance in that group by climbing more than a point to 28 1-8, the year's best price. The investment group was represented in the list of new highs, by such issues as New York Central, Illinois Central, common and preferred; Delaware and Hudson and Southern Pacific.

Coppers continued to accumulate on the theory that European consumption of the red metal will materially increase if Germany is granted a loan following the reparation conference now in session in London, and on reports of extensive silver purchases for coinage purposes by European countries, several of the copper producing companies turning out ore with a high silver content.

Marked strength was displayed by a number of specialties, including General Electric, Allis Chalmers, Liggett & Meyers, United States Hoffman Machinery, Texas Gulf Sulphur and International Nickel, all at new high prices for the year. Substantial gains also were recorded by Congoleum, International Harvester, Dupont, American Water Works common, and Kelly Springfield preferred issues, all up 2 points or more.

Foreign exchange rates held firm on buying inspired by the belief that satisfactory progress was being made at the London conference toward a solution of the reparations problem. Demand sterling moved up more than a cent to $4.38 1-8 and French francs ruled slightly higher around 5.13 cents.

The weekly clearinghouse statement showed increases in most of the principal items. Loans, discounts and investments increased $45,764,000, the reserve of member banks in the Federal Reserve Bank, $16,021,000, net demand deposits, $33,364,000, and time deposits, $23,064,000. Cash in own vaults dropped $5,046,000. Aggregate reserve total, $626,334,000, leaving excess reserve of $38,672,240, an increase of $10,029,030.

Week in Review

Stock, bond, cotton and grain prices all pointed upward this week with so-called public participation increasing in each market. Revival of speculative interest in the railroad shares, more than two score of which bettered their previous high prices of the year, was the outstanding feature of the stock market. Buying of these issues was given impetus by the Interstate Commerce Commission refusal to reduce freight rates on grain.

Domestic bonds moved to new high levels for the year as large sums of Wall street's surplus funds were invested in high-grade issues. Foreign bonds showed some irregularity.

Wheat and corn prices continued to soar on further indications of a shortage in both the domestic and world crops.

Money rates continued easy with call funds being obtainable in large quantities in the "outside market" as low as 1½ per cent and seven months' time loans being available for the first time this year at 3½ per cent.

ELECTRICAL BUSINESS IS PICKING UP

Bottom Believed to Have Been Reached; Building Shows Increase

The electrical business has shown distinct signs of improvement and the feeling is strong that the bottom has been reached and the market is moving up. More good-sized inquiries have been in evidence and there has been an increase in orders, according to Electrical World. Building continues in considerable volume and the demand for electrical construction material is active.

Central station buying has been rather slow due to postponement of deliveries. However, the fact that electric light and power financing for the first six months of the year reached a total of $457,507,200 as compared with $397,051,600 for the same period last year, indicates the tremendous volume of money that is to be spent in utility expansion programs and gives a key to the general confidence of the electrical industry despite the fact that the General Electric Company's sales for the first six months of this year, for instance, are reported as 12 per cent less than last year for this same period. Increased orders from the steel industry also bring a good note to the market.

Industrial buying on the Pacific Coast is below normal. Building materials are moving well, however, with good sales of line construction materials in the Northwest.

TEXAS RAINS INDUCE COTTON LIQUIDATION

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

NEW YORK, July 19.—With selling based on reports of rains in Western Texas early liquidation carried cotton options off around $2.50 a bale in the early part of today's local trading. The opening was irregular, 5 points higher on July to 3 to 18 off on other months. At one time during the session July commanded a premium of more than 550 points over October. July demand steadied the remaining options for a time, but selling based on the Texas weather reported too heavy and crop figures broke sharply. They came back a bit from the low to close 43 to 49 points lower with July up 10 points net at 31.50.

Spot cotton 32.50, up 10 points.

Affairs of the week

By Juana Neal Levy

[illegible]TRASTING the ease of transportation today with that of thirty years ago, one realizes the marvelous comfort and pleasure experienced by both host and guest, when within a half hour, or at best three-quarters, one can be at the beach, country club or mountain cabin, although it takes a little longer to reach the latter. In the old days when horses and coach were the only means of getting [illegible] great treat was the day at Baldwin's rancho (Arcadia, [illegible] from Los Angeles,) gained by coach and six, planned for [illegible] when it took all morning to drive out and after [illegible] afternoon to come back home again.

Miss Louise Innes, the charming young daughter of William A. Innes, who returned several weeks ago from New York where she has been attending Bennett School at Milbrook, is having a most enjoyable vacation this summer.

She is a guest at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Willard James Doran, in West Twenty-seventh street, and is having a glorious time swimming and playing tennis and golf.

There are many week-end parties given at both beach and country club, and while most of the affairs are small they are none the less enjoyable.

Miss Innes was one of the guests at the luncheon and swimming party given by Miss Dorothy Green last week. Miss Innes is planning to return east in September, resuming her studies at the Bennett School.

Miss Dorothy Phillips of Middletown, O., who had planned to visit Miss Innes this week, is detained at home, owing to the serious illness of her mother. Among the Los Angeles girls who are returning to the Bennett School this fall are Miss Dorothy Green, Miss Mildred Titcomb, Miss Ruth Moulton, Miss Kate Frost and Miss Clara Frost.

Col. and Mrs. Walter Perry Story, whose "Castle in the Air," in Broadway at Sixth street is the scene of many delightful affairs, are planning a most enjoyable summer.

They are motoring for this week-end to Del Monte and will be there for several weeks, returning to Los Angeles for a brief stay at their Laurel Canyon summer home, before leaving for Montana, where they will visit for several months with Col. Story's mother, who has been ill for some time, and they will not return to Los Angeles before late in the fall.

Among the many delightful visitors to Los Angeles recently are Lieut. and Mrs. Edwin Conway of San Francisco, who have been the houseguests of Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Alfred Butler at their home in Moreno Heights. Many charmingly arranged affairs are being given in honor of these visitors.

Lieut. Conway is leaving shortly for the Naval Academy at Annapolis, where he has been ordered for duty following a leave from the U.S.S. Tennessee, on which he has been on duty four years.

An elaborate affair has been arranged at Del Monte Lodge complimenting Lieut. and Mrs. Conway prior to their departure east, their detail at the academy calling for a four-year stay.

Miss Virginia Mae Wright, charming young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Wright of South Gramercy Place, has been enjoying a number of delightfully planned affairs this summer. She has just returned from a visit with Miss Vera Danselser at her cottage in Bear Valley.

Mrs. Wright and her attractive daughter are planning to leave in a few days for Catalina Island where they will remain for several weeks at the St. Catherine's, Avalon.

One of the beautifully appointed weddings of recent date was that of Miss Irene Gertrude Blakeley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Thornton Blakeley, and Howard Harvey Witte, which took place on the 2nd inst. at Calvary Presbyterian Church, Rev. S. G. Livingston officiating.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white satin and lace, her veil of tulle held in place by a wreath of orange blossoms and she carried orchids, roses and lilies of the valley.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents in Oak street, Pasadena, following which Mr. and Mrs. Witte left in their automobile for a wedding trip in the north, which will include Lake Tahoe and the Yosemite, and after their return in August they will make their home in Pasadena.

Among the recent acquisitions to local society are Maj. and Mrs. Ralph E. Wallace, who recently purchased a beautiful new home at 330 North Beachwood Drive, Hollywood, and are at home to their many friends there. Maj. Wallace resigned from the United States Army last year.

Mrs. Wallace, who was formerly Miss Hortense Fleming, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Fleming of San Diego, and has a host of friends in Southern California. She was graduated from Stanford and is a member of the Alpha Omicron Pi sorority.

Miss Helen Frances Ludlow, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Ludlow of Rexford Drive, Beverly Hills, has chosen Wednesday, the 23rd inst. as the date for her marriage to David Stone Phelphs, the ceremony to take place in the beautiful gardens of her parent's home at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Miss Irma Bewyer of Kansas City will assist as maid of honor, and Carl Mielstrup will serve Mr. Phelps as best man.

Among the many delightful affairs given recently in honor of Miss Ludlow was the bridge luncheon with which Mrs. Horace Braun of Raymond avenue, entertained at the Whitley Country Club, when the decorations were effectively carried out with orchids and pink blossoms and foliage.

Miss Ludlow also shared honors with Miss Mary Arlington of Chicago, and Miss Betty Meriwether of Kansas City at a bridge tea given by Miss Betty Mae Hutchinson and Miss Doris Drought at the Green in Hollywood last week.

Engagement Announced

Formal announcement is made this morning by Mr. and Mrs. Ulysses Grant Orendorf of Canton, Ill., of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Helen Orendorff, to Judson Edwin Roberts, son of Mrs. Henry C. Later the young men joined the party and dancing in the teahouse concluded the festivities of an eventful day. No date has been set as yet for the wedding.

En Tour

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Douglas Longyear and their attractive daughter, Miss Gwendolyn Longyear, are enjoying a delightful trip abroad. The latest word from them was from Germany, where they are motoring about, visiting various points of interest after a month's stay in Paris. They will remain for another six weeks on the continent, later visiting England, whence they will sail for home late in August. Upon their return they will be at home at the Beverly Hills Hotel, where they have taken one of the picturesque bungalows for the year.

Many Critical Buyers Find They Can Do Better at The "California"

THE "California" is known as one of the very finest furniture stores in America. Because there are those who mentally associate a supremacy in quality of merchandise with high prices, it is assumed by some people that the "California" is high priced. When this misunderstanding exists it invariably occurs because a critical investigation of values has not been made.

On the other hand, those who accept our invitation to compare values carefully find that they can serve their own interests best at the "California"—not only as to values but also as to the character and quality of the selections.

While the "California" is proud of its recognized leadership and of the very high quality and distinctive character ot the home furnishings shown here, this institution is equally proud of the values offered at all times.

It is true that the commonplace and ordinary have no place among the stocks here. But in the worthwhile creations for home beautifying actual value comparisons will demonstrate beyond the slightest doubt that the advantage invariably rests with the "California."

Your visit and a careful and critical comparison of values are cordially invited.

Hunter, and the church was charmingly decorated with a profusion of flowers and ferns. The altar decorations were particularly attractive, banked high with Shasta daisies and foliage.

Anniversary Dinner

Dr. Elia Morgenstiern, once the head of the Royal Psychoanalytic Institute of Petrograd, but now a refugee in California, gave a dinner to fifteen of his friends, members of the local art colony, and associate refugees of the Russian Intelligencia, at the Ambassador Tuesday evening.

The occasion was the first anniversary of the date when Dr. Morgenstiern was released from a Russian prison. He was seized by the Bolsheviki in 1920, his property confiscated and he received a death sentence on a charge of plotting to bring about a counter revolution. Powerful friends on the outside managed to secure his release and enabled him to come to America.

Among the guests were other Russians who also had been compelled to flee for their lives. Many were the narratives of personal experience related between the salad and the ices, and each was a tragedy.

But the tragedies no longer brought tears, for the Slav nature is optimistic, and the gathering Tuesday night resembled a tale with a happy ending. Most of the exiles said they had found in Los Angeles things as worth while as those they lost in Petrograd.

But the final toast drunk was one to the confusion of the Bolsheviki, a return of the monarchy and a happy reunion at some future date in Petrograd.

Those present at the anniversary were Dr. Elia Deoderivitch Morgenstiern, Dr. and Mrs. William Alanson Bryan, Mr. and Mrs. Merle Armitage, Albert Merovich, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Stendahl, Ivan Kalmykoff, Mrs. Farley McLouth, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Soloff, Mischa Romanoff, Mme. Radzine, Fred Hogue and Theodore Ball.

Attendants were Miss Mildred Wellborn, sister of the bride and William Roether, brother of the groom. After a wedding breakfast Mr. and Mrs. Roether left for a motor trip through California. They will be at home after September 1 at 285 Vinedo avenue.

A very pretty home wedding of last week was that of Miss La Verne Myrtle Tice, formerly of San Francisco, and Wilford C. Hove, which took place at the residence of the bridegroom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Hove, 819 Park avenue. Rev. E. E. Cochrane read the marriage service in the presence of a number of relatives and close friends of the contracting parties. The bride was attired in a lovely gown of white georgette trimmed with lace. Her tulle veil was held in place with a coronet of orange blossoms and she carried, in place of the conventional bridal bouquet, a muff of white satin which was covered with lilies of the valley and maidenhair fern. Miss Flora Wakefield of Pasadena, who attended the bride as maid of honor, wore a frock of apricot taffeta and carried sweet peas of the same color. William Heron served Mr. Hove as best man and little Louise Crawford acted as flower girl. Following their wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Hove will make their home on Milan avenue in South Pasadena.

Two very beautiful marriage ceremonies were solemnized in the St. James Church during the week. Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock Miss Corinne Menefield Robertson of 5116 Huntington Drive became the wife of Stacy Robert Woodard of Saugus. Rev. C. Woodard of Newhall served his brother as best man. The young couple will make their home in Saugus.

On Friday evening the St. James Church was again the scene of a delightful wedding when Miss Edna Dunn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry N. Dunn of 1726 Bank street, and Robert Buck, son of Mrs. Williard M. Learned, 1111 Hope street, were united in marriage. Rev. C. Rankin Barnes read the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Rene Starbuck had as house guests during the past week, Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Stinson and three interesting children from Simi, Ventura county, Cal. The visit for the ladies was in the nature of a reunion, as they were formerly room-mates, when attending Pomona College some years ago.

Mrs. Frances Van Buskirk of Los Angeles was recently a guest in the home of her brother George McWhorter and family.

Dainty summer flowers beautified the table, at which covers were laid for twenty-nine. Charles J. Adair acted as toastmaster and the honor guest and his bride-to-be were complimented with a number of witty toasts.

Vows of the marriage of Mrs. Ida Dunn of San Pedro and A. M. Lundin, Jr., of San Francisco, reached San Pedro Monday evening, with the bride's arrival from the north. The wedding was the culmination of a romance which began two years ago in San Francisco. The charming home of the bridegroom's parents, at 667 Walter street, San Francisco, was the scene of the nuptial service solemnized Thursday, the 10th inst., at 5:30 o'clock in the evening, Superior Judge Thomas M. Troutt of San Francisco officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Jack Lawson, intimate friends of the bride, attended the couple. The bride wore pale blue georgette over peach georgette and her picture hat was of the same colors. Her bouquet was a shower of pink rosebuds and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Dunn, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Mullin of 727 West Ninth street, San Pedro, is prominent socially in the port city, and Mr. Lundin is well-known in San Francisco shipping circles. The couple will make their home in San Francisco after August 1.

In addition, there were song numbers by Mrs. William Day Moore, mezzo-soprano, accompanied by Miss Ruby Delph, and Miss Ode Aiken, coloratura soprano, accompanied by Mrs. Paul R. Hoffman.

Inglewood

Mrs. Clyde C. Woodworth was a charming hostess of Tuesday afternoon when she entertained the members of the Mystic Eight at her attractive home on East Commercial street. Following the luncheon the guests passed the afternoon at cards, two tables of bridge being in play. Mrs. Woodworth was assisted in entertaining by her mother, Mrs. Lena Zier.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank D. Parent and their two daughters, Misses Mary Alice and Nancy, left by automobile Wednesday morning for an extensive tour of the northern coast, intending to visit in San Francisco, Seattle, Vancouver and other points.

One of the delightful events of the past week was the benefit party at which Mrs. Frank D. Parent entertained the members of the Inglewood Woman's Club at her pretty home on La Colina Drive on Tuesday evening. An outdoor picnic supper was served and the later hours were passed with music and games.

One of the merriest events of the week in Inglewood was the party at which Mrs. C. C. Jackson of Stepney street, entertained seven little guests, all of them friends of her little niece, Miss Grace Fikes of Sierra Park, who is at present a visitor in her aunt's home. A miniature circus tent, covering a show both interesting and fantastic, was the outstanding feature of the afternoon's entertainment, and at the close of a jolly three hours the little guests and their hostess partook of a delicious luncheon served in the yard. Little Maxine Backus contributed the most artistic event of the afternoon in the form of fancy dancing.

Could Not Sleep--
Doctor Says Operate

Gas On Stomach Prevents Sleep

"Before I began to take Adlerika (intestinal antiseptic) I could not sleep well, especially on my left side, and had pains all through my stomach (gas). The doctor said it would be best for me to be operated. Thanks to Adlerika I am on my feet again." (Signed) Samuel Payne.

Intestinal Antiseptic.

There is now offered to the public a preparation having the DOUBLE action of an intestinal antiseptic and a COMPLETE system cleanser. This preparation, known as Adlerika, acts as follows: It tends to eliminate or destroy harmful germs and colon bacili in the intestinal canal, thus guarding against appendicitis and other diseases having their start here.

It is the most complete system cleanser ever offered to the public, acting on BOTH upper and lower bowel and removing foul matter which poisoned the system for months and which nothing else can dislodge. It brings out all gases, thus immediately relieving pressure on the heart. It is astonishing the great amount of poisonous matter Adlerika draws from the alimentary canal—matter you never thought was in your system. Try it right after a natural movement and notice how much more foul matter it brings out which was poisoning you. In slight disorders, such as occasional constipation, sour stomach, gas on the stomach and sick headache, one spoonful Adlerika ALWAYS brings relief. A longer treatment, however, is necessary in cases of obstinate constipation and long standing stomach trouble, preferably under direction of your physician.

Reports from Physicians.

"I found Adlerika the best in my entire 37 years' experience." (Signed) Dr. G. Eggers.

"I use Adlerika in all bowel cases. Some require only one dose." (Signed) Dr. F. M. P. (Name given on request.)

"I have found nothing in my 50 years' practice to excel Adlerika." (Signed) Dr. James Weaver.

"After taking Adlerika feel better than for 20 years. Haven't language to express the AWFUL IMPURITIES eliminated from my system." (Signed) J. E. Puckett.

Adlerika is a constant surprise to people who have used only ordinary bowel and stomach medicines, on account of its rapid, pleasant and COMPLETE action. It is sold by leading druggists everywhere.—[Advertisement.]

What Hostesses Have Been About Lately

Mrs. Howland Ford

As Miss Madeline Ramsay, daughter of Mrs. Anna B. Ramsey of South Rampart Boulevard, Mrs. Howland Ford was one of the most popular members of the younger social set. Mr. and Mrs. Ford have returned from their wedding trip to Lake Tahoe and the Yosemtie and are at home to their friends at 1129 Kenniston avenue.

The affair was held in the Masonic lodge rooms and was largely attended. Harry F. Leslie was installed as Noble Grand for the Three Linkers, while Nellie B. Wilde was inducted into the corresponding position in the sisterhood. Refreshments were served following the ritualistic ceremonies.

Sierra Madre

Mrs. W. E. Walker of this city entertained a group of friends on Saturday last in honor of her daughter, Miss Gladys, whose engagement to Mr. Charles Klunk, Jr., was announced. Mr. Klunk lives in Sierra Madre and the two young people have gone to school together, graduating in the class of '21 of Pasadena High School. The luncheon was cleverly arranged, a kewpie mail man at each plate spreading the news of the betrothal. The centerpiece of larkspur and white sweet peas accented the flower color scheme carried throughout the house. Bridge and mah jongg were the diversion of the afternoon. Covers were laid for eighteen. Among those present were the young girls of Miss Walker's set: The Misses Martha Gysin, Marion Kewniston, Irene Meyers, Emma Leheman Corlie, Bernadetta Brown, Berdie Bright of Los Angeles; Harriet Wright, Mable Short, Reeta Walher of Pasadena; Mrs. Ed Hart, Mrs. Ralph Stover (nee Betty Shaw;) Mrs. Hall Perry, the Misses Mary Jameson, Elizabeth Ferris, Mattie Seely of Sierra Madre; Mrs. Jean Halliger of Glendale, and Mrs. Jerry Albright of Los Angeles. Mrs. Albright was Miss Glayds Kimball, a Sierra Madre neighbor until she joined the brigade of brides who left the town this June to make her home in the near-by metropolis. A number of affairs are being planned with Miss Walker as honoree before the nuptials, the date or season for which has not yet been set.

Since the arrival for the summer of her house guest, Mrs. John Schlatterer a Columbia College woman, Mrs. Laura Cline's residence in Sierra Madre Canyon Park has been the scene of several parties, among them a pergola picnic the last week. The O. D. Hunt family from Pasadena were among the chief guests, coming en masse and making quite a contingent in themselves. The particular occasion for this frolic was the fact that for a week Mrs. Cline has had as guests, Mrs. Effie Kunkle and her mother, Mrs. Grossman of Columbus, O. All the Hunts, Mrs. Cline and her house guest were formerly Ohio people and the reunion was singularly pleasant. Mrs. Grossman and her daughter are at Long Beach and are planning to spend the summer in the sunny Southland. Friday afternoon Mrs. Cline and Mrs. Schlatterer were among the many guests present at the beautiful garden party given by Mrs. Cagmay of Hollywood.

Buena Park

Plans for the members of the Everready Class to spend a week at Lake Arrowhead occupied the principal place in discussion at the meeting held Thursday afternoon. Spencer of Stillwater, Okla.

Long Beach

Beach suppers arranged by Long Beach hostesses and the various social organizations grow in favor as the season advances. One of the most enjoyable of the week was that of the Long Beach chapter of Phi Kappa Psi, with Mr. and Mrs. Shirley E. Meserve of Los Angeles as guests of honor. The party was held on the beach below the Commodore, where a fire, beach supper and songs and stories were the pastimes. About twenty-five of the members and their wives joined in the merry-making.

The wedding of Miss Nadine Jaccard Clark with Richard Althius Coons, both of Kansas City, was the culmination of a trip to the biennial of Miss Clark and her mother, Mrs. Algernon R. Clark. Instead of returning to her home Miss Clark, delighted with the attractions of Southern California, urged her fiancee to come west for the ceremony. Many friends of both families were present at the wedding on Monday evening, the 14th inst. at the Palace Apartments, the service being read by the Rev. George Taubman of the First Christian Church of Long Beach. After a honeymoon on the Coast, Mr. and Mrs. Coons will return to Kansas City to make their future home.

Many out of town guests were present. After a trip to San Francisco and the Yosemite, Mr. and Mrs. Hoover will be at their new home in Long Beach.

Miss Mabelle Casper returned this week from a week's visit to San Francisco made in company with Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Griffith and their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Griffith of Azusa.

Friday afternoon Mrs. C. B. Shoemaker entertained in a delightful manner in observance of the third birthday anniversary of her son, Clifton. Late in the afternoon the guests were assembled at tables in the patio, where each child was delighted with an individual cake lighted with a tiny candle. Ice cream in the form of animals and a large birthday cake were also served.

Their house guest, Miss Margaret Cashin of Los Angeles, furnished the inspiration for a delightful evening affair with which Mr. and Mrs. Leon F. Out of Date

JEWELRY REMODELED

THIS IS an excellent time, the "dog days," to have your old and out of date jewelry remodeled—made into something smart, voguish.

Those diamonds you have, always valuable, but because of their resting in an old setting are of little use to you. Or, perhaps, some old brooch, pin, necklace or some loose stones need making over. Well, then, bring them here! Alaska has produced nearly half a billion dollars' worth of minerals, and 97 per cent of this has come from her deposits of gold, copper and silver.

Radium deposits, richer than the only others successfully worked in Europe, have recently been found on old copper mining properties long idle in Czecho-Slovakia.

The experiments made in Ceylon by the firm of Gordon, Frazer & Co., for the use of rubber as a road surfacing material did not meet with the anticipated good results. The process consisted merely in the melting of scrap rubber, and the application of it, while hot, to the roads, it being spread in the same manner as a tar dressing, according to Consul Marshall M. Vance, Colombo, in a report to the Department of Commerce.

Missouri ranks first in the amount of cotton grown an acre, with an average of 325 pounds. The figure next nearest is an average of 264 pounds in North Carolina. Then comes California, with an average of 258 pounds to the acre. More than 8000 people moved into Southeast Missouri last autumn from the South to raise cotton, as it is north of the boll weevil line.

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN

High wages are paid to experts employed in packing women's trunks. Both in Paris and London, but especially in the French capital, this has become a regular profession, and probably seven out of ten wealthy women who buy wardrobes in Paris employ a professional packer, who may be supplied either by the modiste or the hotel.

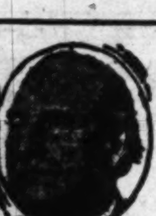
Bryan's Weekly Bible Talk

By William Jennings Bryan



The Temptations of Jesus

Text of Today's Bible Talk by Mr. Bryan

(Matthew iv, 1-11)

Then was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil.

And when He had fasted forty days and forty nights, He was afterward an hungered.

And when the tempter came to Him, He said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.

But He answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

Then the devil taketh Him up in the holy city, and setteth Him on a pinnacle of the temple,

And saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear Thee up, lest at any time Thou dash Thy foot against a stone.

Jesus said unto him, It is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

Again, the devil taketh Him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth Him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them;

And saith unto Him, All these things will I give Thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.

Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve.

Then the devil leaveth Him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto Him.

a Bible text grows on one is studied!

verses chosen for today are illustration; lesson out of Matthew's of this important incident in the life of the Master— temptation by the devil—and attention.

now ready to begin this His first act is to seek the forerunner, and offer for baptism. His second to retire into the wilderness is tempted of the devil.

Bible so teaches, and who it if he has kept watch himself?

less than a real evil per- (call it what you will,) account for what we know to each one of us—the personality that suggests the thoughts that come, unbidden to us, and that we indignantly banish.

A COMMON EXPERIENCE

Paul says: "For the good that I would do, I do not, but the evil that I would not do, that I do;" is that not the experience of us all?

It is not so much that we break the laws of man, for which prompt and visible punishments are provided, but rather the moral law, set forth in God's word and enforced by conscience.

There is a wide zone between what God requires of us and what the statutes prohibit.

The devil does not, as a rule, urge us to do that for which swift and sure punishment is provided by law; he urges us to do the wrong things that human law does not forbid, or to fail to do the good things that duty requires.

Jesus fasted forty days and nights in the wilderness and was "afterwards an hungered."

The first temptation was to satisfy the craving of His body for food. The devil knows our weaknesses and is always ready with the temptations that will make the strongest appeal to us at the time and under the circumstances that exist.

BODILY TEMPTATIONS

Most of man's temptations come through the flesh. The desire for food is natural and must be met. We cannot remove the desire because our very life depends upon its gratification, but the desire for food, like every other bodily desire, must be curbed by the will and kept under proper restraint.

One may eat too much—"dig his grave with his teeth"—to use common expression; or one may waste on expensive foods money that he should spend in better ways. The indictment brought upon Dives was that "he fared sumptuously every day" while Lazarus had only the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table.

The appetite for intoxicating drink may be indulged until body, mind, and soul are completely wrecked. Other temptations, if yielded to, may entirely destroy man's body and make him an encumbrance on the earth.

Christ pointed to the restraint that comes to man from above. He was all powerful, as is the Heavenly Father, and might have commanded the stones to become bread, but He answered:

"It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

THE SECOND TEMPTATION

One can endure hunger when he has sufficient reason for not eating, but no reason other than a spiritual one is sufficient to overcome, for a long time, the urgent demand for hunger.

The soul that can hold the body in the flames until the fire consumes the quivering flesh — that and that alone can resist the temptations that come to us through the physical man.

The second temptation teaches use that one should be careful in the use of power.

Christ could have cast himself down from the pinnacle of the temple without suffering injury, just as He could walk on the water without sinking, but what good could He have accomplished if he had spent his time accepting the dares of the devil?

Many a boy has lost his life because he did not know enough, or have courage, to refuse to take a risk just to prove the possession of power.

If Christ had accepted the challenge offered in the second temptation, His example would have had disastrous effect throughout the ages.

Responsibility comes with power; one is in duty bound to use for good all the power he has. He has neither the right, nor the time, to employ his power merely to show what he can do, however much he would be able to gratify his vanity by so doing.

THE GREAT DECEIVER

The third temptation instructs us along another line.

The devil took Christ to the top of an exceeding high mountain and offered him all the kingdoms of the earth if He, the Holy One, would fall down and worship his satanic majesty.

This temptation was characteristic of the devil, who is a liar and the father of liars.

He is the great deceiver and is busy everywhere, every day, leading the unwary astray.

Sometimes he appeals to the flesh, sometimes he appeals to the vanity. Sometimes he appeals to the ambition. But he has nothing that is really his own—nothing that he can deliver.

He is like a New York swindler who offers to sell Brooklyn Bridge or the City Hall to some confiding victim for a few dollars.

There is not one square foot of the earth's surface that the devil holds in fee simple; he is a tenant by sufferance and can be put out at any time. He will relinquish, by demand of the King of Kings and the Prince of Peace, every place that he now occupies in that day when every knee shall bow and every tongue confess.

DOING WHAT JESUS DID

The devil was bold enough to offer Christ the world, only to be rejected and spurned. For the third time, Christ answered, "It is written," adding, this time, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve."

Christ had proven his strength; He was not approachable by way of bodily hunger or by way of vanity or by way of ambition. Satan had failed in his three-fold attempt and, bowing before the command, "Get thee hence," vanished from the presence of the Master.

It will help us all to resist temptation if we will do what Jesus did.

In the first place, He knew the Bible, as it was in His day. His quotations from it are conclusive proof that He was familiar with the law and the prophets.

In the second place, He quoted from the Bible. Although "He spake as never man spake," and could have framed answers of his own, yet, instead of doing so, he met each of the three temptations with, "It is written."

To set us an example worthy of imitation. If Christ could find in the Old Testament all the answers needed to meet the assaults of the enemy, cannot the Christians of today find in our Bible, containing both the Old and New Testaments, answers sufficient to resist attacks of today?

A SLOGAN FOR THE CHURCH

Matthew says that Jesus was "led up of the spirit" and Luke adds that he was "full of the Holy Ghost;" possibly Christians would quote more from the Bible if they followed more frequently the leading of the spirit.

When one is full of conceit and led by his own egotism, he does not feel the need of an authoritative guide, but when he is humbled by a sense of his "finiteness amid an infinite universe and of his sinfulness," he is glad to fall back upon the infallible word of God and hide behind the impregnable rock of the Holy Scriptures.

"It is written" is one of the lessons needed most at the present hour. Every criticism of the Christian religion and of the evangelical church can be answered by quotations from the Bible, and such criticisms can be answered in no other way.

The Bible gives us our only conception of God, the only record of God's dealing with man, and the only knowledge that we have of Christ, His mission and His truth. When we impair faith in the Bible, we destroy the credibility of the only witness we have, not only of the deity of Christ and the plan of salvation, but to His wisdom and leadership.

"It is written" may well be made the slogan of the church in its defense of revealed religion, of a supernatural Christ, and of historic Christianity.

USEFUL INVENTIONS

The great bells in historic Notre Dame de Paris, which once were pulled by Quasimodo, the hero of Victor Hugo's novel, "Notre Dame de Paris," are now rung by electricity. The small control levers are operated by the hand of a woman, Mme. Herbert.

An apparatus has been perfected which automatically registers the amount of salt in sea water, thus making possible more accurate knowledge of the paths of ocean currents. It is also expected that it will aid in detecting the approach of icebergs. It is an electrical device developed by the United States Bureau of Standards.

Platinum is a most valuable metal not only to the jeweler but to the chemist, because it is so resistant to corrosion. But it is so costly that efforts are all the time being made to find a substitute. Among the latest of these are alloys of chromium, and the pure metallic chromium electroplated on iron. The alloys may be used in place of platinum for negative poles, in electroanalytic work, while the chromium-plated electrodes are even more resistant. These discoveries tend to diminish the great demand for platinum by chemists, chromium being not only cheaper, but very much harder than platinum and therefore not so likely to be hurt by mechanical treatment.

Mine-mouth power plants, about which much has recently been written, are only practicable where coal and condenser water occur side by side, says an article in Power, devoted to a description of one of the latest of these plants, that of the Penn Central Light and Power Company, at Saxton, Pa. Coal is supplied from nearby semi-bituminous mines, while water is carried into the boilers from the Raystown branch of the Juniata River, which flows within a few hundred yards of the plant. The present development is 20,000 kilowatts, but conditions are favorable for expansion to four or five times that capacity.

With the claim that it is the first to use the tides successfully in the generation of electricity, a hydro-electric plant employing this principle has been set up at East Saugus, near Lyons, Mass. The plant, which is the invention of Domenico Damiano, of Boston, was begun two years ago and was completed and put in operation early in the present year. It consists of a small power house above a well on an arm of the Saugus River, in which is a turbine set in motion by the ebb and flow of the tide. About sixty-five horse power is generated by a dynamo rigged to the turbine. The plant was financed largely by Italian residents of Massachusetts.

RUBBER HOSE HISTORY

The first fire hose was invented in 1672, and consisted of a narrow strip of leather with the edges riveted together so as to form a tube. Leather firehose of this type was first made in America in the year 1808, in Philadelphia.

Rubber hose was first produced in England, about 100 years ago. It was made by braiding threads of rubber on a core of rope coated with molasses and glue. It was then treated with chemicals so that the rubber threads became incorporated, after which the core was removed by boiling.

The next type of rubber hose appeared about 1859. It was made by weaving cotton yarn into a flat strip, coating it on one side with rubber, and then turning it on a mandrel and riveting the edges together as in leather hose. Sometimes hose was made with two plies of this sort, each ply being riveted separately.

After this, in 1877, came the invention of the loom for weaving a seamless tube of cotton, which made possible the type of cotton rubber-lined hose now extensively used as fire hose.

Last of all was developed the idea of coating fabric with a rubber compound, cutting it into bias strips wide enough to make several plies, attaching a flat strip of rubber at one side to form the outer cover, and then winding the whole thing around a rubber tube on a rod or mandrel of the de- various plies together without the sired size, permitting the adhesive power of the rubber to hold the use of rivets. This efficient method is now in general use.

STATE SOCIETIES

Summer picnics under the auspices of the State societies and the Federation of State Societies are going merrily forward in city parks and at the beach. Seven States were listed for Bixby Park, Long Beach, and the opening gun was fired yesterday by the Pennsylvanians who filled the park with a vast crowd. Next Saturday the loyal Illinoisans of Southern California will stage their reunion at Bixby Park and 15,000 Suckers are expected. On the same date, at Sycamore Grove, Los Angeles, the Hoosiers will rally. On the 30th inst., Arizona, Nevada and New Mexico, will meet at Bixby Park. These Wednesday picnickers will take advantage of the special 40-cent round-trip rate offered that date by the Pacific Electric. The Nebraskans will celebrate on August 2, and the Hawkeyes August 9 at Bixby Park. More than 100,000 merry-makers will join in these rallies at the beach city. At each picnic basket dinners will be enjoyed. County headquarters will be opened. Silk souvenir badges and hot coffee will be supplied and brief programs of song and oratory arranged.

ODD FELLOWS

Golden Rule Lodge conducted a social meeting last Monday evening. Noble Grand O. Abernathy promised to arrange for special music to assist the degree staff in the future. Upon the suggestion of Past Grand Master "Billy" Schlosser, the lodge extended an invitation to the Southwestern Rebekah Lodge to use the large lodge hall Monday evening, the 28th inst., when the Rebekah degree staff will confer the initiatory degree on a class of twenty-four candidates, after which the installation ceremony of the officers-elect will take place. This courtesy was promptly recognized by the Rebekah Lodge, who extended an invitation to the Golden Rule brothers to be their guest on that occasion.

Southwestern Odd Fellows will give a basket party and other entertaining features next Wednesday evening at the Walker Auditorium. The applications for admittance to membership will be held over until August 20, when the degree staff will confer the initiatory degree in the presence of Lloyd Cohn, Grand Master of California. The secretary has forty applications on file and fifty-two prospective candidates are now listed with the committees-of-investigation.

NATIVE SONS OF THE GOLDEN WEST

According to the report of Grand Secretary John T. Regan, the Native Sons of the Golden West have been particularly active during the last term in the dedication of public buildings. During the last term the following buildings were dedicated under the auspices of the Grand Parlor, with the grand officers officiating: Brentwood Grammar School, Union High School at Lakeport, Native Sons Building at Palo Alto, Jack London Memorial at Glen Ellen, May Henning Grammar School at Ventura, Longfellow Grammar School at Berkeley, Union High School at Bieber, Elementary School at Fort Bragg, Grammar School at Oakley, J. W. McClymond's High School at Oakland, Galileo High School at San Francisco, Amanda Chapel at Los Angeles, Jedediah Strong Smith monument at Los Angeles and the Union High School at Glendale. During the same period cornerstones were laid for the Carquinez Grammar School at Crockett, Golden Gate Union High School at Oakland, Soldiers' Monument at Pershing Square and the Branch Municipal Building at Sawtelle. The Grand Parlor and various subordinate parlors presented ninety sets of silk American and Bear flags to various schools and organizations.

With eight grand officers present and a charter membership of fifty-two, Sutter Parlor, No. 261, Native Sons of the Golden West, was instituted at Sutter City July 11.

Charles Easton was installed as the new president of Romona Parlor last week.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS

The golden jubilee celebration at Avalon was one of the most successful affairs even given by the Foresters of California. About 500 persons went over Saturday and, with the hundreds that spent the whole week there, they made a crowd that "kept things moving."

Court E. G., No. 33, had the pleasure of a visit last Tuesday evening from Supreme Vice-Chief Ranger Frank E. Hand, who spoke of his eastern work and congratulated the local membership on their accomplishments and on their privilege of living and having their being in sunny Southern California. Mr. Hand is now in charge of the organizing work of practically the entire order.

Companion Court Morris Vinyard entertained members and friends with a luncheon prior to the regular meeting last Wednesday. Companion Court E. S. entertained with a card party last Tuesday evening.

The library at the Foresters' Building has been enriched with a fine collection of books, the gift of Jack Brandenburg.

High Chief Ranger J. P. Murphy of the High Court of Northern California and Mrs. Murphy, who have been attending the golden jubilee celebration, have extended their visit and will stay until next week. Mr. Murphy will be a speaker at the meeting of Court E. G. next Tuesday.

LOYAL ORDER OF MOOSE

Golden State Lodge conducted its regular weekly meeting last Wednesday. The entertainment committee members reported that they will give an entertainment ou the 30th inst. All Moose and their friends are invited. The show will be free to the public.

On the 27th inst., at 2 p.m., the Moose of Southern California will gather at Graceland Cemetery and dedicate the Moose section. Golden State Lodge has, through its members, purchased a large section, and on that day the lodge will bury the ashes of "Daddy" Jaquith, one of their members.

EXTRAORDINARY

Out of a single pound of cotton 4770 miles of thread has been spun.

About 150 species of fish belong to the shark family.

Eighty fires heat the boilers of the transoceanic liner Homeric.

A single spider has been known to spin a web 34,800 feet long.

Some idea of the trade in radio supplies may be approximated when it is known that there are more radio stores in New York City now than there were saloons in pre-war days.

Lil and Red, cows owned by Ezra Edgell, of Smithfield, W. Va., saved their own lives when fishing creek rose to record flood stage. The cows planted front hoofs against the side of their barn, keeping their noses out of water, which would have drowned them had it risen three inches more, as a haymow above held their heads down. The horses and another cow in the same barn were drowned.

John R. Stacey, a Marblehead lobsterman, has done something that few other men have been able to accomplish, says the Boston Globe. He has won the confidence of a wild sea gull so that the bird will accompany him on his trips to inspect his traps and will even eat raw fish from his hands. This particular gull is jealous, too, as he drives away any other gull that seems inclined to make friends with Mr. Stacey.

A "canned skunk held up traffic on the trolley line between West Chester, Pa., and Lenape Park. The animal had found a small tin meat can and in searching for possible dainties its head became wedged in the can so that it was unable to get free, and in its predicament it took to the tracks. The motorman dislodged it with a switch bar. Fifty passengers on the car sought cover while the motorman removed the obstruction. Later in the day it was found by a searching party and killed with a shotgun.

A gypsum bed 99.8 per cent pure extending ten miles inland for a mile along a branch of the Mosse River, midway between Cochrane and James Bay, Ontario, is said to be one of the world's most important. It was but recently discovered. The outcropping can be seen at the river's edge, where the deposit is forty feet thick.

BLACKTAIL DOE IS GENTLE DOMESTIC PET

There are pets, and pets, but for one that is loving and lovable I'll choose a blacktail doe.

Such a pet was Babe, who was found by a range rider when about two weeks old. In a few days she became accustomed to the family life and would sleep nowhere except upon the living-room couch. When turned out, she would run up and down on the porch, jumping at the door and window, making that plaintive little deer noise which resembles a tiny kitten more than anything else, until someone took pity upon her and let her in again, writes Maude G. Prather in American Forest and Forest Life.

Before her spots had disappeared, at the age of three months, she had to be denied the privilege of the house, as she had developed an insatiable appetite for house plants and soap. She devoured all of either that she could find, seemingly with the greatest relish.

Her main food, after she was weaned from the bottle, was bread and milk. She would eat slice after slice of bread, and was especially fond of left-over hot cakes. Every morning she would drink a whole pan of milk, sometimes with bread crumbled in it; and, being allowed to run at large, she had all the grass and brouse that she desired.

It was soon decided that Babe must have a mate, which resulted in the advent of Togo, a yearling buck. This necessitated a permit from the fish and game commission.

As soon as Togo's horns became hard he fought everything that moved. He took especial delight in wrestling with an unlatched barn door, with which he would tussle by the hour. He had an especial dislike for strangers, but stood in awe of a stick and would run from any one carrying one.

He was a creature of moods—one moment licking the hand of a member of the family and the next standing on his hind legs and pawing the air in an effort to make mincemeat of that person with his viciously sharp front hoofs. He devoured with avidity every scrap of paper that he could find; also any old sacks or rags, and had an especial weakness for the heads and wings of small ducks, chickens or turkeys, all of which seemed never to affect his general health.

HOW ACCIDENTS HAPPEN

A popular pastime in Kansas City now in auto riding is to pinch your partner when you see a red car. Pinching, according to Dad Armstrong, is a way station between the extremes of decorous conversation and petting. It requires no qualifications in age or gender and its relation to entertainment is the same as jazz to music.—[Capper's Weekly.

Two Miles of Sweet Peas

Three hundred and fifty seniors of a high school at Tacoma, Wash., adopted the lavender sweet pea as their class flower a few months ago and pledged they would each plant twenty feet of lavender sweet peas. That would make, they calculated about two miles of sweet peas and would supply enough blossoms to decorate the stage when they were graduated this June.

THE NEW

IN STORES AND HOMES

NOVELTIES, IDEAS AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

By Olive Gray

Up-to-Datest:

The new sweaters, hintful of fall, are of angora wool, in white or delicate colors, usually elaborated by braid embroidery in bold designs. Sometimes the braid matches the garment in shade; again it is in vivid contrast.

The first hats of the approaching season are higher in crown than those of now. Velvet, felt and fabric form the basis of this millinery, which occasionally disports odd feather fancies for trim. An extensive local showing of new millinery is in tones of brown velvet, ranging from cocoa to the darker wood shades and is principally self-trimmed.

New Vanities

New vanities are round in shape, flat and rather thin. Metallic frames surround discs of leather, of silk, satin or elaborated fabric and the interiors are fitted with appliances of feminine beautification, usually in a contrasting color in moire silk. Suspended by chains or cords, these vanities may be carried conveniently without dispossessing the under-arm bag or box.

Tartans

Even silks have succumbed to the plaided effect. Some of the new rough surfaced crepes are in bold tartan designs and colorings. For sports skirts these plaids are admirable.

"Chore Boy"

Really it is a ball of metallic slivers—copper, supposedly. Aunt Jane brought one home the other day and declares it the cat's whisk—no, no! Aunt Jane never said such a thing! She declared it most helpful in the kitchen for scouring obstinate pots and pans.

Gladys Writes:

That Parisiennes are going to extremes in bathing suits. "The most striking suits," she says, "look as though the wearer were endeavoring to crawl through them and had very nearly succeeded in so doing, for the collars extend nearly to the ears and the sleeves are knuckle-wrapping, while the skirts are short, shorter, shortest, some mere frills along the lower edge of a very abbreviated basque." Truly, modesty chooses extremes when it comes to bathing attire!

Pocketed

Agnes's new flannel frock is scarfed in self-material and one end of the somewhat narrow neck swathe is tucked cleverly into the tiny breast pocket of the dress, the other wandering whithersoever its fancy dictates.

Hanging for Men

Of course I mean for their clothes. New hangers come with well rounded shoulders and with trousers hangers and at the same time pressers, attached. Of course men will not adopt them, but women may present them for Christmas. Did you ever know a man to concede that any new device for hanging garments was worth a flood-control project, until after it was tested on him against his will?

That Furniture Sale

Women just have to possess imagination, else they would never do any money saving. The most economizing sales always come just when we are thinking about something else. Look at that furniture sale! What right-minded woman can resist it; or should try to? We simply must project our imagination ahead, to next winter, when the house will be needing—oh just everything, to make it livable. For that is the way to swell the family bank account. She who takes advantage of sales for needed articles is laying up money and at the same time keeping the home up to a high standard.

In Fashion's Domain

A bonnet of black satin is faced with pink satin, and has a top knot of pink roses.

Embroidery in beads and spangles is used on an evening frock of white crepe.

Bands of narrow green lace are used on the skirt of a frock of green mousseline.

A stocking of sheer chiffon is woven in a lace-like pattern and then embroidered.

Touches of ecru organdie are used on a frock of blue and rust checked serge

A very narrow rhinestone and silver girdle is used on a slim frock of silver cloth.

Embroidered bands trim a frock of yellow kasha with a pleated side panel of green.

Pleating at the sides, and hand drawnwork are features of sheer summer frocks.

The evening decolletage is quite low in back, and the skirts are straight and short.

Embroidery in mandarin-blue and gold is used on a Chinese blouse of black crepe satin.

Rose-colored marabou and delicate silver lace are used on a frock of pale pink chiffon.

A yoke and bands of matching lace are used on a frock of tortoise-shell-colored crepe.

A charming frock of black alpaca has collar and cuffs of ecru organdie embroidered in gold.

All-white is also smart for evening.

Monogram buckles are used on suede belts.

Slits are permissible in the very narrow skirt.

Black again predominates for evening wear.

The circular flare has returned to grace the mode.

Carved ivory bracelets are another Chinese note.

He was confronted by obstacles in making his representations effective. Whoever solves the problem will have profited by Mr. Franks's experience—not to give opera out of doors unless it can be both heard and seen under fitting conditions.

FRITZ REINER ACTIVE

About the busiest person this summer is Fritz Reiner of the Cincinnati Symphony. It is not so many weeks ago that this gifted musician sailed for Europe. After a brief stay in London he departed for Prague; and recent accounts state that he made a deep impression there by his conducting in the Prague Festival.

On July 31 he will arrive in New York to serve for two weeks as guest conductor of the stadium concerts. It will mark the first public appearance here of a leader who has attracted much attention ever since his debut at Cincinnati, which has since been attended with such gratifying results.

Mid-August will find Reiner in Berlin, where he has just been engaged to conduct a Mozart cycle and a Wagner cycle at the Volksoper. The conductor might remain there permanently—as a general music director—if he desired, but he prefers the United States, and his contract with the Cincinnati Symphony still has three years to run.

PUCCINI'S "TURANDOT"

There appears to be a difference of opinion concerning the premiere of Puccini's opera, "Turandot"—his latest composition, and one upon which he has devoted a deal of pains. Persons claiming to know have asserted that "Turandot" will have its first presentation in Italy, but one of the latest bits of information states that our Metropolitan Opera Company has secured the producing rights for the coming season.

A few days ago Puccini himself was quoted in an Italian newspaper to the effect that his work would not be performed anywhere during 1924-1925. If this be true, there must have arisen recently some reason for postponing the much-talked-about premiere. Perhaps the maestro wishes to reconstruct some part or parts of his opera. He may have reached his years of musical discretion, which scarcely obtained when he composed "The Girl of the Golden West," an opera that did not enhance his excellent reputation.

THE FRENCH AND CHALIAPIN

Great talent sometimes displays itself in other ways than the purely artistic and elsewhere than on the operatic stage. Take, for purposes of illustration, the recent "lapse of memory" on the part of Feodor Chaliapin, who quite forgot that he was to appear in a performance of "Boris Godounow" in Paris.

Whether the correct reason is given by those who are censuring the Russian basso for his nonappearance, it is evident that at the hour he should have been made up and about ready to go on the stage he was chatting with friends in a place adjoining the operahouse. As a consequence, the opera management was obliged to disappoint its patrons, many of whom were prominent people.

Some of these latter, it seems, reached their homes furious, and wrote to the management of the opera protesting against the future engagement of "foreign" artists.

His Social Call

"I called at the Munniswells today," said Snobb, "Stylish people they are; house splendidly furnished; received me very graciously and asked me to call again." "They did?" inquired Gunn. "Why, I always heard they were very exclusive. How did they entertain you?" "Oh, I didn't stop long," said Snobb. "Only called with a bill for groceries."—[Exchange.

Still, It's Outside of Main St.

A London writer tells of meeting Sinclair Lewis's 7-year-old son and remarking to him: "You must have traveled a great deal."

"Oh, no, not much," he answered. "You see, I always go to the same places—America, England, Italy, Switzerland—I just go to these places again and again. Oh, no, I haven't really traveled."—[Boston Transcript.

RCHASE "LIFE OF CHRIST"

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

YORK, July 19.—After months of negotiations the film Papini's "Life of Christ" have finally been secured by First . HELENE HAS NO COMPLEX NOR ROUGE

Miss Chadwick is Just Perfectly Natural, Normal and Altogether Attractive

BY KATHERINE LIPKE

My search for a perfect type of a normal American girl in motion pictures ended last week in a glorified aura of English muffins and iced tea, for across the table from me was Helene Chadwick. She had no complexes, no affectations, and no rouge. She said nothing of the glory of her art, the present status of woman, or the high price of bootleg. She was just a perfectly natural, perfectly normal and altogether attractive American girl.

She didn't patronize, and she didn't gush. I kept her waiting an hour and she didn't sulk or display temperament. She simply accepted my explanation in the manner in which it was given and calmly sipped her lemonade. I felt as if we had gone to high school together and would meet the next day for a game of tennis. She wasn't a film star, she was a chum. But, of course, being normal and without spasms of temperament, Helene longs to be different. The arch crime against her is to say how "sweet and wholesome" she is. It makes her feel like a loaf of bread.

If Helene Chadwick could have her way she would like to be a Lillian Gish. "I haven't a spark of the Gish genius within me, I know," she said, while she dived for the inevitable cherry in the bottom of her glass. "But if I could be powerfully and sweetly tragic, gripping people as Lillian Gish does, I'd believe I'd have reached my heart's desire. I'm tired of being the normal good girl.

"In 'Brothers Under the Skin' I had more of a character role and they let me chew gum all through the picture. It was great. I get so tired of being civilized and sweetly good. If I could have a chance to be a little bit interesting and perhaps a little bit bad, on the screen, I think life would be much more worth living."

Helene arrived in the city last week from an eight months' stay in New York and she was full of chamber of commerce feelings for Hollywood and California. She thought it was cool and lovely here and she intended to stay for a long, long time. That was her idea. However, William Howard, the Lasky director, met her with the news that she would leave tomorrow for the Arizona mountains for the shooting of the outdoor scenes of "The Border Legion," the Zane Grey picture, in which Miss Chadwick is to star.

In the meantime, she has been running around sampling the beaches, accumulating outdoor clothes, and remodeling her disposition to withstand the Arizona heat without any fireworks. As a temporary comfort she has been told that her destination is 6200 feet and some inkling has been given her of the cool comfort of the mountains. But as far as Helene is concerned, 6200 feet just means that distance nearer to the sun and the prospect is dismal. Moreover, she is to be the only woman in the company.

The Zane Grey picture will be Miss Chadwick's third venture in free lancing. After the release from her four-year contract with Goldwyn's, where she declared she had no expression in the choice of pictures in which she was to play, it has been a glorious adventure to be out on her own. "I like to have my own way," she confessed. "Of course, I understand that, for the most part, the directors know best. But you know there isn't a girl living who doesn't rebel at doing things always just as she is told. It's a perfectly normal feeling—" Miss Chadwick stopped and laughed ruefully. She had used the word she detested. "Oh, I suppose that people are right. I am perfectly normal. Why I even diet." And that seemed to settle it.

We had been having a beautiful chat and awoke with a start to find that we had exhausted our tea and lemonade and also had eaten all the time at our disposal. Miss Chadwick gave her bobbed hair a jab under her hat and she was ready. No taking out of rouge, of powder or of lipstick—no arranging of gloves or draping of furs.

As we went out the door she turned and said, "I have the worst

The opening night offered testimony of this from the fact that the audience was a trifle bewildered when they were introduced successively to Miss Etta Lee, Miss Winter Blossom and Mr. So-Jin, and one or two others whom they had probably never seen or heard of before.

Doug has done exceptional things in the casting of pictures ere this. He practically made Wallace Beery and Sam De Grasse through the opportunities that he gave them in "Robin Hood." He is shrewd and clever at detecting native qualities of ability and new kinks of talent in others and he knows what goes to create actors. The reason may be that he is not such an astonishingly efficient actor himself and consequently has a wider vision in these matters.

I venture that little Anna May Wong, who does the intriguing Chinese girl in "The Thief of Bagdad," will have a whole host of parts of that sort thrown her way henceforward. Her portrayal is really a marked advance for her, because in the past she has so often been merely decorative. So-Jin is unforgettably clever too, and all the orientals and Eurasians who took part in the picture, of whom there were any number, proved themselves exceptionally capable.

The oriental is naturally a good actor on the screen because of his repression. There has never, in fact, been any actor who has equaled Sessue Hayakawa in some of his best moments.

The only trouble with these Thespians of the Far East is that they are extremely limited as to the individuality and variety with which they may enter a part. Their power is all along the line of suppressed emotion and most audiences weary eventually of this.

I HOPE they make "Eddie" Horton stay on the stage. That's where he belongs, most emphatically. He is one of the cleverest comedians and the most interesting as to personality who has ever breezed across the boards. Beside him Willie Collier and his type are heavy clumping truck horses, and if Horton ever goes back on New York's Broadway he will sweep the place like a storm.

Horton always wanted to play in pictures, I believe, and he did fairly well while he was there, but he was never cut out for the silent drama because his style of acting is so peculiarly intimate and so much a part of his manner and voice inflection.

An absence of a year and a half has made little change in his status as a popular idol. People are still rushing to "The Nervous Wreck," even though it was seen here just before Horton left the Majestic after its original premiere. He created the title part and he should have gone back to New York to play it then. If he had he would by this time have been a first-magnitude Broadway star.

There is much consolation, however, in the fact that New York's loss happens to be our gain. I hope, for the sake of good per-

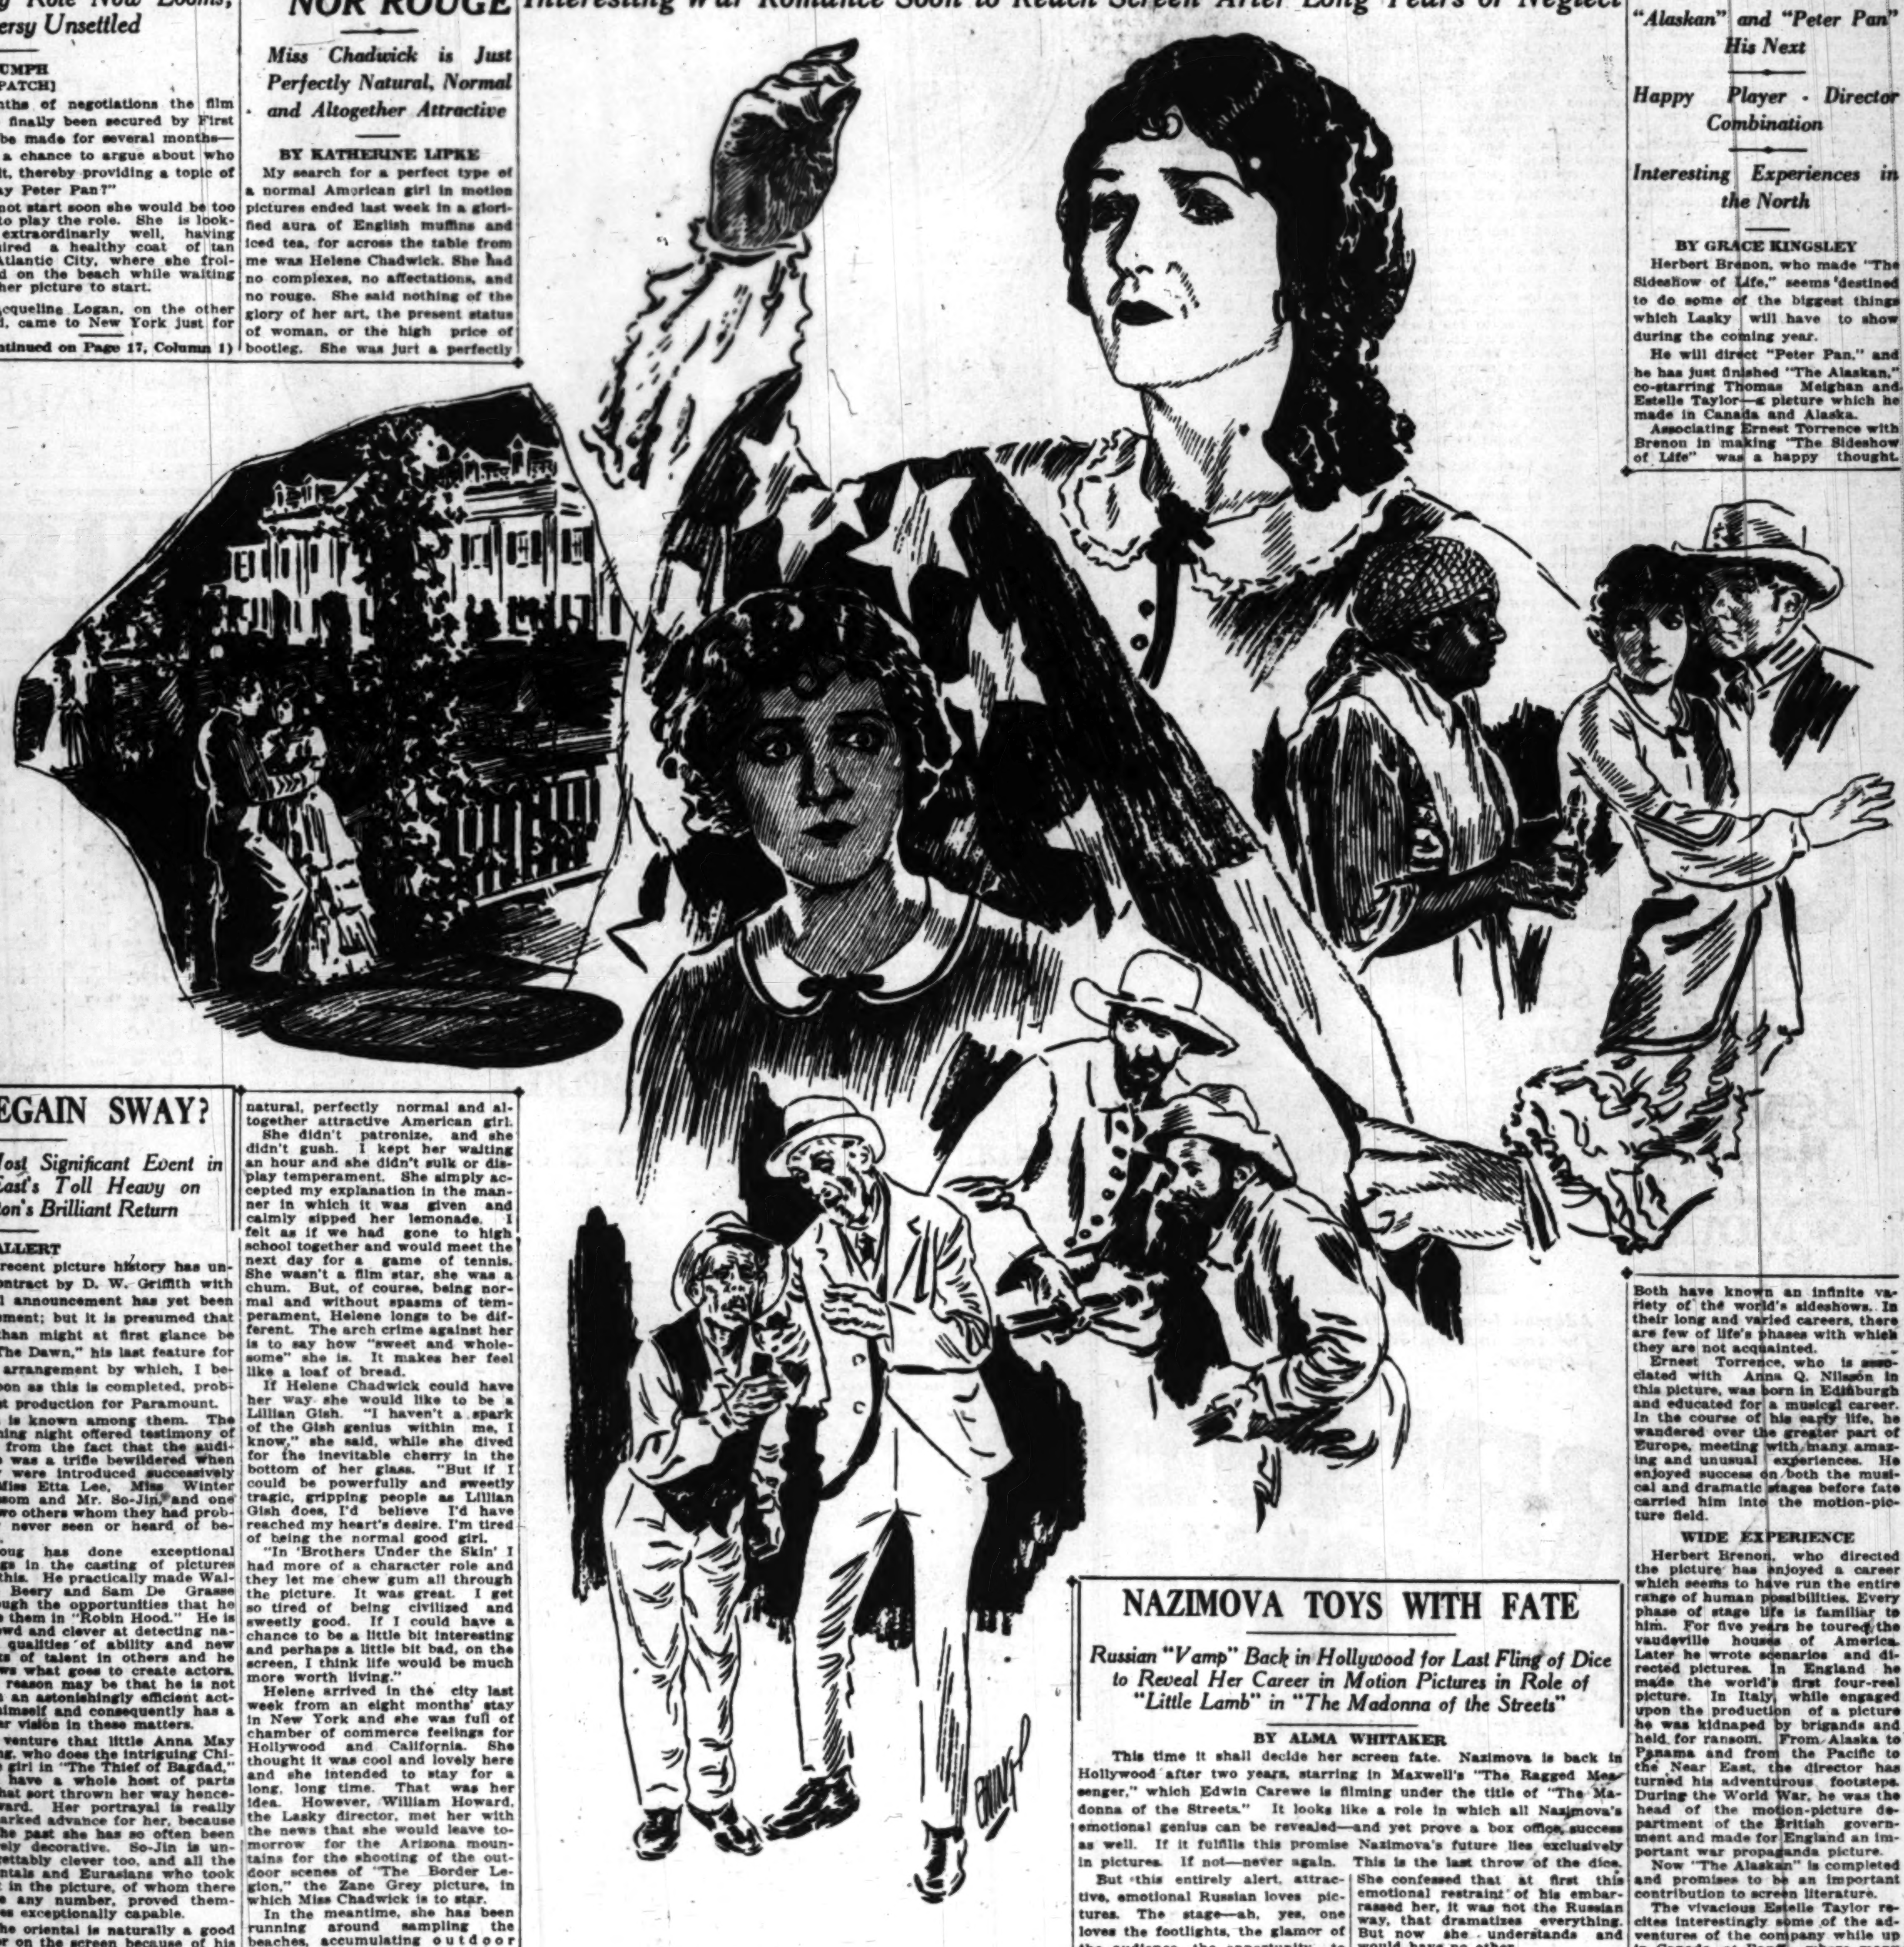
"BARBARA FRIETCHIE" IS PANORAMA OF HISTORY

Interesting War Romance Soon to Reach Screen After Long Years of Neglect



High Lights of the Picture

Players and scenes of the new Regal production as sketched by Staff Artist A. L. Ewing. Florence Vidor is seen as Barbara, while Edmund Lowe has the leading male role of Capt. Will Trumbull.

THE romance of "Barbara Frietchie" is being brought to the screen after all these years of neglect. For some inscrutable reason, she has been ignored in favor of about every other lady whose life story could be filmed or an attempt made to do so.

The Barbara you will see is not the grizzled dame of Whittier's poem you memorized in school, but a lovely lady, all tenderness and charm and patriotic fervor. Barbara on the screen is none other than Florence Vidor and it is doubtful if a more perfect embodiment of the Southern girl of 1862 could be found. She has the gracious beauty of the period and the womanly dignity of the girls of that day, who, let it be said, were not all Victorians. It may be that because Miss Vidor is herself a Southerner—she was born in Texas—she is enabled to give to the part a spiritual something not to be found in every actress.

The Barbara of romance is the creation of a playwright and not a poet. Clyde Fitch, whose "Beau Brummel" was visualized for the new generation by John Barrymore, wrote his play of "Barbara Frietchie" for Julia Marlowe in 1899, and brought upon himself the caustic comment of almost every critic at the time because he departed from tradition and gave the heroine beauty and romance.

But, inconoclast and shrewd dramatist that he was, Fitch only snapped his fingers at the reviewers, laughed and garnered huge royalties. The embodiment of his Barbara was Julia Marlowe, beloved of the public in whatever she played. At that time she had forsaken the classic drama for the play of the moment, and Clyde Fitch was distinctly the playwright of the day, varying his smart society comedies with a romantic treatment of an historical figure as, for example, his "Nathan Hale," written for Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott.

POEM ON LEGEND

Whittier based his brief poem upon the legend current in Frederick, Md., to the effect that old Barbara Frietchie, loyal to the Union, unfurled the flag she had always loved in the faces of Stonewall Jackson and his Confederate army as they marched, temporarily victorious, through the streets of the little town. And the general, touched by the harmless defiance of old Barbara, cried out, according to Whittier, "Who touches a hair of yon gray head dies like a dog;" and, for the same meter, "march on," he said. This is the incident, the climax, which excused the poem and which gave it a "moment" remembered by all.

From this the play of "Barbara Frietchie" was evolved, a story of romance and chivalry and suspense, beginning in the moonlight of antebellum days and culminating in the blaze of events which followed Lincon's proclamation of

This time it shall decide her screen fate. Nazimova is back in Hollywood after two years, starring in Maxwell's "The Ragged Messenger," which Edwin Carewe is filming under the title of "The Madonna of the Streets." It looks like a role in which all Nazimova's emotional genius can be revealed—and yet prove a box office success as well. If it fulfills this promise Nazimova's future lies exclusively in pictures. If not—never again. This is the last throw of the dice.

But this entirely alert, attractive, emotional Russian loves pictures. The stage—ah, yes, one loves the footlights, the glamor of the audience, the opportunity to improve upon the technique of today at tomorrow's performance. But, voila, if the play is a success, one must play the same role until ennui—"intellectual death." But in pictures, it is ever-changing roles, endless variety,—and the success goes on and on for each role, minus all fatigue for the actress.

"Then why did you forsake pictures for two whole years?" I wanted to know.

"They forsook me. No one wanted me," she confessed with wistful frankness. And a naughty smile. The quintessence of sangfroid and proper pride. Nazimova would scorn vain alibis.

"I think," she added, with a naughty reminiscent smile," it was that reputation for prima-donna temperament they gave me. Business people are afraid of this temperament—even if it shall make one seem interesting to the public. Pola Negri, too, has suffered from this. But ask Mr. Carewe. I am so docile he calls me a lamb."

"But there were rumors about 'Salome'" I reminded.

DIRECTOR HER HUSBAND

"But surely—the director was my husband!" explained Nazimova, serenely, wide-eyed at my naive suggestion.

And that is another very interesting thing about Nazimova. She has been married to and loved the same English husband, Charles Bryant, for lo, these many years and can still look lusciously sentimental as she tells you he is "such a dear. So quiet, so self-controlled, always the same. The fine type of Englishman who reserves his emotional enthusiasm for sports and is always the gentleman, strong poise and charm elsewhere." She confessed that at first this emotional restraint of his embarrassed her, it was not the Russian way, that dramatizes everything. But now she understands and would have no other.

Prhaps that is why it is easy for her to vamp Milton Sills so convincingly in this new role—for Milton is an English clergyman in this "Madonna of the Streets."

BRENON DOING BIG PICTURES

"Alaskan" and "Peter Pan" His Next

Happy Player - Director Combination

Interesting Experiences in the North

BY GRACE KINGSLEY

Herbert Brenon, who made "The Sideshow of Life," seems destined to do some of the biggest things which Lasky will have to show during the coming year.

He will direct "Peter Pan," and he has just finished "The Alaskan," co-starring Thomas Meighan and Estelle Taylor—a picture which he made in Canada and Alaska.

Associating Ernest Torrence with Brenon in making "The Sideshow of Life" was a happy thought. Both have known an infinite variety of the world's sideshows. In their long and varied careers, there are few of life's phases with which they are not acquainted.

Ernest Torrence, who is associated with Anna Q. Nilsson in this picture, was born in Edinburgh and educated for a musical career. In the course of his early life, he wandered over the greater part of Europe, meeting with many amazing and unusual experiences. He enjoyed success on both the musical and dramatic stages before fate carried him into the motion-picture field.

WIDE EXPERIENCE

Herbert Brenon, who directed the picture has enjoyed a career which seems to have run the entire range of human possibilities. Every phase of stage life is familiar to him. For five years he toured the vaudeville houses of America. Later he wrote scenarios and directed pictures. In England he made the world's first four-reel picture. In Italy, while engaged upon the production of a picture he was kidnaped by brigands and held for ransom. From Alaska to Panama and from the Pacific to the Near East, the director has turned his adventurous footsteps. During the World War, he was the head of the motion-picture department of the British government and made for England an important war propaganda picture.

Now "The Alaskan" is completed and promises to be an important contribution to screen literature.

The vivacious Estelle Taylor recites interestingly some of the adventures of the company while up in Canada, at Banff, where many of the scenes for the picture were made.

"We got into Vancouver in the middle of the night," she said. "There was a little difficulty over

PLAN CHILDREN'S THEATERS

New Movement Will Provide Ideal Programs for Younger Generation

Motion-picture theaters for children throughout the entire country will soon be a reality when the present plans of Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, are completed. Lesser is now negotiating with the executive committees of the federations of woman's clubs in each State in formulating committees to work with the theater owners in their respective territories for securing one or more theaters to show pictures that are produced with a direct appeal to children.

Some time ago Lesser, while in London, talked with Lloyd George regarding motion pictures for children. Lloyd George, who is a great advocate of children's welfare, is one of the greatest believers in motion pictures as an educational factor.

Lesser dispatched last week, a personal representative to visit the executive committees of each State Federation of Woman's Clubs throughout the country in an endeavor to gain their co-operation in securing or building at least ten theaters in each State, which would show pictures exclusively for children. At the recent convention of women's clubs here, Lesser conferred with delegates from the various States and all were unanimous in indorsing the project.

In the theaters planned, the seats will be fully one-third to one-half smaller than the regulation seats in order that the children may sit comfortably with their feet on the floor.

IDEAL PROGRAM

Lesser has outlined a program consisting of one high-class comedy, one geographical scenic, and one feature drama of fairy stories adapted from Grimm and Hans Anderson; all of which are to be selected and indorsed by the woman's clubs before being shown.

Lesser and his associates are planning to spend $5,000,000 during the coming year in producing pictures for children. He has arranged with other producers so that each theater showing children's pictures will have a com-

NAZIMOVA TO DECIDE FATE

I saw them making the scene in which she gazes up into his eyes, sitting at his feet before the fire in the shabby recory. Her long, white expressive hands fascinate one, and she snuggles with dangerous verity. I certainly had a feeling of vulgar intrusion as I watched them.

A little map of the poor district of London hangs upon that rectory wall. "I lived there once, in that poorest part of Whitechapel," said Nazimova. "So poor we were, we Russian players, that, while we dazzled rich sophisticated London by night, we had to live and board in the poorest London by day." And it is because Nazimova does not forget, that she fits into her lovely Hollywood home, with its retinue of servitors today, so gracefully. If she is ever temperamental with them I will wager they like it.

"I like the distinction of your name," I said, "just Nazimova. That was a superb idea."

"MY HUSBAND'S IDEA"

"My husband's," she said. "He saw the wisdom of that. I was Mme. Alla Nazimova until he pared me down."

But out at United Studios they either respectfully call her "Madame" or friskly address her as "Nazi"—according to their social authority. Those who have attained the "Nazi," however, do so with a certain awe. I observed that even Milton Sills voiced it "Mad-dam"—even while crushing her to his manly breast. One hesitates to take liberties with a Nazimova—even when she is being a lamb.

Nazimova, like most of the dashing foreign vamps, wears her hair bobbed. She was one of the very first "by whom the new was tried." But she wears a frisky red wig over her own short cropped black hair for this new role—but it is a bobbed wig, all the same. And she looks so happy and light-hearted these days—mischief bubbling very near the surface. There is one scene in which she takes a bath. They had a great time filming that." What on earth do you do in the bath?" I wanted to know. "Bathe myself," she chirped with a refined little giggle. "I don't think it is really necessary to the story and I think they all were waiting for me to get a mad-temperament that time. But I am a lamb. I just bathed." I feel sure that can have been no ordinary bath.

Nazimova is the fourth famous screen vamp I have interviewed lately, the others were Jetta Goudal, Rosemary Theby, Pola Negri. And all except Pola repudiate all private-life romantic exactions. Frightfully well-balanced, sensible, self-controlled young women. Nazimova and Rosemary with their one true staunch undying love, Jetta with her merry contempt for the whole jolly sex. Only Pola insists upon the private personal experience essential to art. And even she weathers them with eclat.

PERSONALITY BUBBLES

Nazimova just bubbles with personality—of the quiet effective kind. She is clever enough not to seem an egotist, even when she gaily tells you that she has all the films she has ever made, and a private projection room in her home and loves to see herself in them again and again. In which connection she reviewed "Revelation," saw the many possibilities for improvement and suggested that Viola Dana play the lead in a new version of it, which she did. So Nazimova, you see, is generous, too. That is going to mean a lot to Viola.

So let us hope this "Madonna of the Streets" will prove a glad success. For Nazimova is firm in her resolution never to play in pictures again if it is not. "One must be a success or retire," says Nazimova.

But there is a hopeful twinkle in her eye when she says it.

SAVES POSTAGE STAMPS

Adolphe Menjou has had a secret hobby for many years—it's collecting postage stamps. As a philatelist he is an expert, having gathered stamps that are worth several thousand dollars. His "fan mail" at the Lasky studio, which comes from all parts of the world, is a great help to him so far as the newest stamps are concerned.

formances of a light comedy vein, that Horton stays here on the stage for a long while to come.

"WHITE COLLARS" is going on endlessly apparently at the Egan Theater. It is already nearly past the six-months mile post of its run and looks as if it might be striking out for the theatrical record here.

A timely set of motifs is what helps to put a theme over nine cases out of ten. "White Collars" has these, for it takes a crack at the sort of Babbitry that flourishes in small-town minds, and the familiar theory put forward by a dissatisfied group of humanity that because all men are born free and equal, they should stay that way for the rest of their mortal lives.

Best of all, though, is the fact that it does not stress any particular purpose too much, or overburden the audience with a preachment. "White Collars" is successful because it adheres to the first rule about plays that they should be entertaining, and it is just that throughout, with its aims and objectives all quite incidental. The chief source of its charm is that it gives you a glimpse of people whom you not only believe exist, but whom you know live right next door.

START BIG SET

Ground has been broken for the biggest set at Universal City since "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." This is the reproduction of the Paris Opera, to be used in "The Phantom of the Opera," Gaston Leroux's story, to be Lon Chaney's successor to the Hugo masterpiece. Julius Bernheim, general manager at Universal City; Rupert Julian, who will direct the play; Elliott Clawson, who adapted the story, and Robert Ross, production manager for the Julian unit, conducted the ground-breaking ceremony.

BACK FROM VACATION

Vernon Keays, who has just finished directing "The End of the World" with Jack Pickford in the stellar role, has returned from a short vacation at Coronado.

Anna May Wong and Jimmie How, cameraman, because both are Chinese; but, having been born in California, somehow the matter was finally arranged. The trouble was, it had been feared that the two might not be able to get back into California again, once they had left. Poor Anna May was in a great state of mind, but of course 'kept the face' and maintained her nerve in true Chinese fashion.

"Up at Banff, the scenery was gorgeous, and the roads were wonderful. But it rained a great deal of the time. So we would have to drive three miles in the rain, wait for it to clear, perhaps work only half an hour, wait some more, work another half hour, etc. It was dampening to everybody's spirits, of course. But nevertheless, I'm sure Mr. Brenon got a very fine picture.

"Everybody up there was so very, very English that at first we felt awfully strange, but they soon proved wonderfully friendly; and we got the most cordial reception the night we went down to make personal appearances at the theater where 'Tiger Love' was showing. Mr. Brenon hadn't given me much chance to prepare for my appearance, so I wickedly told the crowd that he loved making speeches, and called him from the wings! He did make a very good talk, too; and completely won the natives.

"Anna May Wong and I went swimming every day in the warm pool at the hotel—that is, every day when we weren't working.

SHE CAN SWIM

"And I learned to swim. Yes ma'am! I made up mind not to let my fears get the best of me. I taught myself to swim, with the start I had from a swimming teacher down in Los Angeles. I couldn't learn down there. But up in Banff there was nobody to tell me, 'Count four and kick!' 'Yes,' I'd tell my swimming teacher, 'but what shall I do while I'm counting? I'll be going down; that's what I'll be doing!'

"Anna May cannot swim, but she has all the nerve in the world—would dive from a height where I wouldn't think of going.

"My colored maid was a treasure all the time. She had had a quarrel with her husband, and whenever she has had a tiff with him, she's great. When she's on good terms with him, she's too independent for words. And didn't she have a wonderful time going up on the boat? She had a stateroom to herself, and got all the service in the world. It just looked like a comedy—the procession of boys and stewardesses waiting on her. I myself had to go and pound on the stewardess's door if I wanted an extra clean towel, or anything, but not my maid;

"During the rainy days, Tommy Meighan and Mrs. Meighan played cards, but I'm not a card addict, and cannot play Mah Jongg, so I stayed in my room and embroidered lunch sets and bath towels when not working.

SUN MEANS WORK

"Ah, but when the sun came out, how we did work! We went down to Mirror Lake, one day—positively, I think it must be the most beautiful place in the world. I went out with a man in a canoe, and it overturned. We were hauled to safety, clinging to the canoe. Afterward we learned that the bottom of the lake is one quagmire of quicksand! Had we been further out, we should certainly have gone down to an awful death. Deer and other animals are frequently lost in the quicksands there.

"A number of Indians worked for us. And it is well for the public that they have merely to look at those Indians. They were a smelly lot, and in one scene we had to fairly embrace them, telling them, according to the action of the story, how glad we were to see them, while they returned the compliment."

COMEDY RELIEF

Vera Lewis has splendid opportunities for some high-class comedy relief work in her role of the ambitious mother with a marriageable daughter in M. C. Levee's production, "In Every Woman's Life," directed by Irving Cummings.

time keeping my hair in curl. Do you know of anything I could use in Arizona which doesn't need electricity?" And I found myself comparing methods and telling her what I did when away from my best friend, the electric curling iron. Could anything be more normal? I donate the remaining English muffin, which we didn't eat, to anyone who can find a more normal girl in all Hollywood.

PLAN THEATERS FOR CHILDREN

plete change of program each week. In commenting on his project Lesser said "A child is the lode star of civilization. The schools take children and teach them the rudiments of education. The motion picture is a great educational factor—perhaps the greatest of the present age. Some time ago my little girl went to see a picture where a youth was supposed to slay a giant. The scenes depicted a great amount of cruelty. My little girl could not sleep after seeing the picture, because of the cruel manner in which the slaying of the giant was shown.

CHILDREN SENSITIVE

"The little ones are many times more sensitive than adults. Therefore, the sex drama and some of the lurid love stories are not the best pictures that can be shown to children. If a child goes to a theater once every two weeks and sees a beautiful film in which love, innocence and idealism are shown it cannot help but be greatly benefited by this form of entertainment. In the past we have had 'Little Theaters' for artistic theatrical presentations; we have had theaters for grand opera; now let us have theaters for children.

"Within the next year I fully expect there will be at least 400 theaters in America, with more than 150 scattered throughout England, Scotland, Ireland, Canada and New Zealand, which will show pictures for children. Only matinee performances will be given.

"Along with the children's pictures a special musical program will be given, embracing childhood melodies."

COMMUNITY SING FOR REDLANDS

That the community music spirit is spreading throughout all Southern California is evidenced by the fact that Mrs. G. E. Mullen, recently of Hollywood and now of Redlands, has recently organized in the valley city a community sing. The club held its first sing July 2, and with the desire of giving credit where credit is deserved, it was "Hollywood Night."

The "sings" are held each Wednesday in the amphitheater at Smiley Park. About three thousand people can be accomodated in the amphitheater, and there are seats for an additional 2000 on the lawn. The second concert was "San Bernardino night," and hundreds of people from that city attended the sing that evening.

June 23 will be "Los Angeles Night," and a number of persons interested in community development along cultural lines will attend. Mrs. J. J. Carter, who is making national music history, will speak on that evening. W. R. Gulberson, Los Angeles baritone, rotarian, and member of the Ellis Club and of the Civic Music and Art Association, will be soloist.

Gage Christopher of Los Angeles is the director of the new organization. Mrs. G. E. Mullen, president, said that the sings are drawing people from the surrounding towns of Beaumont, Colton, San Bernardino, Yucaipa, Riverside and Mentone.

PANORAMA OF HISTORY SOON

emancipation and the secession of the Southern States.

This, too, is the picture, with, of course a much more spacious sweep in visualizing events, due to the larger scope of the screen than the stage. As brought to the silversheet, the play will comprise more than the Southern girl's renunciation of the Confederate flag in favor of the banner of the man she loves. It is planned to make the film inclusive of more than the climacteric moments of the play. It will, in fact, show various crucial moments in American history, beginning with the landing of the Pilgrims to the period of the Civil War, with the battle of the Monitor and the Merrimac. Primarily, however, "Barbara Frietchie" is a love story, one of the most appealing as related to the history of this country, and as such it is being filmed. The spectacle of war is incidental to it and will be stressed no more than is consistent with serving as a background for the romance which brings Barbara and Capt. Will Trumbull together.

BEAUTIFUL SPECTACLE

Besides numerous interior sets rich in the atmosphere and detail of the period, there has been erected at the studio a residential street in Frederick, Md., the locale of the romance, as it existed in pre-Civil War days.

Recently, hundreds of Confederate soldiers, recruited by Director Lambert Hillyer, dashed through the streets of this reproduction of Frederick. In planning these scenes, the director, himself an expert rider, chose in each instance a veteran of the World War, in most cases a former cavalryman. Then it was necessary, of course, to instruct the men in the handling of firearms such as were used in the Civil War and to explain the difference in military tactics generally. Days were consumed in rehearsing the furious charge which finally sent the soldiers through the town. Yet on the screen this will be but an incident in the story.

Opposite Miss Vidor, playing the role of Capt. Will Trumbull, is Edmund Lowe. Emmett King is Barbara's father, Col. Frietchie, and her brother Arthur is cast in the person of Charles Delaney. Others in the supporting cast include Louis Fitzroy, Joe Bennett, Gertrude Short, James Cole, Mattie Peters, Jim Blackwell and George Billings. Billings plays the role of Abraham Lincoln, and his ability to resemble the martyred President is little short of marvelous.

CAST PROMINENT

Among the cast of the original production in 1899 are certain names of interest today. Arnold Daly created the role of Jack Negley, the half-crazed youth played in the picture by Joe Bennett, while in the small part of Corp. Perkins was seen Ralph Lewis, who is now a prominent actor on the screen. Lional Adams was Arthur Frietchie on the stage.

Those who recall Julia Marlowe as Barbara will of course focus their attention upon Florence Vidor. She has all the womanliness and charm required for the part, as has already been stated, as well as sensitive beauty of expression and gesture, and it is predicted by those concerned in producing "Barbara Frietchie" that she will achieve her greatest success in it.

When Clyde Fitch was writing his play, he sought a motive for Barbara's act of defiance and his imagination led him to create the love story. Not as a mere bit of stage craftsmanship, however, did he write his play, but as a loving tribute to his father and mother. It was their romantic love story that he told through the lips of Barbara Frietchie and Capt. Trumbull.

Even though the production is primarily a romance it is more than that, too. It might be called a panorama of American history, centering, of course, upon the period following the secession of the Southern States, and ending in an epilogue which shows Barbara, a grandmother, sending the son of her son off to the World War.

RUSSIAN AROUND

John Gilbert keeps the same nationality in his last two pictures, but suffers a radical change in his cinematic fortunes. In Elinor Glyn's production, "His Hour," Gilbert was a wealthy Russian prince. In Victor Seastrom's "He Who Gets Slapped" he is an obscure Russian circus rider.

A delightful headliner is offered by the Orpheum this week, in the person of Adele Rowland (Mrs. Conway Tearle,) of musical comedy fame. Miss Rowland will be heard in a group of specially selected songs, which she will render in the same fashion that led to her becoming New York's most popular musical comedy star. Another feature on the new bill is the recall of the Harry Carroll revue—all changed but the personnel and the title. Into it he has fitted Joe Donahue, Linda and Zelma O'Neil and his corps of pretty misses. The master juggler of the world, Enrico Rastelli of Italy, will make his first appearance here. Richard Kean, will return with his delineations of characters from Shakespeare and other dramatists, and Phill Baker, "the boy boy from a good family," will remain another week. In the list also are included Jean Granese, an unusual songstress, and her company, Lumis Lauri and Vera Rayne, in steps and styles from Australia, direct, and Bernt and partner, the latter an unusually pretty miss, in extraordinary athletic work and posings.

Completes Half Year

Tomorrow evening "White Collars" will have completed its first half-year at the Egan Theater, where every record since the theater was built has been shattered.

Edith Ellis, the author, who has been here making many changes in cast and production, has attended to her task well, adding many new flashes of brightness. The entire cast is clean-cut, capable and pleasing, including, as it does, Craig Ward, Dian Esmonde, Marvel Quivey, Ross Forrester, Blanche Douglas, Zellah Covington, Betty Sinclair, Alfred Arnold and Stuart Erwin.

Another Mystifying Week

Five weeks of packed houses have not been sufficient to satisfy the Los Angeles appetite for mystery, thrills and comedy combined, which is the fare offered by "The Cat and the Canary," so a sixth week will be started at the Morosco with today's matinee.

The John Willard opus, which has every element going into the pot for a sound mystery play—thrills, keen suspense, excitement, fear and good comedy—ran for a year in New York, so it is not surprising that five weeks should not be enough for Los Angeles.

Charlotte Treadway, Harland Tucker, Gayne Whitman, Grace Travers, James Donlan, Albert Van Antwerp, Mary Fisher and J. Morris Foster have the principal roles.

"Caliph" Tomorrow

Theatrical circles are all set for the reopening at the Biltmore Theater tomorrow night, when the musical comedy star, Raymond Hitchcock, will begin a limited engagement in "The Caliph." The play was written by Maurine Montague specially for Hitchcock.

Producer Thomas Wilkes, under whose direction the show is being produced, has spared no expense in making the settings and costumes wonderfully unique and colorful, and has provided the star with a cast of exceptional brilliance. In Hitchy's support will be seen Theodora Warfield, prima donna, Cooper Lawley, lyric tenor; Marie Horgan, comedienne; Ethel Cattus, Roland Bottomley, Henry T. Hanlin, Carl Krenke, Henry Caubison, Lew Lubin, Dorothy Clare and Marie Dorall, principals in a company of fifty. Two dozen of California's most beautiful girls comprise the chorus.

FOUR NEW CINEMA ATTRACTIONS OPEN

With four pictures of interest opening during the week screen fans are offered a varied list of attractions to select their entertainment from.

On view today are "The Side Show of Life" at the Metropolitan, featuring Ernest Torrence and Anna Q. Nilsson; "Her Marriage Vow," at the California, with Beverly Bayne, and "For Sale," starring Claire Windsor at Loew's. The premiere showing of "Butterfly," featuring Laura LaPlante, will take place at the new Forum Theater Thursday evening.

Other pictures now showing are "The Perfect Flapper" at the Alhambra, "The Sea Hawk" at the Criterion, "The Thief of Bagdad" at the Egyptian, "Manhandled" at Miller's, "The Covered Wagon" at the Million Dollar, a list of revivals at the Mission, and "Girl Shy" at Tally's.

Hold "Manhandled"

The management of the Miller Theater has decided to hold "Manhandled," Gloria Swanson's latest production, over for another week.

"Manhandled" is notable for several reasons. First, the fact that it brings a new Gloria to the screen. New because she not only wears beautiful gowns, but is also seen as a poor East Side shopgirl who has a hard time deciding between her sweetheart, a mechanic, and the lounge lizards whose wealth brings women to their feet. Secondly, the cast which supports is made up of such players as Tom Moore, Ian Keith, Lilyan Tashman, Brooks John and Ann Pennington. A news reel and a comedy cartoon complete the bill.

Torrence at His Best

Those who have read William J. Locke's "The Mountebank" will want to see Ernest Torrence's depiction of the circus clown—those who haven't read the book will want to see Torrence in what is said to be his greatest role since "The Covered Wagon." The picture is entitled "The Side Show of Life," and is on the screen at the Metropolitan.

Anna Q. Nilsson is featured with Torrence in this Herbert Brenon production, which tells a dramatic story of love and emotion against a background of the sawdust ring. The cast includes Louise Lagrange, Neil Hamilton, Maurice Cannon, William Ricciardi, Katherine Lee, Lawrence D'Orsay, Effie Shannon and other players.

Vincent Lopez Junior Orchestra, with two weeks of unparalleled popularity to their credit, hold over for a third week at the Metropolitan, with an entirely new program.

Program Remains Intact

The atmospheric prologue and special music program, used in the presentation of "The Covered Wagon" at the Million Dollar, and which received so much praise when the Cruze picture opened some weeks ago, will be retained intact during the run of the picture, which starts its fifth week today.

It has not been uncommon, during the run of a big picture, to gradually eliminate some of the features, but not so with "The Covered Wagon."

Week of Revivals

A bright array of motion picture talent that includes such names as D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Louise Fazenda, Marie Prevost, Mabel Normand, Ben Turpin, Max Linder, Richard Barthelmess, Carol Dempster, Barbara La Marr, Adolphe Menjou, Lloyd Hughes, David Torrence, Creighton Hale, Bull Montana and Jobyna Ralston will feature the revival week opening at the Mission Theater tomorrow.

Eight feature attractions that have stood the test of public approval through long runs have been selected because of a demand for a reshowing.

Monday, "Dream Street" will be the offering; Tuesday, Douglas Fairbanks will be seen in "The Three Musketeers; Wednesday, Mary Pickford will feature the presentation of "Tess of the Storm Country;" Thursday D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" will be the attraction; Friday the California of bygone days will be peopled by characters in "Suzanna," in which Mabel Normand has the stellar role; Saturday will feature a day of laughter with Mack Sennett's "Down on the Farm" and Max Linder in "The Three Must Get Theres;" Sunday will close the week with a presentation of D. W. Griffith's "The Love Flower."

"Butterfly" Premiere

Clarence Brown's production of Kathleen Norris's novel, "Butterfly," will have its world premiere showing Thursday evening at the Forum Theater. The members of the cast, who include such favorites as Laura La Plante, Ruth Clifford, Norman Kerry, Kenneth Harlan, T. Roy Barnes, Margaret Livingston and Freeman Wood will appear in person in connection with the opening. An elaborate prologue is being arranged for the production, the playhouse being closed for four days while the presentation is rehearsed. A special musical program is being laid out by Harry H. Silverman, musical director, and Julius K. Johnson, organist.

"Perfect Flapper" Back

Colleen Moore, the tomboy flapper of the screen, graces the Alhambra screen this week in her latest vehicle, "The Perfect Flapper." She is supported by an exceptional cast headed by Sydney Chaplin, Frank Mayo and Phyllis Haver.

Colleen is seen as Tommy Lou Pember, a quiet, reserved little girl who set out to discover just what kind of a girl a girl must be to be the kind of a girl the boys want.

Pretentious Prologue

Preceded by one of the biggest stage acts in the history of the theater entitled "A Night in The Parisian Underworld," "For Sale," at Loew's State Theater this week heads a diversified bill. The cast includes Claire Windsor, Adolphe Menjou, Robert Ellis, Mary Carr, Tully Marshall, John Patrick, Christine Mayo, Phillips Smalley and others of note.

The stage act will hold a large company of performers headed by Clayton Kirby and Evelyn De Gage, noted dance team who will do their Apache number. Robert Heen, Hawaiian baritone and the Radio Trio will also give special numbers. The Knickerbocker Syncopators will furnish the jazz music.

Another feature on the bill will be Lloyd Hamilton's latest comedy, "Good Morning." This is said to be one of the best in which Hamilton has ever appeared.

The concert orchestra with Arthur Kay conducting, will play "Tannhauser," March by Wagner, and the usual weekly and Local Laugh reels round out the program.

"Girl Shy" Lloyd's Best

There is probably not a man, woman or child in Los Angeles who has not seen Harold Lloyd in one of his comedies, but if they have missed "Girl Shy," the spice of life is yet to come into their existence. Lloyd has made one of the cleanest and fastest comedy romances which has ever been filmed. An entirely new characterization, that of a bashful youth apprenticed to a small-town tailor, is Lloyd's role. Secretly this youth studies girls and the more he studies them the more he fears them.

"Sea Hawk" Continues

Frank Lloyd's production of Rafael Sabatini's book, "The Sea Hawk," with Milton Sills, Wallace Beery, Lloyd Hughes, Enid Bennett and Kathlen Key, continues at the Criterion. "In An Ale House," a picturesque prologue with the "Singing Pirates" and special musical settings by Tandler and his symphony artists and the supporting bill.

GIRLS HERE IDEAL, SAYS HITCHCOCK

Southland Beauties Like Climate, Always Perfect, Avers Star of 'The Caliph'

"Anything with Southern California girls in it has to be a success. It simply has to be, irrespective of the stars."

Such is the pronouncement made by Raymond Hitchcock, who begins a limited engagement at the Biltmore Theater tomorrow night in his latest musical comedy success, "The Caliph."

The occasion of the remark was when he first glimpsed the ravishing California chorus of beauties that Producer Thomas Wilkes had provided for him in this new musical comedy.

"The Southern California girl is like the Southland climate—always perfect," went on Hitchcock. "She possesses the color of the poppy, the perfume of the orange blossoms, the fame of the State itself. Any theatrical man will tell you that the girl of the West, if she possesses a modicum of talent, makes an ideal show girl, for she has spontaneity and freshness as eternal as is the sunshine out here.

"I remember six years ago—it was many more than six, but I never acknowledged to a longer period—a little red-haired girl came to me when I was playing in 'The Red Widow' at the Columbia Theater in San Francisco. She wanted a role, a prominent one, to be sure, in my show. I remember she was very pretty and had gorgeous, flaming red hair. I was much impressed by her determination and ambition. But just as I had chosen a nice, fat, juicy role for her initiation into the realm of the theater she decided she'd rather pose for Harrison Fisher, the noted artist, instead.

"She was a Southern California girl and had that same eternal sunshine in her Golden State-bred nature.

"The next time I met her was many years later—six, to be inexact!—and I received the shock of my life.

"Her hair was black.

"She must have had a terrible illness. But her Southern California self hadn't changed a particle. Her name was now Maurine Montague—and she wrote the book and music for 'The Caliph.'

"Naturally, only an all-Southern California chorus would be consistent. And to be still more consistent, I intend to remain here, going on the road for about a forty-week season each year. I'm tired of eastern winters—and eastern reform measures."

Hitchcock smiled and hummed under his breath, "California, Here I Come."

WISH FULFILLED

Long before Mae Busch came into pictures Pauline Frederick was her favorite motion-picture actress. When Miss Busch did begin work on the screen it was the height of her ambition to do the type of work Miss Frederick had always done. Now the two players are working together in the all-star Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production "Mrs. Paramor," which Robert Vignola is directing.

VAMPIRE TURNS TO COMEDIENNE

Edna Mae Cooper

Far different from her usual vampire roles, Edna Mae Cooper is playing an important comedy part in the Lasky production, "A Drama of the Night" directed by James Cruze.

Miss Cooper says she finds it a relief to play a comedy role for a change as a vampire, no matter how great an actress—like the time-honored villain of the stage—never gains the sympathy of the audience.

James Cruze is one of the progressive directors, who believes that great players should be given an opportunity to display their versatility and not always be cast in the same kind of part. According to him, Miss Cooper has just as great ability for enacting light-comedy roles as for playing the "vamp."

LATEST STYLE IN FILMAND "EVES"

Eve Southern

Much has been broadcast about the irrepressible screenland vampires, but, according to picture executives, the reigning sirens of today must look to their laurels as the advent of beautiful Eve Southern into the films is said to have caused a veritable furore in screen circles. According to many in the film colony this scintillating personage is one of the most distinctive types to enter upon a screenland career in years.

While portraying a small role recently, Elinor Glyn espied her and immediately cast her for an important role in "His Hour," her forthcoming picture masterpiece.

In addition to her startling beauty, Miss Southern is credited with the longest eyelashes in captivity. So, vampires, look out for the 1925 model "vamp"! She's an inspiration.

Girls All Alike Always, Says Betty Compson

"Girls! What an infinite variety there are," said Betty Compson, who is appearing in her latest Graham Cutts production, "White Shadows," at the Mission Theater. "But reading backward, I cannot see that girls of today are any different from those of the eighteenth century, or the thirteenth, or even ages before that. History and biographies tell of girls who lived the lives being lived by girls of today. I never bothered to formulate any definite opinion about the so-called modern girl, however, until I was called upon to portray Nancy and Georgina Brent in Michael Morton's story; Nancy, willful, impish, fond of wild parties; Georgina, gentle, wistful, enjoying home life and home ties.

"One of the first things I realized was that there are different kinds of girls—many, many different kinds, but that they could be divided into two major classes—Girls with wealth at their command and those who are, shall I say, not so fortunate? But their inclinations are the same. To some of the wealthy girls revelry is an end to itself. Having nothing to worry about, she uses her brains to think of unique entertainments and novel methods of amusement. She is born to a world of luxury, cocktails and jazz. While the less fortunate girls cannot indulge, they nevertheless would if conditions were such as to allow them. I do not mean to say that all girls have a desire to step out, for there are the gentle, home-loving kind in both classes, and it is a composite of the rich and poor, the sporty and domestic girls of both classes I have tried to portray in 'White Shadows.'"

Miss Treadway Admires Bobbed Hair on Others!

Charlotte Treadway, charming leading lady at the Morosco, whose performance of Annabelle West in "The Cat and the Canary" has aroused much favorable comment, takes a hand in the bobbed-hair discussion now raging.

"I confess I like bobbed hair—on others," says Miss Treadway. "Let's start with that. But let's remember that is only a start.

"There are lots of difficulties to beset an actress who must be ready for all sorts of parts, and who cannot use wigs easily—and a stage actress has a harder time doing that than a film actress—so she must hold on fast to her own honest hair, and that must not be bobbed.

"I rather envy—I really do—some of these women who have just naturally taken the jump, so to speak, and cut off their hair. Shingled locks must be terribly easy to handle.

"I've wanted very much to bob mine, but I know I shall not do it.

"But all this talk of bobbed hair being unwomanly and all that sort of stuff is simply rot."

ROBERT FRAZER LETS SUN SUPPLY MAKE-UP

Robert Frazer is depending upon the sun to provide his make-up for the part he is playing with the Sol Lesser company, now on location in Arizona making "The Mine With the Iron Door." Frazer has the role of an Indian and must acquire a coat of rich tan. He must not only apply the sun liberally to his face, but he must expose the upper portion of his body to its scorching rays, and he must have the same color as an Apache. However, Frazer is the Latin type, naturally dark and not susceptible to severe sunburn. He has let his hair grow until it is about bobbed length, which is the correct tonsorial dress of the native Indians.

GIRL SKIDS INTO FILMS ALONG ICE

Claire Windsor Falls on Pond, Loses Voice and So Arrives in Hollywood

Claire Windsor, who plays the leading role in "For Sale," which now is showing at Loew's State Theater, was born at Cawker City, Kan. At seven she was placed in in Girls' school. When she had finished her academic training, she told her mother she could not stay at home and decided on New York.

Her mother frustrated this ambitious plan and put her in a school where she took up voice culture. When in high school she had a very beautiful soprano voice. Her appearance at concerts attracted considerable attention.

One winter afternoon she was invited to a skating party. While cutting fancy capers she fell, striking a huge log in such a manner that it strained her vocal cords. She was unable to speak for several weeks. Gradually her voice came back, but it did not posses the range it had before.

She then became engrossed in the study of dancing. At a civic pageant she was elected the most beautiful girl in Seattle, Wash.

She visited Los Angeles and later moved to the city. A girl in an adjoining apartment was doing extra work at one of the motion-picture studios. One day she asked Claire to go to the studio with her. The next week Claire applied for work at the Lois Weber studios and was engaged and Lois Weber asked if she would sign a contract to appear in pictures.

Producers soon bid for her services. She appeared with signal success in "Brothers Under the Skin," "Rich Men's Wives," "Fools First" and "The Eternal Three."

Her beauty attracted considerable attention, not only in her chosen profession but also among the millions of theatergoers.

BUSINESS AND PLEASURE

Renaud Hoffman combined his first vacation since he started directing pictures with a search for locations in Northern California to be used in his next production.

NEW LEADING LADY FOR LARRY SEMON

Dorothy Dwan

The first thing Larry Semon set about on his return from New York, to produce four featurettes for Educational was the discovery of a suitable leading lady.

The famous screen funny man, who has deserted his clown clothes for more conventional garb in his latest feature-length comedy, "The Girl in the Limousine," which First National took on a single preview in New York, will be in general charge of production for the "featurettes" and is planning to start shooting on the first of them within a few days at the F.B.O. studios.

After seeing a dozen or more candidates for the leading feminine roles Semon finally selected Dorothy Dwan.

Miss Dawn, who gave up a concert career as pianiste to enter the film world here last September, already has done some notable work in "Shadows of Paris" with Pola Negri, in C. B. De Mille's "Triumph" and "Men," in "Those Who Dance" and, finally, with the Cruze picture now in production at Lasky's.

Dorothy Dwan is a Philadelphia girl. She is the product of a fashionable girls' school there and a musician of great merit. She is less than 20 years of age and motion-picture critics who have watched her work in the various pictures that already have shown evidences of her capacity, predict a future for her.

Semon says he stands ready to give her every opportunity in the world to develop her talent in comedy leads.

Meet Tellegen—Director! Actor in Old Success

Meet Lou Tellegen—the director. This is not a new role for the world's leading actor.

That Tellegen's direction of others in the fine art of acting was appreciably more enjoyable work for those financially interested in the success of the pictures allotted to him goes without saying. The star himself, however, had other ideas on the subject.

After a time the then unbelievable salary paid to Tellegen for directing special productions somehow lost its allure. More money or no, he wanted the thrill that comes only to a creative actor, and so Tellegen left directing to the genius of others and donned the thespian's cloak he had temporarily shed.

That was years ago, and the names of the photoplays for which he was directorially responsible are too numerous to recall. But the stars who came under his guidance at one time or another during his career as a director he will remember always.

Most easily brought to mind because of their responsiveness to his suggestions are Hobart Bosworth, Jack Pickford, Louise Huff, Kathlyn Williams and the lamented Wallace Reid.

And Lou Tellegen is especially proud of his faith in James Cruze. Cruze was still a youngster and Tellegen not much older when they met. The now famous director played one of his first small parts under Tellegen.

FINISHES BEST ROLE

Frank Lackteen, who played the heavy role in "The Fortieth Door" with Allene Ray, has returned to Hollywood after completing his greatest role in "Into the Net," which was produced in New York.

DIRECTOR SERVES FOUR O'CLOCK TEA

Maurice Elvey

American directors on the Fox lot are standing in awe of one Maurice Elvey, recently imported British megaphone-wielder. For in this new personality they see a man unhurried, quiet and sans the regular ticks and idiosyncrasies accredited to the average motion-picture director.

Elvey never raises his voice in giving orders on the set. Nor does he rush a player in his work. He believes that if a picture is worth filming it is also worth producing right and he contends that the best efforts of an artist cannot be brought forth by haranguing and shouting at him.

The Britisher, who now is filming "Her Husband's Wives," with an all-star cast, has introduced the 4 o'clock tea custom on his set and he finds that this brief respite from work means added efficiency and better photographic results.

BACK WITH FOX

Upon completion of her present role opposite Hoot Gibson in "The Cactus Kid," for which she was loaned to Universal by Fox studios, Marian Nixon will return to the latter company for a new picture, announcements of which will be forthcoming soon.

A Department of Information Regarding Their Players

BY MARJORIE PERRY LA

Mrs. C. M. S., Glendale: Viola Dana is leading lady opposite Glenn Hunter in "Merton of the Movies." Glenn's next picture will be "The Altar on the Hill." Bessie Love will be costarred with him in this production.

Zena L., Artesia, Cal.: You may write to Rod La Rocque in care of Famous Players-Lasky. He is vacationing at Del Monte at present, but his mail will be forwarded. Elaine Hammerstein is under contract to Truart Productions. They have stage space at the Metro-Goldwyn studio. "The Foolish Virgin" is the title of the next picture in which Miss Hammerstein will be featured.

Mary Jane, Los Angeles: Yes, Elizabeth Alexander's novel, "Roles" has been filmed. The title of the screen version was changed to "Changing Husbands." That's probably how you happened to miss it. It was shown at Grauman's Metropolitan Theater several weeks ago. Leatrice Joy, Victor Varconi, Raymond Griffith, ZaSu Pitts and Julia Faye were the principals in the cast. It will undoubtedly be at one of the neighborhood theaters soon, so you will still have the opportunity of seeing it.

Miss Donnie H., Los Angeles: May MacAvoy is probably on her way to Europe by now. She is to play the role of Esther in "Ben Hur." The picturization of this novel was started many months ago under the direction of Charles Brabin, but a change was made in the plans and an entirely new cast was substituted, as well as the director. Miss MacAvoy's mail should be sent in care of Metro-Goldwyn, Culver City.

Ray F., Pasadena: Anne Luther has not appeared in many pictures lately. Two of her most important were "Soul and Body" and "Truth About Wives." She is about 30 years of age and has Titian hair and blue eyes.

Mrs. Dana W., Los Angeles: I do not know of a Louise Horton in motion pictures. There is a Clara Horton. Clara was born in Brooklyn in 1904 and she has golden hair and blue eyes. The Miss Horton to whom you refer may be

[illegible] DULL

[illegible] theaters are full [illegible] this week. It [illegible] hurt to say that any [illegible] by Rex Ingram is [illegible] good but "The Arab" is [illegible]. There are many [illegible] beautiful things in it [illegible] slow moving that one [illegible] trade eight or ten [illegible] for a little, old [illegible]. Alice Terry hav[illegible] in this picture how she [illegible] her hair so natural will [illegible] deluged with requests [illegible] the old blonde wig. The trials and tribulations of the beautiful Christian missionary misled by a lying Arab adventurer—capitally played, incidentally, by Ramon Novarro—seem of litle or no importance to the audiences.

Perhaps we expect too much of Rex Ingram because he has given us such splendid pictures in the past. "The Arab" might be looked upon as our great director's holiday.

ALPS TO RESCUE

"Babbitt" is faring a little better at the Rivoli, but there a shrewd program maker has put on an Alpine skiing picture that is so beautiful and so thrilling that it alone draws heavy patronage. The picture is called "Fighting the Mountains" and is put out in this country by the Hamilton theatrical corporation. But as for "Babbitt," it is done in a conventional, low comedy way thus losing all the flavor of the book. The picture is shrewd caricature rather than realism.

Seeing this picture recalled to my mind an oft-quoted remark made by a prominent patron of the arts. Several of the young men whose work she fostered turned out paintings—novels—or plays—dealing with sordid or just ordinary people. Whereupon she remarked, "I don't see why you are all working to express people whom I would not meet socially." Surely no one would care to know the Babbitts, so why I kept wondering as I watched the picture did anyone find them interesting on the screen.

I don't want anyone to assume from that, though, that the swell society goings-on of "For Sale" are what I hanker for. The manners of the people in that picture—and their houses—were quite unlike anything I ever saw or wanted to see. The one redeeming feature of the whole picture to me was the performance of Adolph Menjou. He acted with such ill-concealed scorn of the whole proceedings.

The critics fairly outdid themselves in kidding this picture, but it is playing to average hot-weather business nevertheless. If the New York critics pan a picture hard enough it is likely to do great business, because there is a large group of film fans here who insist that nothing amuses them so much as a thoroughly bad society movie.

Now that D. W. Griffith has decided to cast his lot with Famous Players as soon as he finishes his present—and last—production for United Artists, the Griffith studio is to be put up for sale. The property is valued at more than $1,000,000.

REAL SELLING TALK

"This car isn't much for looks, but for a 100 per cent American who loves to spend a pretty Sunday with his family among the grade crossings ours is the only one. Our dealers report that in owner tests with the Twentieth Century and Broadway limiteds after the gates were down, our car lost only once, and that time the driver misjudged the distance by ten and one-half feet. At least, the doctor who attended him thought he said ten and a half.

"Other machines may last longer and offer a better price, but if you are looking for the best car for Sunday motoring, the one that will give your family and friends the most thrills, especially at hidden crossings where the sport is keenest, you will take ours. You may use my fountain pen."—[McCready Huston in Life.

W. SILER TELLS ALL

Born on an island off the coast of Africa, though of American and English parentage. Color, white. Gave great promise as a child, being exceptionally stupid. Father's interests took me while young to Africa, South America, West Indies, Europe, though, being unimpressionable, few memories remain to me of any possible value to a possible fictionist. Graduated in this country in civil engineering, a noble and manly profession, no less notable because of the opportunities it offers for hard work and small pay.

I wandered from east coast to west coast of the United States, to Canada, to Central America, West Indies and Europe, seeking work to escape it, and vainly trying to find an heiress who wanted to marry an engineer, according to a tale frequently published in the magazines. In 1916 I tackled a real job, in the hope of escaping the twin evils, overwork and underpay. Escaped the latter and got no pay at all. I attempted to edit and produce a small magazine, with the thought of removing the literary center from New York to the Middle West. I found it required more than the production of literature to do this. Came to the Twin Cities (St. Paul, Minneapolis) in 1918 on government work and have remained here.

MUSICAL

MAY MacDONALD HOPE HEAD PERSONNEL THIS YEAR

Music-lovers will be interested in the announcement made this week by May MacDonald Hope, pianist and founder of the Los Angeles Trio, that Sylvain Noack, violinist, is a recent acquisition to the trio. Mr. Noack is concertmaster and solo violinist of the Philharmonic Orchestra, and his addition to the Los Angeles Trio, the oldest chamber music organization in the city, rounds out a group of musicians of unusual talent.

May MacDonald Hope, who organized the trio nine years ago and who has given to the city a number of its finest programs, both in individual concert and in chamber music organization, is one of the most distinguished pianists of the West.

Ilya Bronson, 'cellist of the Los Angeles Trio, is solo 'cellist with the Philharmonic, and his scholarly attainments have also given him the place of conductor at several performances at the Hollywood Bowl. All three members of the trio are known for their individual concert work, both here and abroad.

With the winter season Mrs. Hope is planning to put on a series of unusually ambitious programs, introducing a number of new compositions to local music-lovers and also planning to augment the trio on several occasions by appearances of guest artists.

Boys' Chorus at Bowl

The Whitney Boys' Chorus will sing at the Hollywood Bowl Monday evening, July 21. The choir is the largest of its kind in the world, having more than 3000 members. The Southern California branch of the chorus was organized early this year by Rev. H. E. Whitney.

Four-part music is sung by the chorus, consisting of boys between the ages of 10 and 15 years, and in one selection seven distinctly different parts are taken. The soprano voices are rare in their clearness and range, reaching as a unit high "C" above the staff. The power of the alto section is remarkable.

One of the features of the chorus is the whistling of Clair Mennefeel, a boy of unusual talent. Also of interest is the small boy quartet.

Bowl Programs

The Bowl program for the present week is replete with interest, including as it does Sylvain Noack, violinist; Adelaide Gosnell-Lee, pianist, and Margaret Messer Morris, soprano, as soloists. Friday night has been set aside to honor the presence of 3000 members of the National Association of Life Underwriters, many of whom will come from the eastern coast, and others from Honolulu. On this evening, by popular request, Adelaide Gosnell-Lee will repeat the Hungarian Fantasie by Liszt, which was one of the outstanding renditions of last season.

Saturday night is Cadman night, with Arthur Alexander as guest conductor. In several of his own compositions to be heard that evening Mr. Cadman will preside at the piano.

Besides the galaxy of soloists, Conductor Alfred Hertz has selected brilliant orchestral numbers. Suites by Bach-Mahler, Dohnanyi, the Tschaikowsky Fifth Symphony and Cadman numbers will be performed.

The week's program follows:

Pupils sing and coach before the entire class, giving them that confidence which comes only from appearance before audiences. Auditor pupils listen to all sessions.

Hertz Lectures at University

Alfred Hertz, conductor of the summer season of concerts in the Hollywood Bowl, lectures at the State University each Monday at 12 o'clock, in the lecture room of the Fine Arts Building. His talks are on the symphony as the highest form of musical expression, and each week he refers to the program to be given at the Bowl the ensuing week. These lectures come as an integral part of the course in Appreciation of Music. Many persons not registered as students have taken advantage of the opportunity to spend an hour or so listening to visiting lecturers or those regularly on the staff of the university.

Egan Musicale

Thomas Egan, internationally famous tenor and teacher, will give an informal recital, assisted by pupils and fellow artists, at the Hollywood Conservatory of Music and Arts on Saturday evening, July 26. Lilian Breton, grand opera soprano who assisted the tenor at his recent concert at Trinity Auditorium, will sing a group of Art songs. Mr. Egan, who will make Los Angeles his permanent home, has many friends in the motion-picture colony at Hollywood, a number of whom are studying with him to develop their voices for the spoken drama.

Monteith at Gamut Club

John Claire Monteith, concert singer and baritone, recently arrived from New York City, has his studio headquarters for the summer at the Gamut Club, where the Yeatman Griffith classes are also held. In addition to being a specialist in voice production and song interpretation, Mr. Monteith is a concert and oratorio singer of distinction. He will be featured by several Southern California clubs on their next season's programs.

Pilgrimage Play Music

Julius Bierlich, a member of the first violin section of the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, is in charge of the music for the Pilgrimage Play. He has assembled a quartet of talented singers, which includes Jessie MacDonald Patterson, soprano; Margaret Fisher Monson, contralto; Max Alexander, tenor, and Fred McPherson, bass.

Besides the quartet of singers, Mr. Bierlich is augmenting the musical program with a six-piece orchestra, the personnel including, Julius Bierlich, violin; Bern Bierlich, second violin; Dwight S. Defty, 'cello; Owen W. Hoffman, oboe, an English horn; Carl Kuehne, clarinet, and William Howe, timpani and drums.

Rhys Morgan Here

Rhys Morgan Welsh, tenor of New York, will spend the summer here, coaching his program with which he is to open his concert season at Carnegie Hall, New York City, in October. Mr. Morgan will study with Otto Morando. The young tenor has sixty-eight concerts already booked for the coming season. Miss Mary Bothwell, mezzo-soprano, is here to study with Mr. Morando in preparation of roles for the Chicago Civic Opera Company. Another Morando pupil, Douglas Stanbury, baritone, has been signed for leading roles in this organization.

Gantvoort With Zoellners

Mr. Arnold J. Gantvoort, teacher of harmony, counterpart, orchestration, and solfege, will be added to the distinguished faculty of the Zoellner Conservatory at the beginning of the fall term. Mr. Gantvoort is a native of Holland, and since coming to this country he has held many important positions. For twenty years he was head of the College of Music of Cincinnati, O.

That he stands high among his colleagues is evidenced by the fact that he served three years as president of the Ohio Music Teachers' Association, two years as president of the Music Teachers' National Association, six years as president of the music department of the Ohio Teachers' Association, and as president of the music department of the National Education Association.

In 1911 the Secretary of State appointed him as American delegate to the International Music Congress held in Rome in April of that year, and he was chosen to preside at several of the meetings of the congress.

The addition of solfege to the Zoellner Conservatory curriculum places the conservatory in a unique position, as this important branch of music is only taught in three other schools in this country, though it is universally taught throughout Europe. Mr. Gantvoort will also give at the Zoellner Conservatory a series of twenty lectures on the "History of Music."

Huhn Classes

Bruno Huhn, distinguished voice instructor from New York, who is conducting a class in Los Angeles this summer, will give a half hour's program at the City Club on Friday, July 18, presenting a few of his talented pupils. Mr. Hahn has a large class of pupils here this summer who are doing intensive work under his efficient direction.

Pantages Books Musical Shows; Tangerine First

New York musical-comedy magnates are preparing to send their shows to the Pacific Coast over the vaudeville route, according to Walter Windsor, eastern producer, who is registered at the Biltmore this week.

The first of such shows to be seen here will be "Tangerine," in which Sybil Sanderson and Frank Crummit played with great success in the East for two seasons. "Tangerine" will reach Los Angeles early in August, playing for one week at Pantages Theater.

"There are a dozen or more musical comedies produced in New York each season that never get west of Chicago, if they play that far. These shows cannot play the western territory because, out here, you can only give them a few full weeks and the rest of the tour is one-night stands. On the Pantages circuit, on the other hand, they get five or six months of full-week engagements with practically no open dates, and this enables the producer to handle his show at a minimum of expense.

"Other shows will follow "Tangerine" over the Pantages route. We are simply blazing the trail—finding a new market for our products, as the Chamber of Commerce says."

"Tangerine" will give a complete performance, unaccompanied by any vaudeville acts, and by omitting the waits between acts in the usual musical comedy, the vaudeville theaters are able to give the entire show within the usual time limit of their program.

WISE FLIVVER CRACK

Jack MacDermott, directing Ruth Roland in "Out Where the Worst Begins," joined the merry throng this week when he painted on the back of his flivver coupe "Rintintin II."

Life is Changed With Hats, Says Conway Tearle

"You get a different vision of life from under the brim of a slouchy sombrero than you do from under the stiff rim of a cylindrical top-piece," quoth Conway Tearle, immaculate leading man of the screen—with a reservation.

The reservation perhaps to his current role, that of Stephen Ghent in "The Great Divide," now in process of evolution at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, in which for the first time in years, he has escaped the thralldom of the tuxedo and the slavery of the swallow-tail.

Clothed in a wrinkled woolen shirt and baggy trousers tucked in mud-spattered boots, Tearle made the above comment the other day as he lounged in the dorway of a big stage between shots and gazed over the busy avenues of the studio with his eyes shaded by the faded and flaccid headgear of the cow-puncher.

"Conventions and pink teas, etiquette and apparel de rigeur, drawing roms and mah jongg—all these mean so little when you wear a sombrero and these clothes and truly get into the psychology of such characters as wear them regularly," he added. Society looks all askew and the free, open spaces call and awaken a new yearning."

Tragedy of Life All Trivialities, Declares Maude

Life, says Arthur Maude, director and author of screen plays, "is made up of little things; tragedies develop not so much from plots and dangerous inductions as from the trivialities which are magnified by men and women so that they become big enough to involve many persons and lead to fatal results."

Maude now is doing a series of pictures for San Diego productions, each based upon some famous painting. The first of the series was "The Angelus," the second, now being cut, on "The Doctor," by Sir Luke Fields; the third, to be started shortly, on "The Mother," by Sir John Lavery.

"Human nature," Maude observes, "is prone to mistakes. To err is human, we are told. Innuendoes which, perhaps, mean little are seized upon to be made the motives for jealousy, hate and tragedy. I seldom have a real old-fashioned villain in my stories; I seldom resort to the cut and dried plot construction which has been hackneyed by over use. On the contrary I try very hard to find the simple things which lead to big events. Thus, I think, I achieve naturalness."

Some time ago, Maude made several other pictures based on famous paintings—such as "The Song of the Lark," and "The Beggar Maid." Will Hayes, seeing some of his work, indorsed it whole-heartedly and maintained that it was the kind of material that was needed. Invariably the pictures written and directed by Maude are clean, free from suggestiveness and the sickly sex situations that sometimes destroy otherwise beautiful pictures. Probably twelve will be made in the present series. Margaret Morris, a Wampas baby star, appears in several of the first in the leading feminine roles.

NEW MUSIC IN REVIEW

Solitude;" text by Stecchetti; music by Nino Marcelli (Fischer.

"Dull clouds of gray November mist so sombre lie concealing dwellings long held in memory, logs of hearth stone burst scintillant flaming, the wind moaning so sadly, the raven crying."

These first words give one an impression of the song, with its beautious melancholy monotony. It is the type of song that Challapin, with his love for implied tragedy, might sing. For the artist who is really a master of mood and interpretation, it holds rare charm; to the soul who does not find beauty in solitude and sadness, it is nothing.

"Fairy Roses," by S. Coleridge-Taylor (Boosey & Co.) In vivace 2-2 rhythm, this song is of happy brilliance. A part of it is in waltz tempo. It will please equally in concert or parlor, or the program or as an encore. The accompaniment is attractive.

"When Love Dies," by Hermann Leopoldi (Boosey.) This song is bright and happy, and in waltz time. The harmonies fall easily on the ear; the number is easily played and sung, and is suitable to the student or professional at miscellaneous gatherings.

PIANO

"Waltz Caprice," by Wilbur R. Chenoweth (Fischer.) A spirited number, with brilliance predominating over gracefulness, the student of medium attainments will find this a pleasing number, and one that people will enjoy hearing.

"Over the Hills," pastoral reverie, by Frederic Knight Logan (Forster.) The popular composer of the "Missouri Waltz" here writes simple melody, combined with warm and conventional harmony.

"Valse Parisienne," by Rudolph Friml (Schirmer.) In flowing style, and with such novelties as open fifths (if one is unprofessional enough to term them as such) the lover of Friml's music will enjoy this. It will require a knowledge of pedal subtleties here and there, and is pleasant in mood.

"Synthetic Exercises," by Eustice Bond Rice (Schirmer.) One of the scholastic series, this is intended to be the last word in a new type of technique. It includes exercises for tone balance, hand extension, counter-rhythms and independence; these matters of importance have been handled more attractively for the student. The book is novel, however, and has certain merits. Some of the exercises are written on the whole-step scale, and a number of them in unusual keys such as C-sharp and C-flat. If the student conscientiously followed the instructions, he would benefit, but it would probably appeal to only a few students comparatively.

YACHTS AND AUTOS HIS HOBBYHORSES

John Bowers

Every star has a hobby! Or at least, every star is said to have a hobby.

John Bowers is the proud owner of two hobbies—yachting and motoring. And as a skipper, John is there. As a motorist, he takes no man's dust.

This time last year, Bowers spent the major part of the time when not appearing before the cameras, tinkering with his yacht. He was going to enter a race, but circumstances over which he had no control, prevented him.

This year, the star has left his boat tied to her moorings and is going in for the four-wheeled sport. Bowers has entered the forthcoming Ascot race, which is scheduled to take place Thanksgiving Day. He possesses one of the fastest stock cars in Southern California and what's more, the star is going to drive it himself.

It would be hard to find a greater lover of the outdoors and sports than John Bowers. He is an excellent horseman, can swing a mean lariet, and can bull-dog a steer like a hardened man of the plains. While his recent portrayals on the screen have called for "dress suit" roles, he is contemplating making several pictures that will give him the opportunity of displaying his skill as an athlete. Many will remember "When A Man's A Man," the Harold Bell Wright story, in which Bowers starred. It is pictures such as these that Bowers relishes and his plea to the producers is to find more of this nature. He has just completed work in "Empty Hearts" for F.B.O. Film Company.

INSECT REUNION

Robert Edeson greeted Edgar Norton with "Hello, Ichneumon Fly!" Norton replied with "Hello, Stranger." Edeson was on the Cecil B. De Mille set in "Feet of Clay" and Norton was on the William De Mille set in "The Fast Set." The greetings originated last year when Norton and Edeson played together in New York in "The World We Live In," the Capek play which was generally known as "the insect comedy."

WINS "COMEDY KNIGHT" TITLE

Arthur's Performance Pleases All

Johnnie Arthur

THE reviews of "The Whole Town's Talking," backed by his performance in that play at the Playhouse, entitle Johnnie Arthur to the appellation of "Knight of the Round Table of Comedians," now much depleted but nevertheless existing as an imaginary institution in the minds of the best judges.

We laugh at Johnnie Arthur's antics because there is a childish sincerity in them, and it is only the comedian's maturity that makes his humor palatable for us sophisticates.

With all deference to John Emerson and Anita Loos, who have invested their stage play with many funny situations, "The Whole Town's Talking" is not overrun with brilliant lines and witticisms. Anyway, not enough of them to make the play actor-proof. It requires a good actor to bare the underlying farce in it.

One is inclined to wonder what would have happened to Louis O. Macloon's production of the play without Arthur.

Somewhere in the days of King Arthur's court there must have been a valorous knight like Johnnie upon whom all pranks were perpetrated in order to enjoy the laughter of seeing him wriggle out of the situations. Embarrassing situations are provided in "The Whole Town's Talking"—and Johnnie Arthur wriggles out of them like his historic predecessor.

Quartet From Whitney Boys' Chorus

With a combined membership of approximately 25,000 boy singers and entertainers, a national chorus with headquarters in Los Angeles is now being formed, according to Rev. H. E. Whitney, director of the Whitney Boys' Chorus. The local organization is composed of 150 boy artists who have been proclaimed the best of their kind in the West. The national chorus now has branches in Spokane, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco with a total membership of more than 3000.

Directly following a concert to be given by the local chorus in the Hollywood Bowl on Monday night, a select group of the boy singers and entertainers will leave for a concert tour of eastern cities en route to Chicago. Branch choruses will be organized in large cities along the route. It is planned to assemble a mammoth chorus in 1925 to appear in New York City.

Rev. Mr. Whitney has been engaged in the organization of boys' choruses since 1914. The project has been indorsed by the Los Angeles Music Federation, the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, the local ministry and other civic organizations in Los Angeles.

just now," declares Maude, with the beaming "family countenance," "is to give play to my imagination as to why the painter made these works of art. I visualize in my mind what was the inspiration that enabled the master to put upon canvas such wonderful scenes, and with this thought construct a story that is a logical answer. It is the most fascinating work I ever have encountered."

As proof of his statement he gave a preview of two of his pictures, taken from the paintings of "The Angelus," by Jean Francois Millet, and "The Doctor," by Sir Luke Feldes. From them he is declared to have woven as fascinating a story as any screened in months, and pictorially beautiful. Naturalness is in every feature of the players, and in every scene; the result of his system of lighting, it is said.

"Instead of spending much money upon light, I have perfected a system whereby I use only one-fourth the amount necessary for other pictures," he explained. "I use absolutely no Cooper-Hewitts in close-ups, depending only upon the baby spots. Broads, or Kleigs, are unknown as far as I am concerned. In some of the close-ups only one baby spotlight is used, instead of and army of lights of every nature.

"It will be noticed that there are shadows in each scene. I have purposely avoided flooding the sets with light because, as everyone knows, there are always shadows upon the features and fixtures in real life, so why not in pictures? It is ridiculous to imagine that every portion of one's face and every section of a room will be in equal relief. Chiefly I attempt to show the players' eyes, for in the eyes is life itself.

"Literally, I start upon the hypothesis that the set is in total darkness. From that point I work, aiming to put light only where real light actually goes. There are generally shadows under a table, on the side of a person's face away from the lamp. So I throw shadows there. In the majority of pictures each portion of the set is lighted with an equal intensity.

Sooner or later all the producers may realize the necessity of lighting their sets in this manner, and from that time on pictures will increase in pictorial value. Now scenes are too hard, too artificial looking, to carry the impression that producers desire. And the only way to accomplish this is to do away with the Cooper-Hewitts and Kleigs in close-ups, using them for long-distance shots only."

All of Mr. Maude's pictures thus far have been received with much popular acclaim. Soon he is to start upon a story from "The Mother," the painting of Sir John Lavery. And soon he hopes to take poems and songs for backgrounds for feature films.

Filming Circus is Problem for Herbert Brenon

Filming a circus story has its problems!

So concluded Herbert Brenon when, after making all preliminaries for producing "The Sideshow of Life," featuring Ernest Torrence and Anna Q. Nilsson, and showing this week at the Metropolitan. The producer came up against the problem of portraying a real circus for the greater part of the scenes in his picture.

In most other stories containing circus episodes it would have been a comparatively easy thing to send a cameraman to the nearest show, "shoot it," and then insert the scenes in their proper places in the film. But in "The Sideshow of Life" a great deal of the action of the story hinges on various episodes that occur before, during and after the performances. Brenon was faced with the task of staging an entire circus in order to intelligently portray the subsequent action of the characters of the story.

He appealed to the Barnum & Bailey management, whose big show happened to be in New York at the time. Those gentlemen regretted exceedingly that they could not spare some of their talent for the week or ten days necessary to film the scenes.

A search for performers began. The outlook was discouraging, but someone at last located a traveling circus in a New Jersey town. Arrangements were made to hire the entire troupe—with the noisy hurdy-gurdy, lemonade stands, tent, animals, actors, performers and all. Then the entire outfit was set up on the lot in the rear of Paramount's Long Island studio and "The Sideshow of Life" was started.

The story was adapted to the screen from William J. Locke's immortal novel, "The Mountebank," which beloved character is ably portrayed by Ernest Torrence, who has proved in "The Covered Wagon" and other pictures that he is one of the greatest living masters of his art. The photoplay abounds with heart throbs, romance and all the color and fascination of circus life, it is declared.

BOY ACTOR GETS FAME

Ross Forrester in "White Collars" Rises Fast in Broadway Plays

Ross Forrester, who plays the role of Cousin Henry in "White Collars" at the Egan Theater, is an all 'round sportsman as well as an actor. He is a clever horseman, excellent swimmer, plays a very good game of golf and can Mah Jongg with any Mah Jongger that ever Mah Jongged.

Young Forrester is firmly of the opinion that anything worth doing is worth doing well. According to Frank Egan, he is very enthusiastic over his part in "White Collars" and is always striving to improve himself in his work.

His first appearance in Los Angeles was at the Orpheum Theater at the age of 6. At that time he was traveling with his mother and father presenting a sketch called "Lucky Jim" and since then he has appeared in many Broadway productions.

Frank Hagney is Film Specialist in Fast Scrapt

The motion-picture industry is an industry of specialists. Certain players excell in certain types of portrayals. Others achieve fame because of a special aptitude along definite lines of endeavor.

Frank Hagney, whose smooth villainy harrasses Harry Carey in "Roaring Rails," his fourth Hunt Stromberg production, is a fight specialist.

If an unusually good fight is needed, the director calls Frank Hagney.

For ten years Hagney was Australia's most famous all-'round athlete.

It must be understood that screen fighting requires a technique all its own. Each blow must be carefully timed, because often the most effective punches will not "register" as effectively as those which have been carefully studied and faked. And the screen fighter must never lose his head or his sense of camera lines, no matter how fast and furious the battle rages.

Frank Hagney appeared in "Roaring Rails," "The Leather Pushers" and the "Fight and Win" series in which Jack Dempsey starred.

Egyptian Hangs Out 'S.R.O.' at Thief of Bagdad

The Thief of Bagdad" continues as the greatest attraction yet seen at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theater where it is now entering its third week. The standing room only sign has been displayed at every evening performance, indicating a record-breaking run and even exceeding that of the three previous Egyptian presentations.

"The Thief of Bagdad" is a colorful adaptation from the "Arabian Nights." It contains all the beauty and mystery of the Far East, woven into a story both entertaining and thrilling. Douglas Fairbanks, the Peter Pan of screen leading men, has his happiest role as the thief. Julanne Johnston, former "Follies" girl makes her screen debut as the Princess. The balance of the cast includes Sadakichi Hartman, Brandon Hurst, Anna May Wong, Winter Blossom, Etta Lee, Noble Johnson and many others.

The musical program supporting "The Thief of Bagdad" presentation is said to be of unusual beauty and quality. Under the direction of Ulderico Marcelli, conductor, the Egyptian Orchestra maintains the feeling and spirit of ancient Bagdad with its weird, indefinable charm and mysticism.

"The City of Dreams," Sid Grauman's most spectacular prologue, is creating more discussion among both laymen and professionals than any previous Grauman presentations. It is a massive conception realized in terms of vivid colors, haunting melodies and memorable tepsichorean numbers. Several score of natives take part in the piece giving it an air of authenticity not possible otherwise.

FANS LAUGH AS DIGNITY TAKES FALL

Comedy is Catastrophe; Slip on Banana Peeling, Says Mack Sennett

What is a joke and what makes it funny?

A newspaper man asked that question of Mack Sennett not long ago; considerably to his surprise Mr. Sennett gave him the answer.

"In motion-picture comedies, at least, the funniest thing is usually that which involves the fall of dignity.

"I dare say that was the first joke that ever happened in the world; when some old caveman came walking along with a club, putting it over the other cave boys, and stepped on a banana peel.

"As they all say, the human race originated in the tropical regions, I think we can add safely that a banana peel had something to do with the first practical joke in the world.

"But if there were no dignified people in the world, then banana peels wouldn't be funny.

"It's funny if a policeman falls on a banana peel, because he represents power and dignity; and we are all secretly afraid of him. Anybody in a top hat is funny falling on a banana peel. But there is nothing funny in a street sweeper falling on a banana peel.

"That's why so many comedies fall flat. If a catastrophe like slipping on a banana peel happens to someone who is not weighted with heavy dignity, then there isn't a laugh in it. It becomes mere brutality.

"I have often thought that the funniest gag in the world could be made out of the coronation of a king—if it were not for the expense.

"I can imagine how the King would be coming down the street on the way to be crowned, with the life guards and the brass bands and the carriages, with outriders and all. But when he gets to the palace where the coronation is to take place, he can't get in. The janitor comes out and searches frantically for the door key. Can't find it. His wife has been pressing his pants with the family flatiron and forgot to put the key back into his pocket. So the King and all the royalty have to wait until the janitor hot-foots it home to ask the wife what she did with the stuff in his pocket when she ironed his pants.

"That's the very essence of comedy. That's the stuff it is made of—contrast and catastrophe involving the unseating of dignity."

OBER ON MOTOR TOUR OF SOUTHLAND COAST

Following his theory that change of locale is a great stimulant for the actor—at least when the change constitutes somewhat of a vacation, Robert Ober, stage and screen player, has just left for a five-day motor tour of the Southland's most beautiful seaside resorts. Mr. Ober expects to make Del Mar the first day, from there he will continue to La Jolla, where an old New York friend will join him, and then on to Coronado for the remainder of the week. Ober is a great lover of the rugged beauty to be found along the Southland's coast and anticipates a delightful journey.

Alpha Show, Who Goes Swimming But Never Goes Near the Water

BY LEE SHIPPEY

Now that the bathing beaches are in full summer bloom, the striped umbrella buds all having opened up like startling blossoms, ten times as colorful as a rainbow or a hothouse and almost as colorful as a bunch of would-be extra girls, Miss Alpha Show is in her element. For Alpha is a real beacherina. She dotes on her bathing suit and prefers it to all other garments. She feels freer in it than in anything else—and acts the same.

Yet Alpha is not a mermaid. If the name weren't copyrighted it would be more appropriate to call her a Sun Maid. For, among other things, she shows her raisin'.

When Alpha (you should, by the way, remember your Greek in pronouncing her name,) went shopping for a bathing suit it was quality, not quantity, she was after. The one she picked out, it was guaranteed, already had been shrunk, and it looked it. One glance at it has made many a bald-headed man wonder why he used to pay money for first-row seats at the burlesque shows. A Parisian artist's model might blush to pose in it—but that is the main thing Alpha Show does.

LAND SWIMMER

Alpha could hardly be seen on the beach oftener if she was paid for it by the day, yet she has never once forgotten that it might be a dangerous thing to get her feet wet. As for her suit, it has no more chance of getting into salt water than La Follette has of getting into the White House.

She is a sand swimmer. Not content with leaving footprints on the sands of time, she leaves full-length profiles in a dozen places a day.

But do not imagine that she lies in the sand and wonders what the wild waves are saying. She is much more interested in what the wild men are saying.

Running down the scale from vulgar to vulgarissimo, there are sports, cheap sports, tin-horn sports, park-bench piffliers and oceanside oglers. Alpha's mission in life seems to be to bring a little sunshine into the shady, or moonshiny, lives of the last designated. Wherever those human sand crabs congregate she paces, trots, canters, gallops and generally horseshows herself. She has never learned that nobody puts a high value on a free performance.

HUNGRY AND THIRSTY

For their benefit she plays baseball, hopscotch, leap frog and tag, but she never loses herself in any of the sports. She always acts as if listening for the shout of "camera!"

And if it weren't for the interested spectators she wouldn't put herself to that much effort for a necklace of real Kimberleys.

She gets hungry or thirsty every time she sees a group of well-dressed males around the hot dog stand or the near-suds emporium.

Alpha's folks think she goes to the beach every day to swim. Whenever they stroll out and see her they are surprised to find her as dry as W. J. Bryan. But she always has a good excuse. It is always a little too chilly or too hot just then, or too many other people are using the ocean, or there's a little seaweed in the water, or it is rumored that a stingaree is cruising in the offing. She feels that for the time being a sun-bath will do her more good than anything else.

But she prefers to take her sun-baths under a striped canopy. Otherwise, she would look chocolate-dipped by now.

VERY GENEROUS

The fact is that Alpha goes to the beach to see and be seen, and she can't do either to best advantage under water. She knows the waste. It is distressing to know that a great, intelligently directed and highly organized industdy like that covering the production and fabrication of metals should permit waste to devour 29 per cent of its expenditures every year. Yet, compared with other industries, this is a good showing. In the boot-and-shoe trade the loss is 41 per cent. In the textile industry for every yard of goods made the value of another yard is wasted. In the building trades the annual waste amounts to 53 per cent and in the printing trades 58 per cent. The men's clothing business has the worst record. It costs as much to make a pair of pants as it should cost to produce a whole suit. In the country as a whole the values thus thrown overboard every year are not less than $10,000,000,000."

SUM ALMOST INCREDIBLE

It is difficult to visualize how great a sum is $10,000,000,000. If Adam had signalized his first year in the Garden of Eden by putting away $1,000,000 and the human race had gone on adding to it $1,000,000 every year to the present time, the fund would not yet have reached the $10,000,000,000 mark and would not do so for another 2000 years. Ten billion dollars would pay all our Federal taxes and then leave enough surplus to buy all the automobiles produced last year and all the houses built for Americans to live in.

These figures were impressive and I asked for an explanation of the manner in which our so-called shrewd and prudent business men permitted this tremendous loss in their operations.

"The waste we are warning against comes entirely from the practice of overdiversification. Let me explain. An axe seems a fairly simple sort of tool. Some months ago I had a conference with three leading manufacturers of axes. I found that they were making thirty-four models in four qualities, eleven finishes and from five to nineteen sizes. This means that they were actually offering in their catalogs over 6000 varieties of ordinary single-bit axes. The situation is even worse than this, how-

CROWN 'UNEASY,' BUT WORTH WHILE, SAYS QUEEN MARIE

Consort Like Skipper of Ship, Steers It Past Hidden Reefs, Brings Vessel in Port, Declares Europe's Most Beautiful Royal Woman

[Copyright, 1924, in United States, Great Britain and South America by North American Newspaper Alliance. All rights reserved.]

In this, the only interview granted by Queen Marie of Rumania on her visit to England, the famous royal author gives an intimate picture of her hopes for the improvement of the world, largely through the work of women. This interview, secured at great difficulty, gives the first close-up mind picture of the Queen to be presented to her host of admirers in America.

BY HAYDEN CHURCH
London Correspondent of the North American Newspaper Alliance

LONDON, July 19.—"You ask me if it is worth while being a queen? I, as one queen, certainly find it very much worth while. Summed up, the queen of a country that needs to be helped, as mine does, is like the skipper of a ship that is fighting its way through stormy seas. It is for her, like him, to steer safely past the hidden reefs, to avoid the dangerous shoals, and to bring the vessel safe into port. . . .

"The world, I am told, is interested in me. I think, if that is true, it is because I am interested in the world. There is always a mutuality about such things, is there not?"

Those were two of many conversational sparks that were struck by the Queen of Rumania in the course of an exclusive interview (or audience as her entourage preferred to call it.) The most beautiful royal woman in Europe, as she frequently has been called, talked vivaciously and unconventionally of her hope of ultimately visiting the United States, where she has many acquaintances; about American women and what she described as their "extraordinary energy," about her literary activities and ambitions as a writer; about her work for Rumania and her aspirations for her country's future. Lastly, and perhaps most thrilling of all, she discussed frankly the advantages and disadvantages of being a queen.

Queen Marie of Rumania

Rumania's queen looks the part and quite evidently feels it. It is the fashion to describe her as still ravishingly beautiful, and beautiful by all accounts she was in days somewhat earlier, one proof of it being that, as a girl of 16, a year before she turned the head and captured the heart of Prince Ferdinand, the Rumanian heir apparent, she is said to have had a formal proposal from her royal cousin, now King George V.

HER HAIR LIKE RIPE CORN

Her Majesty will be 50 next year. Handsome she is, and very, very stately. Sitting beside her royal husband in a gilded state carriage, on her way from Buckingham Palace to London's Guildhall to receive the freedom of the city, beautifully costumed and draped in a mantle of pale heliotrope, with a large picture hat of the same shade, Marie of Rumania looked "every inch a queen."

One had always imagined her, somehow, as dark, like her latest heroine, the mountain maiden Glava, who had "night-colored tresses." On the contrary, Her Majesty's own abundant hair, which ripples away from her face and is gathered into a knot at the back of her small head, is, as she herself probably would express it, the color of ripe corn. Her eyes are very blue and what she described to me as her beauty secrets—fresh air, fruit and early rising—have kept her skin, if not quite like a girl's, at least like that of a much younger woman. Tall and fine of figure, she is always gowned exquisitely. She herself has described dress as "the very expression of a woman," and when she received me at the Rumanian Legation, in the fashionable Grosvenor street, Her Majesty had "expressed herself" by means of a dove gray creation straight from the Rue de la Paix, with another of the large hats she affects shading her animated face.

Regarding Rumania's queen a considerable amount of nonsense, both laudatory and otherwise, has been written. Among other things it has been stated by a biographer, who presumably has never met her, that "she never has mastered English or any other language." The fact is that the Queen speaks English like any other cultivated English woman, without the slightest trace of a foreign accent, in spite of the thirty-odd years she has spent in the country of her adoption. And she is a clever, perhaps one might even say brilliant, conversationalist.

She gently but firmly declined to talk politics.

WANTS TO VISIT AMERICA

Rumor has had it more than once that King Ferdinand's many sided consort was at last to visit America—where a cynic has prophesied that beatification awaits her—and recently the report has been revived.

"America beckons to me most attractively," she replied to a question, "and a visit is among the hopes I may realize one day, but when is dependent upon many things. At present my people need me; they will need me for a long time to come. I have had invitations to visit every part of your country, but its enormous area will always present a difficulty. America!—it is a big word. Should I tour there, you see, I should want to satisfy as many people as possible; and when should I ever get away?

"I should like to become acquainted with every sphere of life in America. To meet even very humble people. The humble man, I find, is just as well worth knowing as the man who moves the world. It is not only among the so-called great that I care to make my friends." And it was here that she added: "The world, I am told, is interested in me. If so, it is probably because I am interested in the world. There is always a mutuality about such things, is there not?"

Even the comparatively brief audience which Queen Marie was able to grant me took a lot of contriving and not a little wire pulling to bring to pass. I had been warned that during the state visit of Her Majesty and King Ferdinand to England's King and Queen—a bare three days crowded with ceremonials—it was out of the question for even the most favored journalist to hope for ever so brief an interview with the most gifted royal woman in Europe. But during the fortnight that Queen Marie was staying on in England, as the guest of her sister, the Infanta Beatrice of Spain, something, it was thought, might be arranged.

The arranging was unexpectedly difficult, however. Even Rumania's official representatives here

MAIDS IN SURF BECKON TO "TIRED-EYES" AT BEACHES

Summer Season on in Full Swing; All There From Cooing Couple to Kodakers From Iowa

BY A. L. WOOLDRIDGE

Glittering with a daily pageant of surf maids in pretty one-piece suits, the California beaches have swung into the summer season. Maids in suits of blue, maids in suits of red, maids in yellow, green and stripes, wearing caps of brilliant colors and sometimes stockings, too, have arrived to help out tired eyes. And no one's mad about it. At Venice, Ocean Park, Santa Monica, Long Beach, and other points, the shoreline is taking on the aspect of a carnival; the "hot dog" vendors are reaping their annual harvest, the bally-hoo men in amusement zones are winning their rewards and fellows who rent the great, gaudy beach parasols are selling out.

For fifteen miles the shore line above Santa Monica, clear to the end of the paving at the famous Rindge Ranch, has been lined with a double row of motor cars each week-end. No fewer than 10,000 machines have found parking space and at night little camp fires have shown where parties were being held on the sands. While the moon was full and the grunion running, the shore was populated by thousands far into the night.

Some were seeking grunion. Some were obvious of the spawning fish.

Spooners and "the sad sea waves" and moonlight!

Who'd want fish!

But in the daytime when the California sunshine warms the sand and the mighty old Pacific is any way calm, crowds are gathering. Deauville may lure the maids of France in their gorgeous raiment, Atlantic City may beckon to the throngs in the heat-baked East and Waikiki call from the islands of the sea, but none of the three will offer more than can be found on the shores just beyond Los Angeles.

"AIN'T NOTHING MORE"

"There ain't nothin' more!" is the way one "sand lizard" summed it up yesterday, while watching the throng at Venice. "It's all here."

While the maid in the one-piece suit is "stealing the show," there are thousands and thousands enjoying the surf for the pure pleasure and relaxation it affords. "Father" is there, very often asleep on the sand. He is there with a hamburger in one hand and a "near beer" in the other and the sporting page under one foot. Sometimes he is seen sitting alone at one side as though reflecting—

Backward, turn backward, O,
Time in your flight,
And make me a boy again, just for tonight!

"Mother" is there with the old Kimono or "father's" discarded bathrobe, relaxing. She's interested, yet not excited.

But "son" and "daughter" are out in the big show. No sitting it out on the sands for them!

Making up the throng are the usual girls with the ukuleles, the male quartets, the engaged couples basking in the shade of the great parasols and those who aren't yet engaged, but hope to be; traveling salesmen taking a day off between trips, "tired business men," who aren't so tired when the one-piece suits come on; sleeping Apollos, bobbed-hair mermaids, dimpled darlings, and excited kodakers from Iowa.

Out in the surf are the swimmers, near-swimmers and waders. Out there are the divers who go under the breakers when they break; the surf-board riders, who come in with the roll of the waves; boys and girls clinging to inflated tubes from automobile tires and children clinging to the necks of their "dads." Out there is the girl who powders her nose every time she goes in the water and the one who powders it every time she comes out. And, always, the lip-stick. In a battle between the mighty Pacific and a two-bit lip-stick, the rouge wins. Every time the water knocks off the red, the lip-stick slaps it back again. The ocean hasn't a chance!

PLANES AND BOATS

Overhead fly the airplanes and yonder the speed boats. At one side are the "hot dog" and hamburger booths and the stalls with ice cream cones. From the rear comes the music from the dance pavilion and the whine of the organ in the merry-go-round. Near by hover the life guards—sunburned, bronzed, furtively glancing now and then at the crowds in the surf. In the distance is the bark of the bally-hoo men in the amusement zone.

The younger folk have wonderful sport and father and mother try hard to get into the spirit of the thing. Then, according to the lifeguards, trouble starts.

A shriek is heard as an elderly man or woman comes up after being rolled over and under by a breaker.

"My teeth! My teeth are gone!"

Blowing water from mouth and nose, out has come a whole plate or bridge or the false-work. Then ensues a futile search on the floor of the ocean. The wash of the waters is as likely to carry the store teeth toward the beds of kelp as to roll them up on the strand. Usually, however, some one steps on them, mashes them down, and they're lost forever.

"There's been enough false teeth lost here to fill a keg," said Charles Kirby, one of the old guards at Venice. "Sometimes they are washed ashore, but not often. We've picked up a few sets, but the owners didn't claim them. Total loss; no insurance!

"It's a sorrowful sight to see a woman—or even a man, at that—going home without the trusty store teeth."

The most perturbing tragedy, however, according to Kirby, is when a bathing suit parts unexpectedly. This usually happens in the water. Then, unless the wearer has friends near, he or she, whichever it may be, starts to "sit it out" until dark or calls for help.

WEAR KELP GIRDLE

"You see them come wading out of the water, sometimes," the guard said, "wearing a strange-looking girdle made of kelp and sea weed—the kelp thickest where the split came. Then the scurry toward the bathhouse. This doesn't happen often because some one usually offers a cloak or bathrobe to cover the retreat. They glare at those who look as they go by."

Daily, losses are reported to the guards—eye-glasses, rings, brooches, studded pins, wrist-watches, false teeth and money. It is not an uncommon sight, the guards say, to see persons coming in from the strand flinging water from wrist-watches they forgot to remove. Nor is it unusual for both men and women to go in the surf absent-mindedly wearing glasses. These usually are lost in the first dip. A little more than a month ago a man reported the loss of a Masonic ring containing a diamond which weighed a karat and one-half. This never was recovered. So, there is a precious stone in the sands at Venice worth somewhere between $1000 and $1500.

Precautions have been taken at the beaches to protect persons caught in the treacherous rip-

BOUDOIR MIRRORS of AMERICA

MRS. VINCENT ASTOR HAS REAL AMERICAN GUESTS

BY MRS. ANONYMOUS

Even since the war it has been more or less fashionable among society folk in New York to open their houses for meetings in the interest of causes of one kind or another. Not that these homes are actually opened to the public. Oh, no! One gets a regular invitation, with R.S.V.P. and everything, which produces the "feel" of going to a real function, as well as high hopes of rubbing elbows with the great.

Of course, a good many are disappointed when they find that the lady of the mansion is in Europe or somewhere and there are no members of the household to be seen except the butler and a few maids. But, after all, there are plenty of folks to whom it is interesting to be on the inside looking around, after a lifetime wondering from the top of the Fifth-avenue bus what is behind those wrought-iron doors and those shuttered windows.

Mrs. Vincent Astor is one of those who is most generous about giving the use of her home for causes. The first time I was invited there I was quite excited. I thought that surely Mrs. Astor in the flesh would greet us, and that I should have the pleasure of seeing at close range her lovely golden hair. I even had hopes that she might be wearing, for that particular occasion, her celebrated pink pearls, which everybody says are so very becoming to her delicate blonde beauty. But not so. That lady is seldom visible to the naked eye on such occasions. I ever, for a sufficiently insistent purchaser could get any one of the thirty-four models in any of the thirty-five brands, in any of the eleven finishes, in any of the nineteen sizes. This afforded him a wide range of choice between 994,840 varieties of axes.

WASTED HATS

"A manufacturer of men's hats at this very time produces for the more or less standardized male head 3684 styles and colors of hats. We have found that 90 per cent of his business is done on seven styles in ten colors. But he insists on carrying the remaining 3600 kinds to get 10 per cent more business. This means that the 90 per cent who are content to wear the usual styles must pay a huge tax to support the queer taste of the other 10 per cent. It is from the enormous production costs entailed by this useless diversification that the great bill for waste comes. The remedy is simplification."

"You speak of simplification," I interrupted. "Is this not in reality 'standardization'? And does not the American business man resent it as having a Prussian flavor?"

"No, we don't like the word standardization," was Mr. Dur- In front of the long, low adobe building, painted white, which answered the purpose of hotel, store, postoffice, and a number of other things, were a score of Mexicans and Indians, dressed in their Sunday best, talking and gesticulating excitedly. All were more or less under the influence of their native drink, aguardiente. At the end of the piazza a strolling photographer had set up his tent and was doing a thriving business. The street, dusty and unpaved, was alive with young Mexicans tearing up and down on their fleet bronco ponies. They would start at breakneck speed and stop with a suddenness which almost unseated them. This feat they performed over and over amid much yelling and shouting.

The arena was set off in a corner of the plaza in an acre and a half of land. The top and sides of the inclosure were made from the branches of mountain trees. Inside, ranged along the sides, were numerous drinking booths, all well patronized. In front of each booth a gambler plied his stock in trade of cards and dice, watched by a breathless crowd in holiday attire.

The music consisted of the church organ, carried outside for the occasion, a drum, violin and fife. Before the festivities mass was said in the Mission Church. There were no seats, and men and women ranged themselves on their knees on opposite sides of the church. The women were all attired in black with veils or light shawls over their heads. At the conclusion of the mass the crowd swarmed from the church and with shouts and cheers hurried on foot or horseback to the quadrangle where the fight was to be held.

BEAST TORTURED

The bull was in the center of the ring, lassoed head and foot by riatas drawn taut. He was lying helplessly on his side while he was pinched, pricked with sharp swords, cuffed and dirt thrown into his eyes. Some of the riders even rolled the sharp teeth of their Mexican spurs into the unfortunate beast's nostrils. Presently his bonds were loosed and the animal staggered to his feet. He was dazed by the torture to which he had been subjected and his spirit already broken. The crowd yelled at him and he ran helplessly around the ring, avoiding the horses and seeking some means of escape, but all were barred against him; and at last, in despair he came again to the center of the ring. A strip of red cloth was waved tantalizing in his face by a horseman who quickly spurred his animal away as the bull charged. All the while he kept his face turned toward his tormentors, returning to the charge gamely again and again, but he was lumbering and clumsy, and always missed his nimble antagonists.

He tried different tactics. He stood still and sulked; then roared loudly and pawed at the dust which momentarily obscured him. Time after time that maddening red flag was flaunted in his face. He charged it futilely. Finally he fell exhausted; the red flag no longer interested him, and he was led subdued and chastened from the ring to be replaced by another. And so the game went on until either bull or matador were killed.

The fiesta continued with unabated zeal for eight days, interspersed with Indian dances, cock fights, horse races, religious ceremonies and other diversions.

Bull fights were always conducted on Sunday until stopped by the passing of a law against them.

REAL GAME OF SKILL

Another game indulged in by the native Californian of the south, and very popular among them, was played with chickens. In this game some sixty horsemen took part forming themselves into two columns. The chicken, with a silver dollar tied to its leg, was buried deep in the middle of the road. Fifteen horsemen entered the lists, which involved daring and difficult horsemanship. Each horseman galloped past the bird at full speed, leaning far down out of the saddle in an endeavor to pluck the chicken out. They swept down on the bird with marvelous speed, but the chicken, in its frantic efforts to free itself, successfully dodged them. Sometimes the riders were thrown from their horses and badly injured.

Occasionally the chicken managed to escape and was followed by the whole screaming company. When it was caught it was buried deeper than before. Finally a darkhaired youth, with a red silk sash knotted around his slender waist, after two hours' strenuous trial, succeeded in plucking the chicken from the hole. With the bird held aloft in his hand he darted for a post half a mile away, the whole band galloping madly at his heels. It was the privilege of the successful one to strike on the head with the chicken any of his followers. As soon as the prize-winner reached the goal he became the pursued, and, amid shouts and wild laughter, belabored with the unlucky chicken all who came within his reach.

gin's instant rejoinder. "And Americans don't like it. Besides, we are not aiming at standardization. If we were our methods would be different. The government would name a commission to make a survey of heads as to shape and dimension, bump development, scalp temperatures and the ventilation needed to control them; there would be conferences with social arbiters, questionnaires to hat merchants, conferences with hat makers. Then, after ten or fifteen years, the government would announce standard hat sizes and manufacturers would have to conform to them. That is standardization.

HELP MANUFACTURERS

"Our plan has been to help manufacturers get at the facts for themselves. After that they have absolute liberty of choice. We do not furnish them with standards. We try to get them to confine their production to the sizes and types actually in demand and to cut out the unnecessary styles, which add enormously to their cost."

At this point there began to dawn on me a consciousness of the average man's incredulity in the presence of the theorist's figures.

"Your figures and your plan sound plausible," I said. "But will they work out in practice and can you get the business men to adopt them?"

"They not only will work out, but are working out," Mr. Durgin assured me. "We are bringing new groups of manufacturers to adopt the plan every month. We got a great manufacturer of foods to simplify his products. He decreased the variety 89 per cent. For every dollar he spent on his sales force before he now spends 27 cents. For every dollar he formerly spent on advertising he now spends 22 cents. For every dollar he spent on overhead he now pays out 20 cents. His sales have increased 600 per cent. I could give your scores of incidents like this.

"Why should the government interfere in this business? Why spend the people's money? That is a question you have not asked me. But some criticism of the department has been made on this score. The answer seems simple. Without the government's entry into the problem nothing would ever be done. The inauguration of simplified practice in any industry requires the co-operation of so many men in so many groups that they would never be brought together without the aid of the government. As to the money we spend, is not the reward worth the price?"

QUEEN MARIE LIKES CROWN

had failed to visualize the spell of the Queen, famous alike as a royal matchmaker who has married two of her daughters to kings and will probably get another monarch for the third; as a placer of big contracts, as a negotiator of loans and treaties and as an authoress and musician of some note. Add to al l the rest that Queen Marie, as a daughter of the late Duke of Edinburgh, Queen Victora's second son, is claimed as an English princess (she was born in this country and lived here up to the time of her marriage, at 17, to the heir to the throne of Rumania,) and you will readily comprehend why Her Majesty, even during the supposedly private part of her visit, had had a vogue such as no other royal visitor has enjoyed in recent years.

So rapidly, in fact, did the Queen's engagements crowd upon one another that she appeared at one of them held in the late afternoon in decollete, explaining that she was going on to the opera and wouldn't have time to change.

When the only newspaper writer to be so favored, I eventually found myself in the royal presence, it was with the harassing knowledge that in the adjoining room was a distinguished company including the famous Royal Academician, Sir John Lavery; the Infanta Beatrice, Madame Titulesco, wife of the Roumanian minister to England; Sir Harry Brittain and a dozen English and continental title-bearers, impatiently awaiting her Majesty's appearance among them.

Queen Marie's personal friends include several American women, two of whom, Lady Astor and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Spender Clay, entertained her during her stay in England. So it was natural to ask her Majesty for her frank opinion of Uncle Sam's daughters.

LIKES AMERICAN ENERGY

"To me the most striking characteristic of American women is their astonishing energy," said the Queen. "Some of them I find very selfish; I am referring now to the ones who are generally in Paris spending their husbands' money. But I admire very greatly those of your women, and they are so many, who devote themselves to working for the good of humanity—women like your Y.W.C.A. workers and the nursing women of whom I saw so much during the war. These I consider the real flower of America's womanhood, for it is only useful work, I consider, that justifies one's existence. It is the work I carry on as a queen that reconciles me to some of the disadvantages of my position."

At this I chortled inwardly, for Queen Marie had given me an opening for the very question I had been itching to put to her, but had hardly dared. I wanted to ask her if being a queen was really worth while; if it was fun enough to be the consort of a monarch to make up for the well-known fact that "uneasy lies the head that wears a crown."

Her majesty's emphatic and somewhat overpowering reply is quoted at the beginning of this article. One obviously couldn't inquire if, in thus depicting herself as the skipper of the Roumanian ship of State, her Majesty hadn't overlooked the fact that her country possesses a fairly efficient king and also a prime minister of some mental caliber and experience, who might be expected to take the helm occasionally. Maybe Queen Marie has her private opinion as to the capacity of her country's masculine leaders, crowned and uncrowned. Anyhow she is apparently perfectly sincere when conveying the impression that upon her shapely shoulders alone rests the burden of statecraft.

QUEEN'S DUTY TO INSPIRE

"To direct a whole nation," she continued, "to lift up a people that has been beaten down and help it on the way to greatness is not an easy task; perhaps it may sometimes seem a thankless task. But it has its reward in the gratitude that one earns ultimately if not immediately—in the love of one's people. And one cannot help becoming engrossed in a work that is so necessary. Work, I repeat, is the main thing in life. It does not matter if one only makes clocks, or if one directs great enterprises or rules a people, so long as one loves the work and does it as well as one can.

"A queen can be a leader—as much a leader as the greatest general, the greatest statesman. She can be a tremendous inspiration, and it is inspiration, above all, that struggling peoples need.

"Some will say that queens are swayed by prejudices. It would be more just to describe them as influenced by traditions. It is very easy, and one is often tempted, to forget those traditions, but to do so is always a mistake. It is no easy task living up to a people's ideal of what a queen shou ld be, for beauty and charm are indispensable complements to a crown. I always try to look as nice as I can, for the public expects it of me, and I must give them something attractive to look at. A natural glamour surrounds a queen, and frankly I believe in maintaining and even emphasizing that glamour. Why should I be like anybody else?"

It is becoming a tradition of the Court of Roumania that its queen should be literary. Also that she should be a weaver of fantasies. Under the pseudonym of Carmen Sylva, Queen Marie's royal predecessor, Queen Elizabeth of Roumania, produced books of poesy and fairy tales that, as somebody has phrased it, "were not only published but also sold."

ROMANCES, NOT NOVELS

Queen Marie's books sell too. She began by writing fairy tales for children. Later she wrote a fairy play, produced with tremendous eclat at the Paris Opera House two or three years ago to raise funds for charity. Now her Majesty has begun writing fairy tales for grown-ups. Her romance—she objects to having it called a novel—"The Voice on the Mountain," represents her most ambitious efforts in the role of authoress.

Published in America some months ago, its heroine is a maiden prophetess, Glava, who lives in mystical seclusion on a mountain top, where she gallops about on a fire-colored stallion (Queen Marie herself is, of course, an enthusiastic and somewhat reckless horsewoman,) and heals the pilgrims who come to her from the valley below. Eventually Glava rides down into the valley and there finds Love in the guise of a wandering knight, one Doochroon. The story has a touch of the allegorical, a touch of fairyland, and yet another touch of the Fiona McLeod school, yet through it all it keeps the individuality of its royal author.

The fact is that Queen Marie writes mighty well—for a queen. She has evidently read widely among the poets, her chapters being headed by quotations from Tagore, Shelley, Alfred Noyes, Rossetti and Henri Spiess.

"The pleasant reception my book has had encouraged me to keep on writing," said the Queen. "I felt very doubtful whether there would be a public for purely fanciful stories like mine, but the fact that my romance has sold appears to show that there are a certain number of readers who enjoy being taken into a world of poetic unrealities. Perhaps they find it a relief from the material and humdrum.

"So I shall be publishing other books. I have another about three-quarters finished. It is called 'Crowned Queens,' and I have begun writing another, which I shall probably call 'A Story of Unrest.' Neither of them will be concerned with real life, or with any particular country or period. I am too poetic and imaginative to be the least bit of a realist.

WORLD CAN BE LIFTED

"I have no idea of competing against professional writers, nor to become what is called a 'best seller.' But at certain times I am forced to write down my feelings and thoughts, and then again my people like to read my work. This pleases me, and I believe, as stated in my mystic story, that the world can be lifted from the valley to the mountain and then perhaps to the higher ideal."

I asked the Queen what author had most influenced her.

"I am a great lover of Tagore," she said, "but my literary godmother, if I may so express it, was Fiona McLeod, the Celtic mystic. When I began reading her books something crystallized in me, some creative element in my subconscious self. She was a northerner and a mystic. I, too, am a northerner by origin, in fact a double northerner, Scottish on one side, Russian on the other."

Her Majesty's mother was the Grand Duchess Marie, only daughter of the Czar Alexander.

"It is because of this, no doubt, that I so readily absorbed the mysticism of Fiona McLeod. As for Tagore, he gave me, to intermingle with the visionings of the North, the glamour of the East. He is a continual inspiration."

Fiona McLeod was the pen name of William Sharp.

It appears that like Mrs. Asquith, who entertained her the other day, Queen Marie has kept a diary, but, unlike Margot, she doesn't intend to let it be published. Not while she lives, at all events.

"If I were quite ruined—perhaps, who knows?" she said. "Many people want me to publish it, but it is far too intimate, and in this respect I think certain people have gone too far. There is a great interest in actuality, I know, but one should be careful not to let it become a vulgar giving away of one's own private feelings. If one publishes a diary one must expect criticism, of course, but no one likes even funny little stories of themselves made public.

"My idea is to leave my diary after my death (when no one can scold me) as a legacy to my country, and I want it sold the highest bidder to help my favorite charity."

WORKING FOR CHILDREN

Her main object of her life, however, is the intellectual and social advancement of her people. She is working actively to establish dispensaries and provide medical skill for those without means. Infant welfare work particularly interests her. But she is, she declares, a "practical idealist."

"All my schemes are concerned with children," she said, "and I want my people taught the rules of hygiene. But where civilization hasn't reached down to the peasants, rules alone are not sufficient. Practical things are necessary.

"What is the use of saying to a mother, 'Keep your child clean' if she has no soap? And the same with food. How are tracts to help if these is no milk?"

CONVENTION—OR RED PLUSH?

suppose that would really be asking too much for the cause.

INDIANS IN FIFTH AVENUE

I remember one day not so very long ago Mrs. Astor gave the use of her home to some people who were interested in helping the Indians. There had been a great deal of agitation concerning the property rights of the Pueblos in the Southwest and to dramatize the story two real live Indians had been brought all the way from New Mexico. They sang and danced and completely captivated every audience that saw and heard them. They wore the most gorgeous feathers and silver necklaces and elaborately beaded buckskin suits.

You know the Indians originally went without garments of any kind, so it is said, and it was the Indian woman who invented the buckskin suit. She thought of the fringe as a decoration because it was not only decorative, but in case of need the man could knot pieces of it together and use it as a cord. It was woman who discovered that buckskin is warm in winter and cool in summer.

These two Indians were called Tony and John. Tony looked very solemn and very wise and he spoke only a few English words. But those few he used effectively. We all wondered what he was thinking of as he beat the tom-tom for John to dance. John was younger and more fluent in the tongue of the pale face.

The Astor mansion was in striking contrast to the tepee of the red man, and it occurred to some one to show Tony and John about the house. There were summer linen covers on the furniture, the draperies were down, and even the pictures were carefully covered with canvas. Tony gave a few swift glances around and said, "Much fine. No life."

SO THEY WERE MARRIED!

Yes, Tony was wise, and I must say he has an intriguing personality. At the same time I am one of those who never have recovered from the shock of the news that Mabel Stern and Tony were married. This news reached New York soon after Tony went back to New Mexico. It really was a shock.

Mabel Stern is well known in social and art circles in New York, especially in the western part of New York State. Tony is her fourth husband. I believe the first one died. The second left Mabel quite well off so far as money is concerned. I forget what did happen to him, but, whatever it was he left his money for Mabel. The third husband, Mr. Stern, now detached permanently, of course, is an artist and is living in Italy.

Mabel has lived a most interesting life both in this country and abroad. She has had the advantages of the best society and is well educated. They say Tony isn't temperamental. Mabel. says they do not need any spoken language as there is a perfect spiritual understanding between them. This, she says, is the real test of love.

IT'S A HAPPY MATCH

Tony and Mabel live down near Santa Fe and are very happy indeed. Tony helped Mabel plan and build her attractive house, which was quite near his own little abode. After the marriage he moved into her house. But Tony still keeps his own simple home near by and to this he goes frequently for spiritual meditation and for the quiet that he cannot get in Mabel's house, where there are many guests, for Mabel is very fond of company and the latch-string is always outside.

Tony is very decorative around the house. He wears those adorable buckskin trousers fringed at the side, a loose yellow shirt open at the neck, and a soft, flowing black tie. His long, shining black hair hangs in two braids down his back and into the braids Mabel playfully weaves bright colored ribbons.

Yes, Tony is decorative. No one can deny that. Mabel will tell you rupturously that she never knew what real happiness and perfect contentment were until she met Tony. When she says this a soft light steals into Tony's eyes and he lights a fresh pipe. Tony's soul comprehends.

The New York visit of Tony and John was so successful in arousing interest among us for the Indian cause that a group of about twenty Indians came to New York later. At a big public reception a handsome young Indian who had been educated in an English school appeared in his native attire, buckskin, feathers and all. Around his neck he wore a necklace of turquoise and alligator teeth. Upon learning what the necklace was made of, a very vivacious society lady exclaimed: "How wonderful! I imagine these alligator teeth mean as much to you as pearls mean to us." Whereupon the young man, without a flicker of expression in his handsome face, replied, "On the contrary, any fool can take a pearl from an oyster."

GATTIN AND REMBRANDT

Now when Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer gives her home for semi-public meetings she is often there, and she is always as gracious and as sweet as if she were entertaining her very own friends.

Before the war Mrs. Havemeyer had about four Sunday afternoon musicales every winter and at these parties one heard the very best music. Gatti-Casazza, the famous impresario of the Metropolitan Opera, was frequently there, looking as preoccupied as usual.

The Havemeyer music room looks out on Central Park east and about 200 guests can be comfortably seated there. Guests were not only privileged to hear the very best music on these occasions, but were at liberty to visit the art gallery and other rooms where the noted Havemeyer collection of pictures is hung. Mr. Havemeyer, who was known, you will remember, as the Sugar King, was a collector of Rembrandts and in his collection are some of the most valuable of the works of this master. When Dr. Van Dyke created a sensation last year by saying "Yes, we have no Rembrandts," everybody began to wonder whether the Havemeyer Rembrandts were genuine. Mr. Havemeyer is said to have paid fabulous sums for them.

Mrs. Havemeyer is now giving her personal attention to the Woman's party campaign for equal rights.

WHAT A HAT CAN DO

Another well-known New York society woman who often gives the use of her house to organizations in which she is interested is Mrs. Willard Straight. And since Mrs. Straight is interested in a number of the most progressive movements, her home is frequently used for these meetings.

The last time I was there it was at a meeting of the League of Women Voters, which is possibly the most fashionable woman's organization in New York—that is, more of the who's whos belong. Ruth Morgan presided. If she weren't quite so portly, "cunning" would be the word to describe her. She does say some of the cleverest things, and she says them so naively!

No woman could be a bromide and wear a hat like the one Ruth is wearing. That hat has individuality and personality and snap and all kinds of things like that. It is not suggestive of jazz, because it is all black—slick, shiny black ribbon arranged with deft fingers, guided by an artistic mind, over a high-crowned, narrow-brimmed frame. The bows stick out in the most daring fashion, and Ruth's round and almost juvenile face looks out from under those bows in a way that makes you keep on looking at her. The dress she wears with that hat is black and there is a suggestion of white about the throat and wrists. Yes, Ruth is a shining example of how a woman who is—well, plump, can yet look smart and snappy.

CONVENTION—OR RED PLUSH

Despite the fact that Mrs. Straight is an individualist, it is amazing how the furnishings in her Fifth avenue home follow a sort of standardized Fifth avenue plan. The reception room downstairs is furnished in a soft neutral gray—the walls and rugs and furniture being in this interesting but soulless tone. Of course this is relieved to some extent by the lavish use of gold. And there is gleam of crystal chandeliers and the candelabra make a glittering contribution. And a handsome oriental screen, in the most entrancing colors, is the very soul of an otherwise soulless room.

That room may reflect the taste of some interior decorator, but to me it doesn't suggest Mrs. Straight in the least, for she is vivid and colorful.

I always feel that even if I had a Fifth avenue soul and a bank account to match, I'd never go in for the Fifth avenue style of furnishing. Really, between this and red plush, I think I'd choose red plush.

MAIDS IN SURF LURE OF BEACH

tides which, in the past, have caused loss of life. But there is no great danger in a rip-tide if a swimmer does not try to buck it, Mr. Kirby said.

"If you're caught in one," he explains, "and find yourself moving out to sea, go with it! Don't try to fight your way back to shore. Swim across it if you can. Riptides usually are not more than 100 yards wide and they run out only from 500 to 1000 yards. If you expend all your strength in bucking it as it takes you away, you stand a chance to drown. Keep on top of the water till help comes. The guards know when a rip-tide is running. They will get you out. We took fifteen persons out of a rip-tide here in one day in 1919. The old-timers knew how to escape it. The inexperienced did not. We had one whale of a fight that afternoon."

As the old guard talked there came the whine of the organ in the merry-go-round, the music from the dance, the roar of the roller coaster, the bark of the bally-hoo men as they voiced their praises of the Big Fun House, the Haunted Ship, the Flying Circus, the Crystal Tangle, the Dancing Girls and the Steer With the Bulldog Head. There came the noise of the tom-toms made by the South Sea Island cannibals in their savage dances; the shuffling of Noah's Ark, filled with mechanical animals; the blare of the spieler in front of Ole King Tut Who Was a Wise Ole Nut; the blood-curdling description of John Wilkes Booth (Himself) the murderer of Abraham Lincoln; the pleading of the vendors at the cane racks, at the "hot dog" and the hamburger booths, and the loudly-voiced invitation to bet on the trip of the Continental Limited.

Yes, the beach season is in full swing. The sands are calling.

GIRLS, GIRLS EVERYWH

Girls here, there, everywhere. Short ones, tall ones; blonde and brunette; flappers and "vamps"—girls of every kind and description! Picked by a beauty expert! No wonder he was girl shy—surrounded by such a crowd of pulchritude and pertness!

Such is the case in Harold Lloyd's latest comedy epic, "Girl Shy," still packing them in at Tally's Theater. Harold is seen as a bashful, retiring, stuttering, stammering country boy, who in real life is girl shy, but who in his dreams is a dashing Romeo.

And the girl is Jobyna Ralston, the cute 17-year-old little miss who was an instantaneous hit in "Why Worry?" Men lose their hearts to her; women envy her. She is so young, beautiful, charming, radiant, and wears lovely clothes in the way they should be worn.

Glands Awakened; Vig
Renewed

—is the testimony of many who say they have been made "young" again by a recent medical discovery. If you lack vigor and vital force, if you feel "old" too soon, read the remarkable letters reproduced here.

W. D. Luttrell.

PAST 68; DECLARES HE FEELS LIKE 30

A complete rejuvenation at the age of 68—a prompt awakening of glands and nerves and a renewal of youthful vigor — is the return W. D. Luttrell of Lincoln, Neb., says he got from a brief use of korex compound.

"Korex is just fine!" he writes. "Since I began using it I have gained 21 pounds and never felt better in my life. Without any gland operation, my youthful vigor has been restored, and I owe this rejuvenation and re-awakening of glands and nerves to korex compound. I am 68 years old but don't feel a day over 30. I feel just like a kid and haven't an ache or a pain. There is nothing too good to say for this wonderful remedy. It is the best thing I ever heard of to build up a man."

"Korex tablets make a man out of an old drag. I am 79 years old but I felt the effects of them in two days."—C. H. King, Tinsman, Ark. "Korex was a Godsend to me. I got better in four days after I began taking it."—W. L. Finley, Sunny South, Ala. "Korex has helped me wonderfully. After one day's treatment I noticed the difference."—H. C. Thompson, Oklahoma City, Okla.

WOULD you like to feel again the thrill of youthful vigor and ambition—a youthful eagerness for work or play—a youthful interest in all that makes living worth while? Would you like to drink from a "fountain of youth" and be made young again?

Mankind has ceased to hope that such a mythical fountain of waters will be found, BUT—

In exchange for that lost hope, great physicians give us the comforting assurance that medical science, in many instances, not only has halted senility but restored youth to the aged. AND—

Trustworthy citizens in all parts of the country are testifying by scores that they have been invigorated, re-energized, made "young" and happy by a simple, inexpensive home treatment—a method based on discoveries made by European physicians and used by them with marked success, according to their writings, in treating nerve weakness, lost vigor, low vitality and premature age.

This method—growing out of the private practice of famous Old World specialists—now is available to everyone. If the question of increased vigor or a renewal of the youthful spirit and energy interests you, read a few of the many remarkable reports made by persons who have used this treatment—the recently developed tablet preparation known as korex compound. Note that both young and old tell of virtually the same gratifying effects, produced in some instances in a surprisingly short time.

Equal To Gland Operation, He Believes

Thomas Finegan, 72, of Wichita, Kan., says: "Two months ago I found myself getting old too fast. I tried korex and soon my glands and nerves felt invigorated and my youthful vigor returned. I believe korex will do all that these gland operations are supposed to do."

"I can truthfully say I feel 25 to 30 years younger since taking korex," writes Chas. S. Watkins, Taft, Cal. "I am 66 but feel so young that I take part in the club dances now." W. A. Mullis, Charlotte, N. C., says: "Korex has made me feel like 30, instead of 78. My glands are active and I don't know I have a nerve in my body." Julio Aviles, 25, a soldier at Camp Meade, Md., says: "My glands are active and I have lost that worn-out no-courage feeling since taking korex."

According to European medical men, one ingredient of korex is noted for its direct action on important lower spinal nerve centers which, when awakened, improve the circulation and speedily bring on a delightful sense of renewed energy. Other ingredients of the compound are intended to supplement this process and build up the system generally. Many users declare korex has made them "new," physically and mentally, and that the improvement persists undiminished, even after months have passed.

MADE "YOUNG"
IN 10 DAYS,

The above are bona-fide, VOLUNTARY tributes to Korex Compound—NOT "paid-for testimonials." Don't you believe it is worth while to find out whether Korex will do for YOU what these writers, and many others, say it has done for them? If you feel "old," weak, lacking in vigor and vitality, come in today. Just ask for Korex.

KERMESS LIKE FAIRIES' PARTY

Moonlight Fete for Music Students Charms

Financial Success Assures Settlement Aid

Similar Benefit is Planned for September

Magic carpets in place of limousines seemed to be the vehicles for the guests of the Moonlight Kermess last Wednesday night at the Casa de Marguerita, the home of Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, so fairy-like were the surroundings in which they found themselves.

The novel affair was given for the benefit of the Music School Settlement and was a complete success financially as well as in charm and beauty. The entire fete was arranged by Emma Loeffler de Zaruba, who was assisted by a bevy of young women.

Upon their arrival the guests entered a different land. In the lobby of the home old Florentine carvings and rare works of sculpture gave the Italian touch. The patio was hung with flags of many lands. There were shields and garlands to simulate the courtyard of a feudal domain of the Middle Ages. Here a herald announced the visitors and also the events of interest. Without the patio were rose-draped balconies where senoritas in Spanish costumes and the more timid Italian maidens sang alternately the folk songs of their countries.

ARTISTS APPEAR

Victors of the allied arts brought trophies and gave of their talent in the program. Food of many countries was vended. Greek girls sold "kurabie" and Bohemians offered tempting bits of "buchty" and "rohlicky." "Lochoun" was a dainty food from Pharaoh's land made by Mohammed, now of Hollywood. Serving in the Egyptian cafe were Dorothy Phillips, Alice Calhoun and Mrs. L. Larralde.

In a court nearby was a mystic Persian soothsayer who was busy throughout the evening bringing the future to the present.

Jose Arias's Mexican orchestra played and serenaded throughout the evening. The herald, Carl Briganti, announced Master Lionel de Zaruba as the "Little Mozart," Mrs. Ella Duffield's Dutch chorus, Mirza Sorhab, the Persian poet, Anita Neusa, Chevallier du Brac, Signor Manuel Emanuel, Victor Schertzinger, Miss Schertzinger, Jewel Richford, Mortimer Slocum, Alexander Carr, Duci de Kerekjarto, Ernest Santee, John Sainpolis and Mrs. Guy Bush.

WARES BOUGHT

Beautiful candy baskets made and donated by Mohammed were all bought by Jacqueline Logan, who gave a generous check for the Music School.

So successful was the affair and so great the enjoyment that plans were initiated at once for a similar benefit with the same object early in September. At this time a Persian dinner will be served by Persians and cooked by them. There will be a circus under the supervision of Alice Calhoun as chief ring mistress. The complete plan will be announced at a later date.

Louise Studies Real Shopgirls as 'Stella Kelly'

Louise Fazenda leaves nothing undone in the preliminaries for each new characterization she contributes to the silversheet. One of her most delightful roles has just been completed at Universal—that of Stella Kelly, the basement shopgirl, in "Clinging Fingers," although the comedienne's biography includes a brief session of clerking when she was a youngster, she decided to refresh her mind and so began at upper Broadway and went its length, visiting department stores, noting carefully all the Stella Kellys as to what they wore, how they carry themselves, what they talk about, how they fix their hair and their attitude toward their customers.

Miss Fazenda's observations were luminous as well as witty, for on more than one occasions, she received some "wise cracks" from the girls who had no idea who she was. At noon on several days, she ate her lunch with shop girls, her eager ears absorbing their conversation and, while she looked very humble and unobtrusive, there was nothing that escaped her. Louise, who is a clever writer, has been asked to describe her jaunt in a feature article, so it would be a pity to give away her "thunder." Anyway, she noted the effect of motion pictures on the girls, for many were the Norma Talmadges and Gloria Swansons she studied in her attempt to imitate what she surveyed in passing.

The girls doubtless will be sorry when the picture is released, that they did not recognize the comediene, for the creation of Stella Kelly as completed by Louise is one that will meet their approval, for Stella is a "good kid," even though some of her edges are a bit rough. Louise actually loved the role and, it is said, accomplished some of her finest work in it.

MARY ASTOR AGAIN

Mary Astor, who recently scored in "The Fighting American," is now playing with Reginald Denny in Universal's filmization of Harry Leon Wilson's novel, "Oh, Doctor!" In the cast are a number of noted players, Otis Harlan, William V. Mong, Tom Ricketts, Mike Donlin, Clarence Geldert and Blanche Payson, who is famous as the Arizonian wife in the old Sennett comedies.

POSES FOR PORTRAIT

During the making of her picture, Betty Blythe posed for a painting by Anders Randolph to be retained by her but copied for a magazine cover.

First Chapter of Revolution Body Launched

The first California chapter of the Daughters of the Revolution, the Ramona Chapter, was formed on the 12th inst. at the luncheon given by Mrs. A. B. Choate, 44 Monte Vista, Pasadena.

When Mrs. Charles Latham, president-general, was in California recently she made plans for organizing chapters throughout the State. Mrs. Latham was unanimously elected to serve a second term at the convention at Atlantic City, N. J.

The officers elected for the coming year in the Ramona Chapter are Mrs. Mary Morrison, 88 Vega street, Alhambra, Regent; Mrs. A. P. Roughton, 146 East Avenue 54, Los Angeles, Vice-Regent; Mrs. A. B. Choate, 44 Monte Vista, Pasadena, Treasurer; Mrs. E. D. Tyler, 139 North Hill avenue, Pasadena, Historian; Miss Edna Miller, 924 West Thirty-fourth street, Los Angeles, Secretary.

All members of the Daughters of the Revolution residing in California are requested to communicate with the secretary.

This organization is distinct from the California Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, organized more than twenty years ago.

Coleman Jumps Out of Drama in Comedy in Leap

A jump from a highly dramatic role to one bubbling with effervescent comedy touches is a long step for an actor comparatively new to the silversheet. But this is exactly what Ronald Colman has done.

Colman made a deep impression in the minds of dramatic critics and film fans throughout the country with his work in "The White Sister." His lead opposite Lillian Gish required acting which would touch the strings of pathos and sympathy in the hearts of all who saw the picture. This part was followed by a similar role in "Tarnish," which Samuel Goldwyn recently finished and which will be released shortly.

And now Colman is playing the lead opposite Constance Talmadge at the United Studios under the direction of Sydney Franklin for Joseph Schenck. The story, as yet untitled, is from the pen of Hans Kraeli and is said to be one of the finest comedy vehicles Constance Talmadge has ever had.

Many an actor would fear such a long leap, but Colman is perfectly confident that he will make good. As he himself puts it, "If I'm an actor I will give a good performance; if I am a type I will fail. Of course, the result remains to be seen, but I am sure that I would rather do a diversified role than just keep on playing pathetic heroes and be smothered in a series of type parts." Others in the cast of the production include Albert Gran, Gene Herscholt and Sidney Bracy.

EGAN NIGHT CLASS IN SHORT PLAYS

The Egan School will present advanced pupils of the night class in drama in a program of one-act plays at the Egan Theater next Sunday afternoon at 2:30. The program has been arranged under the direction of Robert W. Major. Mr. Major has chosen a one-act drama, "Possessions," replete with pathos and thrills and absorbing fantasy, "Coices," in the spirit of France during the World War, and a delightful comedy "Suppressed Desires," a take-off on Freud.

HOW TIMES CHANGE

Robert Vignola, now directing "Mrs. Paramor" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer joined motion pictures as an actor more than twelve years ago. He played opposite Alice Hollister, then a star. Miss Hollister is now working in the cast of "Mrs. Paramor" playing the role of Mrs. Callender.

Biennial Staff Worker Makes Unique Record

A rare achievement is that of Mrs. Otto J. Zahn, chairman of printing for the local biennial board. She was on duty from November 1, 1923, until last week, and in the vast amount of material she provided the printer there was not a typographical error.

Mrs. Zahn is a member of the Los Angeles Library Board. She has been a member of the State Library Board for five years. As a member of the State Council of Defense, library publicity director and war historian for Los Angeles county she amassed a collection of value. The task, just completed, tok five years of work. She is a member of the Friday Morning Club.

ROBBING CRADLE

Jackie Coogan was a star when he was 6 years of age, Baby Peggy wore a stellar crown at 4 years, but the latest star in pictures is only 3 years of age. He is full grown and has a few scattering whiskers. His name is Peter the Great, the new dog star appearing in "The Silent Accuser" at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio.

"PILGRIMAGE PLAY" DRAWS

The Pilgrimage Play, Life of the Christ, which enters its third week Monday evening is winning new friends with every performance. Many in the enthusiastic audiences have visited this picturesque amphitheater over and over again, only to be more impressed each time with the wondrous beauty of this oldest and most beautiful story in the world.

It has been taught that the New Testament is the world's greatest drama and greatest piece of literature. The Pilgrimage Play drives home this truth in a most impressive and beautiful way.

From the moment of entering the panoramic Mosaic grounds of the Pilgrimage Play and leisurely wending one's way up the winding pathways to the entrance of the little canyon theater, a tender sentiment is awakened and an almost mystic significance that descends with the night on the hills as one contemplates seeing the greatest spiritual figure that has ever appeared upon earth, Jesus of Nazareth.

There is ever a hushed stillness throughout the audience, when limned against the big brown hills of the canyon, which serve as a background for the amphitheater, the white-robed figure of Henry Herbert appears, as the Christ.

Beyond description are many of the scenes, some more touching than others. Long remembered by all who see the play is the scene of the Last Supper. There also seems a tragic tenderness in the voice of Henry Herbert, that is akin to pathos when he sinks under the oppressive cross and says, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

This beautiful story of the Christ life is portrayed in the Pilgrimage Play with the deepest reverence. After witnessing the play and leaving the canyon, over which breathes a gentle stillness, there will linger in the memory the final words of the Christ, in this great human drama, which comes as a benediction of promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Club Woman's Son Adding to School Honors

The old complaint that club women neglected their homes and children has been refuted again recently by Mrs. William McCandless of Inglewood, who is active in several clubs.

Her son, John Bole McCandless, who graduated last month from the Inglewood Union High School, was president of his class, letter man in four sports, winner of the Frank D. Parent high-point cup, on the D. B. Vanderlip service honor roll and the State Scholarship Society honor roll. He played football, basketball and baseball, winning letters in these sports as well as in track.

Mrs. McCandless is taking as much interest and pride in the summer adventure for John as John is himself. He and his chum, Fred Huller, will start his week on an oil tanker to go to the Atlantic Coast, earning not only their passage, but enough to start to college in the fall.

The McCandless boys are second cousins to the sons of Mary Roberts Rinehart.

HOLLYWOOD TAILOR RESCUES MISS NIXON

The call of the greens and tees, resulting in the anual summer run on the sporting and clothing stores for golfing togs, almost caused a delay in the production of "The Cactus Kid," Hoot Gibson's current starring vehicle for Universal. Marian Nixon, playing the feminine lead in the picture, has several scenes in which she plays golf. But when the wardrobe department attempted to purchase her costume for the golfing sequence, every store visited was found to be completely sold out. A hurry call to a Hollywood tailor saved the day. In less than three hours, Miss Nixon was fitted for the knickers and they were delivered to her at the studio.

NOPE, NOT WALTER

Walter Hiers yesterday denied that he had been cast for the role of Hungry in Thomas H. Ince's "Christine of the Hungry Heart." He is to play a featured part in the picture, however.

HIERS BACK AGAIN

Walter Hiers has just returned from Coronado Beach, where he enjoyed a brief vacation before starting his featured role in Thomas H. Ince's "Christine of the Hungry Heart."

Two English women are spending their vacation on a wild and lonely island many miles out from England in the North Sea watching the antics of sea birds. The two women live in a hut and for weeks at a time see no human beings beside themselves.

According to Miss Mary Allen, commander of the woman's auxiliary, London police department, Detroit has the best policewomen's organization in the world. Miss Allen has just completed comprehensive study of police methods throughout the world.

CLUB BRIEFS

It is now definitely settled that the next yearly California convention of Federated Women's Clubs will be at Santa Cruz, May 19, 20 and 21, 1925, when an entire new board and officers will be elected. Those mentioned already for the presidency are Mrs. Charles H. Toll, now president of the Los Angeles district, and Dr. Mariana Bertola of San Francisco, who has held many offices in her own district and in the State.

Early this autumn after the club season has begun the California Federation of Women's Clubs will plant a cedar tree in Pershing Square in honor of Mrs. Thomas Gerald Winter, past president of the General Federation. This was voted by the State board at the last meeting and, so far as is known, is the first definite plan of tree planting for this purpose as outlined by the General Federation during the biennial convention when action was taken for every club in the federation, to the number of 5000, so to do.

Mrs. Henry Boesche, secretary for several years, first in one of the sections of Los Angeles Ebell, then in the Los Angeles district and finally in the State, has resigned the latter office, as she and her husband are building a home in Los Angeles. Mrs. John R. Dudley has been appointed to fill her unexpired term.

Summer time at the beach sees an increased interest in the work of the junior auxiliaries, that of the Santa Monica Bay Club having recently voted to continue its regular sessions during the vacation period, as the members have more leisure now than in the winter. Recently the juniors complimented the senior club with a bridge tea in the clubhouse. The officers who received included Alice Ranyard, Eloise Silverspar, Helen Haeni, Dorothy Smith and Betty King.

Miss Helen M. Wisler, corresponding secretary of the Women's Overseas' League in Los Angeles, was appointed by the national executive committee to act as recording secretary at the national convention of the league in San Francisco on the 13th and 14th insts. Los Angeles is doubly honored in the selection of officers, the president, Miss Louise Wells, being also from this city. The first meeting of the unit was conducted in her home in October, 1919, when six women who had served overseas were present, as follows: Louise Wells, Laura McVay, Helen Alfred, Reba Willis, Elizabeth Hill and Helen Wiser. The membership of this branch, now affiliated with the national organization, is 111.

Mrs. A. G. Reily, president of the Twentieth Century Club, will be the hostess for the Los Angeles branch of American Pen Women in the gardens of her home, 1760 Colorado Boulevard, Eagle Rock, on the 22nd inst., at 2 p.m. Mrs. Abbie Smith is in charge of program and arrangements. She asks those who plan to go to write to her at 5126 Ellenwood Drive, Eagle Rock, or telephone Garvanza 7475.

Planning for the coming year's activities of the California Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. John C. Urquhart, president, says that the subjects and work she purposes to stress include: Conservation of the redwoods, the California home, the homes of foreign-born in California, to teach that the home is the center but not the circumference of the universe, correct use of leisure time, particularly for the young women; table conversation in the home, child welfare from the legislative standpoint, home economics, the budget of home and club, co-operation with schools, return the Bible back to the public schools and teach how to make moral budgets as well as material ones. "This is to be pre-eminently a hearthstone year," she said.

Mrs. James Gysin of West Twenty-first street entertained last Thursday the fifty members of the bureau of information of the last biennial of the General Federation. The affair was in honor of Mrs. Charles Hutchinson. Those who served with presented her with a General Federation pin in which was inlaid a diamond. Mrs. Gysin was treasurer of the bureau.

Mrs. Henry T. Wright's committee on co-operation with ex-service men and women for the Federation of Women's Clubs of California entertained the visiting members of the Women's Overseas' Service League at luncheon last Thursday at the Santa Monica Bay Woman's Club, assisted by the Women's Auxiliary of the American Legion. Mrs. James Westervelt, vice-chairman for the district, presided and introduced Miss Louise Wells, president of the league, who told of the organization she represents working to counteract radicalism and discontent and to do all in its power to promote Americanism. Others who took part in the informal program included Miss Anita L. Phipps, director of women's relations to the United States Army, and Mrs. Charles W. Decker, president of the California Women's auxiliaries of the American Legion.

DID GRAVITY END EARTH'S SPREE?

Muriel Frances Dana Dubious How Humans Reeled on Before Law Passed

During a rest between scenes for "The Husbands of Edith" at Universal, Muriel Frances Dana's governess was explaining to her small charge the meaning of the word "gravity," ending her definition, "The law of gravity keeps us on this earth."

"But how," 6-year-old Muriel was still dubious, "did we stick on before they passed the law?"

GIE EXHIBIT OPENS AT MUSEUM

paintings from the
of the twenty-third exhibition of paint-by the Carnegie In-Pittsburg, form the imopening at Expo-
Museum on the 23rd
inst. The group includes paintings from France, England, Belgium, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Sweden, Italy and Spain. Several prize-winning pictures are to be seen including Augustus John's portrait of Mme. Suggia, the portrait of M. Paguereau by Othon Friesz and "After the Bath," by Giovanni Romagnoli.

Among the Frenchmen we find such important names as Albert Besnard, Andre Derain, Othon Friesz, Albert Marquet, Henri Le Sidaner, and Henri Martin. From England come paintings by Arnesby Brown, Augustus John, Sir John Lavery, Ambrose McEvoy, Harold Knight and other distinguished painters. The Spanish section includes the names of Valetin and Ramon de Zubiarre.

The exhibit should prove one of the most important ever brought to Los Angeles, and all who are interested in what the rest of the world is doing in art should not fail to pay as many studious visits as possible to the Museum of History, Science and Art.

BLAKELOCK, MURPHY AT CANNELL-CHAFFIN

Several paintings recently acquired in the east are receiving their initial Los Angeles showing at the Cannell & Chaffin galleries. Among them are some very notable examples of great painters. The entire exhibition consists of eastern and western painters' works and the works of a few European painters. It is principally with the eastern and European canvases these paragraphs will concern themselves as they are important and new to our eyes.

"The Storm," by Eugene Isabey, a French painter of the nineteenth century, and son of the great miniaturist, is intensely dramatic, a trifle false, perhaps—the water is not very convincing—but none the less a powerful work. The painter felt the sinister force of the storm throwing the craft on the shore, and his treatment of the heavy clouds shutting out the sun is unusually strong.

"A Summer Evening," by A. H. Wyant, is rich with the glow of late twilight. A very beautiful work. There are two Blakelocks, "Autumnal Days," in his earlier manner, warm in color, amazingly detailed, the work of a fine craftsman, and "Silvery Pool," done in rich, dark color, a long landscape with trees silhouetted against an evening sky. The pool in the foreground supplies a silver note in the dusk-clothed earth.

Two examples of the work of Bruce Crane are also shown, "Hillside Clearing," is made of very slender material, just a clearing in the forest, but Crane carried a wealth of feeling in his soul to clothe just such well nigh barren subjects. The other, "Gray December" hangs in the window, which means it is almost impossible to see it adequately.

Willard Metcalf is represented by a homey New England scene, "Waning Autumn." Yellow leaves, old houses in an old street all touched by the magic light of Indian summer. Other new things of great interest are "Le Pecheur," a lake scene with trees and a fisherman in the manner of Corot, by Paul Trouillebert; "Sunrise," by D. W. Tryon and "The Old Mill," by L. Mazzanovich, and William Ritschel's "Golden Hour."

Among the works by western painters, Maynard Dixon's "Toward Kaibitch," is very brilliant in color, a still life by T. Bowen Robinson is decorative and Orrin White's "Big Tejunga" is very lovely in color. There are many other interesting things but most of them have been touched on in this column before.

Small Paintings at Biltmore

An exhibition of pictures and sketches by members of the "Painters of the West" and other artists who are invited by the organization will go on the walls of the Biltmore salon tomorrow. No canvases are to exceed 12x14 inches in dimension. Judging by the Armin Hanson group, which I saw, the show should prove of great interest. The maximum price is to be quite small. The pictures will be arranged in groups of four small ones surrounding one larger one, five in all from each painter.

Purchase for Harrison Gallery

One of the paintings sent with the Colorado Springs quota for the Exhibition of Western Painters was "Reflections," by Robert Reid, N. A. Early in the exhibition Mr. and Mrs. Harrison decided to purchase this beautiful canvas. It will later be an important addition to the Harrison Gallery. Mr. Reid's name is one of the most widely known in American art. He began as a young man to win appreciation with his decorations at the Chicago Fair. His murals are in the Congressional Library, Appellate Courthouse, New York and Boston State House. He also assisted in the decoration of the United States Pavilion at the Paris Exposition in 1900. Mr. Reid is a member of the leading art societies and was one of the famous "Ten American Painters." He is represented in the Metropolitan Museum; Corcoran Gallery, Washington, and many other museums throughout the country. "Reflections" is a typical and fine example, as the decorative figure has long been a favorite theme of Mr. Reid's and the charm of these pictures is familiar to the visitor of the eastern annual exhibitions, where Mr. Reid frequently shows and very frequently captures important prizes and awards.

A Striking Portrait

The recent portrait of Charles M. Russell painted by Arthur M. Hazard is on exhibition at the Biltmore. It is a triumphant piece of portraiture. Charley Russell, painter and modeler of western life and western animals is here just as we see him. Hazard has caught the characteristics which make of Russell's physiognomy something unknown outside of the West. The far-seeing eyes under heavy brows, the determined set of the heavily modeled mouth, even the falling lock of hair over the right temple is just right. The sharply decided contrast of the brightly lighted cheek and jaw against the darker background suits the masculine quality of the sitter.

Aztec Night's Entertainment

Francisco Cornejo, whose work in introducing ancient Aztec design in California is by this time well known, is presenting a program on this Tuesday evening at the studio of St. Ritus Benda, consisting of motion pictures of the ancient ruins of Mexico, Mexican folk songs and dances, Aztec sketches by Cornejo and an exhibit of Aztec arts and crafts, sculpture, paintings and illustrative photographs. Cornejo believes that in ancient Aztec art lies the inspiration for a modern American art native to the soil and climate of the continent, and he has cherished faithfully this dream of a new art for many years. Unquestionably Aztec art is today playing a bigger part in textiles and decoration due to his efforts.

Western Museum Directors

During the last week the Western Painters' Exhibition, the fourth annual meeting of the Western Association of Art Museum Directors, was held at the Los Angeles Museum. The following officers were elected: president, William Alanson Bryan. The advisability of having for vice-president someone familiar with eastern territory was seen and Mr. Kurtzworth, director of the Kansas City Art Museum, was elected for that office. Samuel J. Hume was re-elected to the office of secretary and treasurer. It was decided advisable to have a permanent secretary and Miss H. H. Brewster, who has so ably filled that office since the organization of the association, was elected.

University Lectures

Herbert Reynolds Kniffin, director of art at the Ethical Culture School in New York City, who is lecturing at the summer session of the State University this summer, began another division of his lectures on Monday, the 14th inst.

The subject of the course is "Art Appreciation and Art History," and already the lectures have covered the classical stage, discussing Greek and Roman sculpture and the architectural developments in each period. These lectures are illustrated with a series of excellent slides which Mr. Kniffin brought from New York for the purpose.

Beginning with the lecture on Monday, the 14th inst., at 11 o'clock, Mr. Kniffin will discuss the whole movement which is known as the Renaissance, discussing the artists who brought new ideas and a different technique to the art of painting, and examining the great paintings which have been accepted as masterpieces of the Renaissance.

These lectures on art come every day except Saturday and are given in the lecture room of the Fine Arts Building on the campus of the Southern Branch. Mr. Kniffin makes each lecture extremely entertaining, for he has spent so much time abroad among the great galleries of the continent that he is able to embellish the mere facts with anecdotes and details lacking in lectures by those less well qualified.

The summer session has the largest enrollment in its art classes this summer that it has ever recorded. According to university officials this growth of interest in art subjects is phenomenal and those in charge of the work are gratified that such a condition should prevail. Southern California offers many opportunities for those who are studying in the arts and the university is apparently feeling the impetus of the great revival of interest in all the arts, which is noticeable in all lines.

WARM SPOT FOR AMERICA

"Times" Art Critic Finds Real Affection for Us Among the Englishmen

BY ANTONY ANDERSON
[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE]

LONDON, July 5.—Though, when in Europe, the American may feel like a "chiel takin' notes," he may bolster up his courage and stiffen his impertinence by recalling the well-known fact that out of the mouths of babes wisdom has sometimes proceeded. So here goes.

Europe is old and America young—a mere flapper among nations—but give me the flapper every time! I make this choice with enthusiasm, not because I don't know some of the annoying ways of the flapper, the crass foolishness of the adolescent, the cockiness and the bravado, but because I have already had time and opportunity to compare them with the stodginess, the stupidity and the self-satisfied arrogance of the octogenarian.

But England, though so old and so experienced, is still very beautiful, perhaps more beautiful than she has ever been. Let the flapper put that into her cigarette and smoke it. England's make-up, indeed, is a thing to marvel at, it is so perfect in every detail. She has had years of practice, and she ranks among Europe's loveliest daughters. Not showy at all, you know, simply neat and trim and exquisite, sedately pacing her garden, which is studded with daisies and pied with hawthorn. "England, my England!" cried the poet in ecstasy, and we could almost wish that we had the right to say the same.

Yet perhaps the right is really ours, too. Though we have not lived in England in the body, we have never been far away from her in the spirit. If we have not been nurtured at her breast as the English have, we have had the same teachers, the same poets, painters, novelists and essayists. Moreover, we have sent our own native teachers over to her in ever-increasing numbers, and they have been received with gladness. We cannot call the English foreigners.

The English themselves, especially those of the educated classes, regard us as the blood-brothers the war has really made us.

In spite of the many boroughs that make up the vast London of today, a very different place from the London of Shakespeare and before, the London of one square mile that is now called the City, the world's metropolis remains remarkably homogeneous in contour and color. The contour may be an accident, though doubtless art commissions of past and present generations had something to do with it, but the color (or lack of it) is due to the combined efforts of fog and smoke. The stately old buildings look ghastly with age, splendidly erect and imposing in spite of a long life of tragic vicissitudes. I mentioned, though in parenthesis, the lack of color. There is really no such lack, for we find a subtle play of tones, faint and elusive suggestions of bright hues, through all the innumerable miles of gray brick and stone. Yes, London is austerely beautiful—one might say beautiful in the English way, which, as we know, is not the American way.

My hotel is in Mayfair, almost directly opposite the Marble Arch, one of the main entrances to Hyde Park. Mayfair doesn't look ultra-fashionable today, whatever it may have been in the time of Thackeray. Perhaps the war has changed it, perhaps the inevitable decay of greatness has set in. But the streets are clean and attractive, and the houses, stuck together like bandboxes in a row, have flower-boxes outside their front windows, and brass knockers shining in the sun, and front doors that look like lacquers in various colors, and iron palings that are as ornamental as they are doubtless useful.

But many of the houses are now hostelries for humble American and provincial travelers. They make mighty inconvenient and ugly hotels, in spite of their fine fronts. My hotel is composed of three of these mansions. My room, the only one I could get, since this is the "season" and the British Empire Exhibition is in full blast, is on the fourth floor, and there is no lift (up-to-date Englishmen call the lift an elevator now, by the way.) Starting from the central entrance of the hotel, I sometimes find myself wandering among the stairways and corridors of a section diametrically opposite to my own.

Very little London art has come my way as yet, but I intend to visit some of the galleries tomorrow. However, I did see, yesterday, a maimed soldier making landscapes and still-life efforts in pastel on one of the sidewalks in Charing Cross. The work was fairly creditable, though if you paid your penny you couldn't carry the picture away, for his art was almost as ephemeral as music—which, thank you, was perfectly all right and as things should be.

The dining-room of my hotel (I pay for room and breakfast, in the true London way) is adorned with eight or ten very fine landscapes in water colors. Really admirable pieces of painting. I asked my landlady if they were hers, and she said, no, they belonged to one of her permanent lodgers, who had inherited them from a granduncle. This painter, Ingle Lee, has been dead many years, but I here and now take off my hat to him. He was a true artist.

The dressy bathing suit seems to be gaining in favor—there is so much more opportunity to be "individual." Of course, if one goes in for swimming, nothing is so comfy as the one-piece knitted suit.

"Woman's Life" Promises to be Real Sensation

There is said to be no way that the influence of the motion picture is greater than in presenting attractive interiors. Picture fans from all over the country are influenced in the arrangement and decoration of their homes and apartments by the sets that they see in motion pictures. The arrangement of their living rooms, bedrooms and dressing rooms is quite often altered after viewing a film.

In M. C. Levee's production for First National "In Every Woman's Life," now being made at the United Studios, under the direction of Irving Cummings, the boudoir of Virginia Valli playing the featured part of Sara, will be the last word in luxury. The bath adjoining will present something new in arrangement. Mirrors are set in the walls so that it is impossible to turn without looking at yourself. The tub is sunken and approached by steps. One end of the tub is deep enough to stand upright with the head just above the water and the other end arranged so that it is possible to lie down.

One of the dinners that will be given in a luxurious dining-room will be on horseback. The guests will be attired in evening clothes and will be served while seated in the saddle.

There will be a living-room of a Long Island home that will be built with windows the entire height of the room which, in summer, can be opened making it entirely out of doors.

The gowns designed by Clare West for Virginia Valli will be a forecast of the fashions for the coming spring and summer and the last word in daring evening gowns.

For this elaborate production Mr. Levee has engaged an all-star cast including, in addition to Miss Valli who was loaned through the courtesy of Universal, Marc MacDermott, Stuart Holmes, Lloyd Hughes, George Fawcett, and Ralph and Vera Lewis.

MORE OR LESS TRUE

A cynic is a man who thinks if a fellow is married his tongue will never get overworked as his ears.

We never yet have seen a woman—or a man—who didn't detest flattery—if it was being handed some one else.

An optimist is a married man who thinks with sex equality he no longer will be referred to as the lesser half.

We have met a lot of married men who complain of the undeserved blame they get, but have yet to meet one who complains of the undeserved praise showered on him.

Next to giving orders to the sun or moon to stand still the best way to waste time is to give your wife orders to do anything she doesn't want to do.

By this time a lot of the June bridegrooms have discovered they'll run the house the way the windshield runs the car.

No matter how poor a girl's memory is she never starts downtown without her compact.

We guess if experience had much success as a teacher, second marriages would be as rare as expert mechanics in garages.

If a woman wants a man to show a lot of patience and good nature when teaching her the fine points of baseball, golf, swimming and driving a car she makes him do it before they are married.—[Sam Hill in Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Sun's Enormous Heat

It would take more than two billion earths placed side by side to form a continuous spherical shell around our sun at distance equal to the earth's distance, and thus to receive the total output of solar heat. Therefore, less than one two-billionth part of that output falls upon the earth. The earth's share of solar energy, expressed in horsepower or other familiar units is too great to set down in figures. If you should happen to own 250 acres of land in one of the tropical deserts of the earth you will be interested to know that your quota of the solar energy, near the middle of a summer day, is falling upon your tract of land at the rate of about one-million horsepower—more than enough heat and power to supply all the needs of this great city—and this is but two-thirds of the sun's good intentions toward you, for some 40 per cent of the energy is intercepted by the atmosphere overlying your farm, and returned forthwith to outer space.

BALLET MASTER IS HONORED

Earl Wallace, distinguished ballet master, who three years ago deserted the East at the height of a brilliant career to establish a school of ballet and allied arts in Los Angeles, has had marked success, as is evidenced by the growth of his school. His success has been recognized by the dancing fraternity, for he has been elected consecutive terms as president of the Southern California Teachers of Dancing and vice-president of the American National Association of Masters of Dancing.

Leonore Wallace, for the past three years normal teacher of step dancing for the American National Association, is director of that department at the Earle Wallace studios and her teaching of buck, wing, clog and soft-shoe dancing has enhanced the prestige of the school materially.

In Carter Weaver, director of drama and pantomimic expression, Mr. Wallace feels he has a teacher of the highest quality. Mr. Weaver recently came from New York, where he assumed prominent character roles.

The East End Is the Poor End

The "east end" of a town is generally the poor end, while the west end is generally the aristocratic section. There are few exceptions to this rule, if any, and the most natural explanation is, that in countries of the Atlantic seaboard the prevalent wind is from the west and southwest, and that, therefore, the richer classes naturally select their residences as far to windward as possible, in order to avoid the smoke and grime of the city proper.

English and European towns, moreover, for the most part, grew up centuries ago on the banks of rivers, and since the westerly bank of the river is generally the sunniest, another explanation is supplied.

No theories of this kind, however, will be found wholly sufficient, for in almost every land, and through long ages, the same phenomenon has been noticed.

Probably the most satisfactory explanation is that the time of leisure and recreation coming towards the close of the day, people of all time have naturally turned their steps to the brightness of the westerly sky. And so in course of time the west end became the quarter of leisure and wealth.—[Exchange.

I Spent

Fortunes to win beauty

By Edna Wallace Hopper

My mother was rich and ambitious. From my earliest years she urged me to enhance my beauty. She gave me her methods and formulas. Then she took me in a world-search for the newer beauty helps.

Most people know the results. I became a famous beauty, and for many years I remained the rage. And now, after 40 years in the limelight, I still play a beauty's part. I still look a girl of 19.

Since then I have made many trips to France. I have consulted noted experts and famous beauties everywhere. I have spent fortunes to find all the latest discoveries. So I believe that I now have the greatest beauty helps in existence. And certainly my results seem to prove that.

I have been induced to place these helps at every woman's call. Druggists and toilet counters everywhere supply them—the very helps I use. Thus every woman may obtain for a trifle the helps that cost me fortunes.

One is a liquid cleanser, which I call my Facial Youth. Lucie Lantelme, the famous Parisian beauty, first told me what it did. Now leading beauty experts the world over are advising this great formula.

It contains no animal, no vegetable fat. It cannot assimilate in any way with the skin. So it cleans to the depths, then departs. All the grime, dead skin and clogging matter come out with it. A woman never knows what a clean skin means until she tries this Facial Youth.

Edna Wallace Hopper's Facial Youth sells everywhere for 75 cents. Beauty experts charge up to $5 for the same effects.

I shall be glad to send you a small bottle free if you mail this coupon. It will bring you new conceptions of what a clean skin means. My Beauty Book comes with it. Cut out the coupon now.

How to Look and Feel Bright in Hot Weather

When depressed by the heat and you want to freshen up for the afternoon or evening, just bathe the face in a lotion made by dissolving an ounce of pure powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel. You will find this more refreshing than an hour's rest.

As a wrinkle-remover the saxolite lotion is remarkably successful. Its action is almost magical. The deepest furrows, as well as the finest lines—whether due to age, illness, weather or worry—are immediately affected. Enlarged pores are reduced, flabby skin is "drawn in," facial contour is improved wonderfully. The simple ingredients of course can be had at any drugstore.—[Advertisement.

SOVIET TURMOIL BRINGS NEW ART

Kalmykoff Startles by Use of Exotic Forms

Artistic Meteors in Russia Are Short-lived

Advent of More of Group is Called Desirable

BY M. PAUL

Russian art has gloried in isolation during the past few years. The age of spiritual and religious ferment has given birth to a new school of idol breakers.

The occasional introduction of a foreign element into local art showings is good insurance against ennui. Ivan Kalmykoff, of the more conservative of the Russian groups, now at the Stendahl galleries, is not the product of post-war radicalism. He could not even, by stretch of the imagination, be called representative of the nationalistic in Russian art, but after a succession of dulling similarities he is a delightful variation.

Kalmykoff's chief claim to departure from the rules laid down by the ancient masters does not lie in the modernity of his underlying theories. Rather does he startle by the use of exotic forms of architecture and landscape and by the application of bizarre Slavic colors.

We can surrender ourselves to the charm of Chinese art without ruffling our artistic sensibilities; we do not ask them to forsake their peaceful fetishism of gnome-like gods and dragons to paint madonnas. In exactly this way the Russian has an immeasurable advantage. He may hover perilously betwixt the decorative and the realistic; he may at moments lack that bugbear of the academicians—solidity. But he can never be accused of lack of truth as long as he clings to relativities of volume and color.

Last season saw a Russian deluge of New York. Following the Chauve Souris came the Russian Ballet, the Russian painters, the Moscow Art Company. Within one month New York was completely Russianized in mode. But barbaric colors are foreign to the inherent nature of New York, where a skyscraper architecture and drabness of costume have become almost uniform.

LANDSCAPE SOMBER

The Russian landscape is somber. But in the past, before the vast stretches became dotted with cities where sprang up factories to replace the crafts, the peasants wore the brilliant hand-embroidered costumes from which the present art of Russia has taken its roots. Homes contained hand-carved chairs and tables, which have influenced their sculpture; walls painstakingly frescoed in naive water colors obviated the need for wallpapers.

These are the factors which have created this original nationalistic style. The invasion of industrialism has left to the studios and theaters the revival during the last decade of a fiery nationalism in all the arts. Universal craftmanship has completely disappeared.

There is no need for the grafting of extraneous influences, no transplanting of metaphysical theories. The Russian school has not delved into negro, Egyptian or Greek art to infuse variety.

Modern Russian painting, frequently accused of disorderliness of composition, demands either a childlike susceptibility to bright contrasts of pure color, or a sophisticated taste for austerity of form, in combination with unique arrangement of paint. The very brilliancy of forms has enforced their positive definition.

Rapid transition and post-war existence in Europe are synonymous. An artistic meteor of today is lost in the glare of his followers by tomorrow. Sometimes a reputation is unmade piecemeal and sometimes quietly enters into oblivion. Bakst, with his wild ebullience of color, known to the western world as one of the great decorative artists, Sergei Soudeikine of later fame, who enchanted New York with his fantastically plastic ballet decors, Rorich, Larionov, Gontscharova, each with his peculiar interpretation, whimsical, exotic, grotesque, what you will, and each with his deserved renown, are no longer fashionable among the ultras of Moscow.

Schools of art have been equally fleeting. Neo-impressionism is not exhausted but badly impoverished. Sentiment in the completed picture is virtually dead. Austerity of form is the present cry. Germany clings to its morbid Expressionismus and Impressionismus, Russia to nothing at all, while France at the same stroke creates theories and art.

Cubism never attained the foothold in Russia that it gained in France. To the Slavic taste no theory that denies the divinity of color deserves consideration.

The western coast and Russia are geographically sufficiently separated to arouse few speculations concerning cross-lines of influences. Both know artistic isolation. But the coast country has the natural stimulus of a painted sky, variably patterned mountains, and a choice of tropical and evergreen trees. There is no groundwork of a peasant art on which to build the native art, but there is an arousing decorative strain in the costuming. And the architecture is delightfully informal as to origin and period. Taken all in all, Gaugin had less encouragement at Tahiti.

There must certainly have been some few native elements of beauty that the older school has overlooked where the moderns expect to gain their footing. When the prewar generation accuses modernism in art of an insatiable appetite for novelty it has undoubtedly justifications.

Possibly the iconoclasts are too belligerent in dubbing a spade a spade. No generation influenced by the later war could be beguiled by pretty ideals. It is a waste of time to question the sincerity of either side. If youth is possessed of jaded sensibilities, it is also in possession of a superlative honesty with which to express its likes and dislikes.

Frankly, the artistic ego would receive a terrible jolt if absolute conformity to rule could be exacted. A museum composed solely of the old masters and the Woodstock School of Art would sooner or later pall.

Taken, as a whole, the coming of a few more of the Russian group would be enlivening.

And the roads to beauty still remain, as expressed by one of the French cubists, as many as the islands in an archipelago in the South Seas.

KEATON FAMOUS AT SEVEN

Faded Autograph Album Signed by Old-time Stars of Stage Predicts Future for "Buster"

Buster Keaton was as famous and funny twenty-two years ago when a boy of 7 as he is today. A weather-stained and travel-worn autograph album which is one of Buster's most cherished possessions, proves it. Keaton, born in 1895, went on the stage in 1901 and from then on his travels are recorded in his diary-autograph album. Many famous stars of the vaudeville and legitimate stage, as well as sport celebrities wrote verses and their best wishes in the album.

There appear the signatures of John L. Sullivan, Jim Corbett, Will Cressy, Fred Niblo, the silver-tongued J. K. Emmett, Jack Norworth, Flo Irwin, Elsie Janis, Tom Sharkey, Lou Dockstader, McIntyre & Heath, Tony Pastor, Louise Dresser, Charles K. Harris, Robert Hilliard, George Monroe, Cheridah Simpson and hundreds more, some of them long since dead and others who have risen to still greater fame.

Lou Dockstader made one of the first entries and names the place of Buster's theatrical debut in this rhyme:

"Buster you're a dandy; Buster you're a brick;
Buster you can make all juveniles look sick;
Some day you'll be a great one, the captain of the crew,
But don't forget old Wilmington, the place of your debut."

Fred Niblo first met little Buster Keaton on Christmas Day, 1904. Niblo was then with the vaudeville team of Newell and Niblo. The present head of the directors' association wrote:

"Some day, Buster, you will be one of our greatest comedians. I predict a bright future for you."

ELSIE JANIS WRITES

Another 1904 entry is one by Elsie Janis which reads:

"There's a dear little man we know quite well,
Who around our hearts has cast a spell—
If he made a mistake you never could tell,
For he's mimic, comedian and acrobat as well."

Walt Terry of the team of Terry & Elinor, throws some light on the courtship of Buster's father and mother in the following 1903 jingle:

"I know little Buster Keaton; I knew his ma and pa;
I met them in a little town not far from Omaha;
They'd stand in the wings and make goo-goo eyes
With what courage they could muster
And the first result of those goo-goo eyes was a little boy called Buster."

Jack Norworth wrote:

"He tickles all the people
Better than a feather duster,
You know the little kid I mean—
Joe and Myra's little Buster."

In a later entry Jack refers to a spanking which Buster and his younger brother, then known as "Jingles," got from Dad "Joe" Keaton:

"When papa spanks Buster
He uses pine shingles,
But the palm of his hand
Is sufficient for 'Jingles.'"

During the year 1903 "Bill Bailey" was the most popular song of the day. The team of Girard and Gardner wrote the following in Buster's album on February 27, 1903, while Buster was playing in Detroit:

"The audience was cold
And we worked twice daily—
Did all we knew, including 'Bill Bailey;'
But it was easy for Buster
And the house laughed gaily
At the smart little man
With the strut of Dan Daly."

John L. Sullivan wrote in gigantic letters:

"Little Buster, may you be a big Buster some day. May 21, 1903."

"Gentleman Jim" Corbett was more to the point:

"Buster, you're a knockout."

Tom Sharkey philosophizes on life:

"To my little friend Buster from from his old friend, Tom Sharkey. And, after all, life is but one sweet dream. Let us be blithe and gay, for tomorrow is another day. Yours truly, Thomas J. Good Boy!"

OLD-TIME FAVORITES

And so it goes in Buster's precious book. The list of autographs in the frayed old album is a long one and includes the cream of the vaudevillians of other days. What recollections these names of the two-a-day celebrities of twenty years ago must bring back to those with long memories:

Cream of Stars Support Gloria in 'Manhandled'

An exceptionally fine cast is seen in suport of Gloria Swanson, whose latest cinematic triumph, "Manhandled," opened its second big week at the Miller's Theater ysterday. "Manhandled" was directed by Allen Dwan, who made "Zaza" and "Robin Hood."

Tom Moore, last seen in "Big Brother," has the leading role opposite the star. Moore has the part of the automobile mechanic who drives a taxi at night. Then there is Lilyan Tashman, former Follies beauty, who plays the shop girl chum of Gloria. Paul MacAllister, who appeared in "You Can't Fool Your Wife," has a prominent part as has Ian Keith, widely known in New York on the legitimate stage. Others in the cast inlude Frank Allworth, Carrie Scott and Arthur Houseman.

Then there is a big added attraction—Brooks Johns and Ann Pennington before the camera. There's a feature in itself. And it's just a flash of the popular entertainers. They have regular parts in the picture in a studio party sequence.

Those who have seen "Manhandled" declare that it is the best Swanson picture ever brought to the screen. It shows a new Glora, new because she not only wears beautiful clothes, but is seen as a poor East Side shopgirl who cannot decide which to choose, her mechanic sweetheart or the wealthy finale hoppers, who are showering her with their favors.

LLOYD WHITLOCK HAS CHANCE IN NEW ROLE

SCREEN-HERO ATHLETE PUTS UP FIGHT FOR MATE IN "UNMARRIED WIVES"

Lloyd Whitlock, who has shown his versatility on the screen by portraying hero roles, heavies and officers of the law with equal success, now is enacting the part of a rich New York broker in his leading role of the James Hogan production, "Unmarried Wives."

Whitlock is very enthusiastic over the possibilities of his present characterization as he says it combines the varied emotions of love, anger, greed, ambition and humility in such a way that a wide range of acting is necessary. On top of this, he is given a chance to display those fearless qualities—all true screen heroes must be fearless—in a rough-and-tumble fight with a number of ruffians who have abducted his beautiful young wife.

Whitlock, who is of athletic build and measures over six feet and one, keeps himself in the best physical trim by playing several sets of tennis every morning before breakfast.

"LOVE RULES WORLD"

Dorothy Devore Says Wife Can be Happy With Mate Anywhere

The often-mooted question of whether a woman can be happy with the man she loves when transplanted to an environment entirely new to her is answered in the affirmative in "The Prairie Wife," which Hugo Ballin is directing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Dorothy Devore, who plays the title role of the picture, says she belives the conclusion drawn by this powerful story is fundamentally true.

"Love, in spite of the many statements of cynics to the contrary, still remains the greatest force in the world," says Miss Devore," and will overcome all obstacles."

In "The Prairie Wife," Miss Devore portrays a refined young woman, used to all the luxuries of life, who finds happiness and contentment with her lover husband on the western plains of Canada far from civilization. She is finding in this role opportunities for some extremely dramatic acting in which, according to Hugo Ballin, she is proving just as capable as in the lighter comedy roles which have brought her so conspicuously before the screen public.

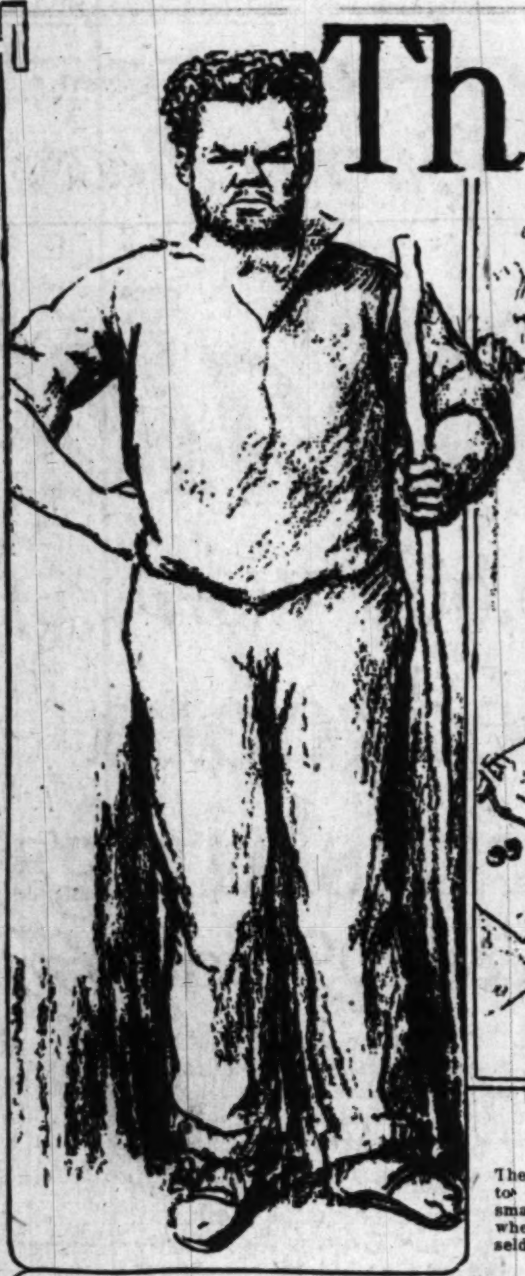
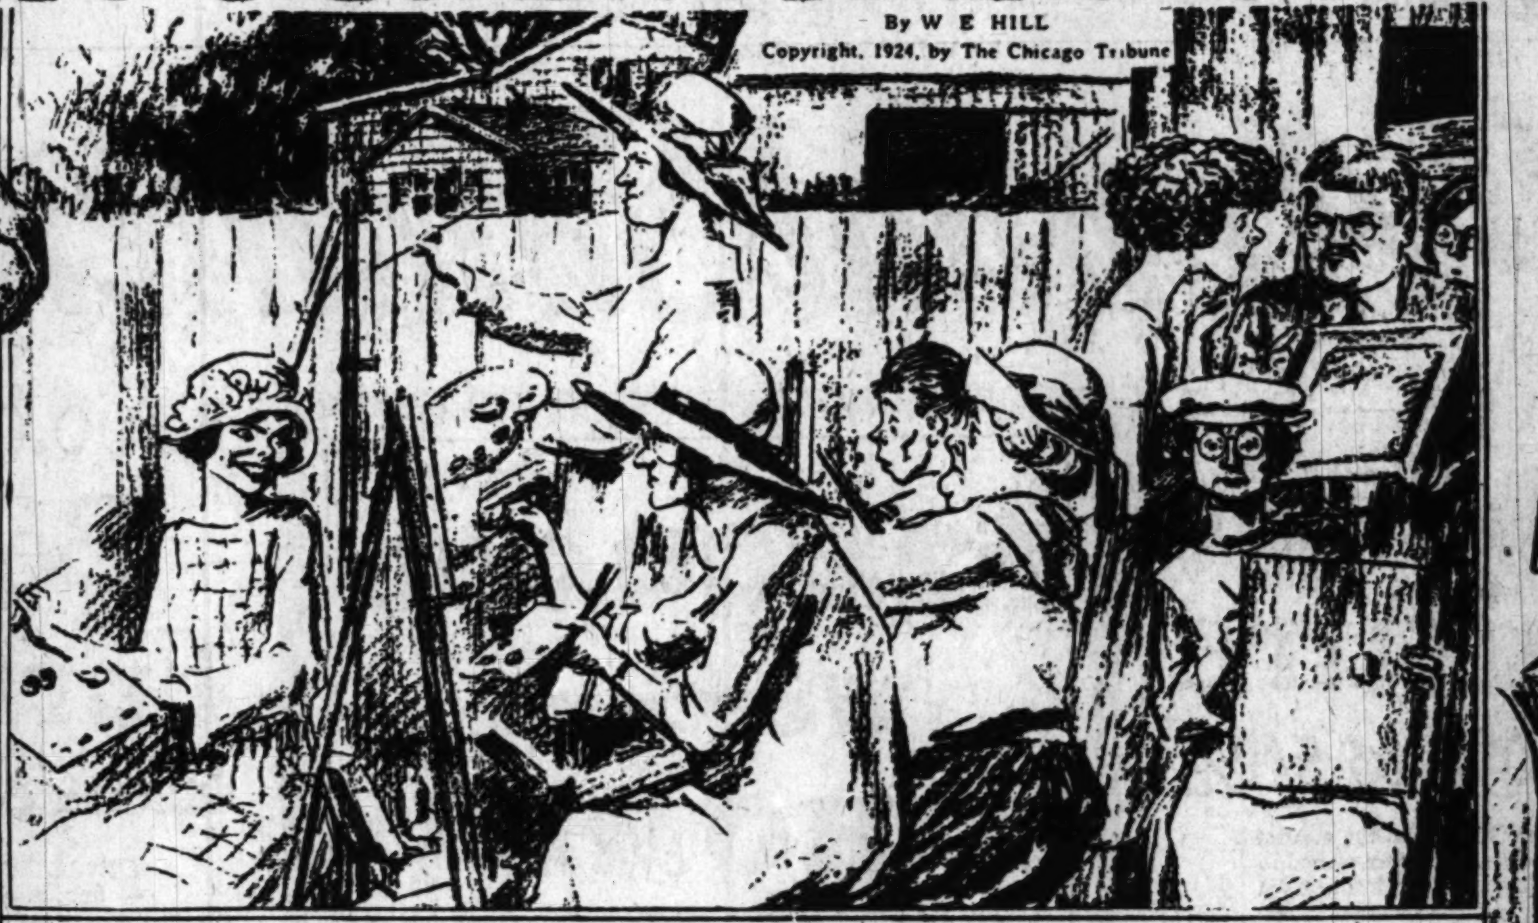
The Summer Art Colony

By W E HILL

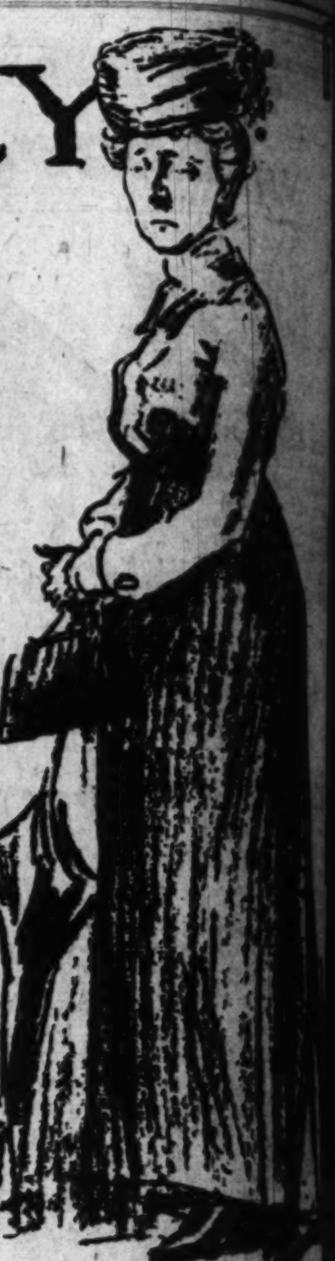
Copyright, 1924, by The Chicago Tribune



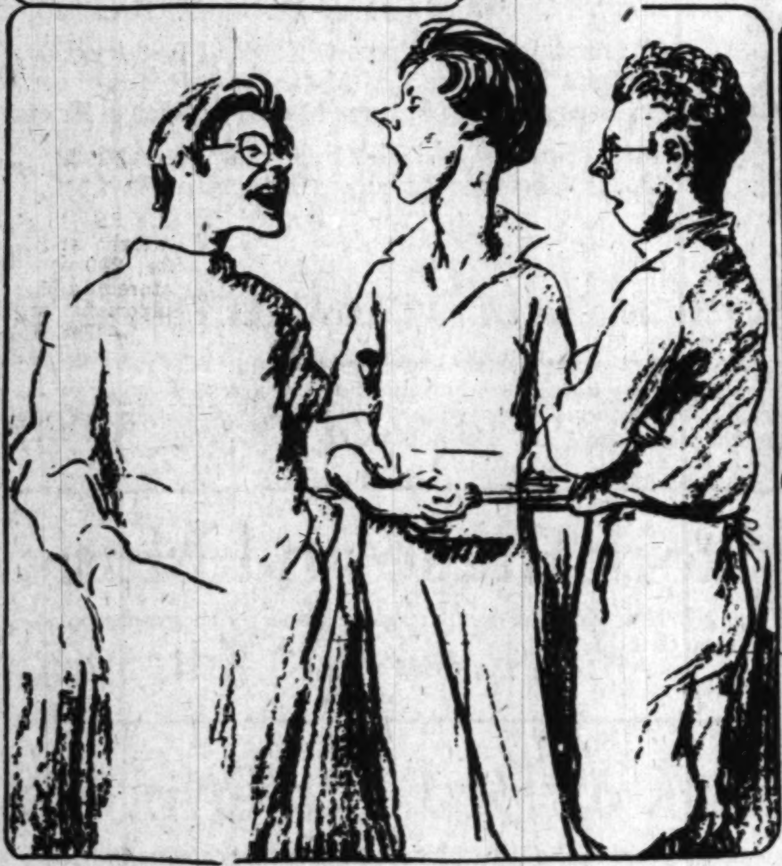
The virile artist. Very revolutionary. Wants to abolish money and everything that smacks of the Barbizon school. Only paints when the spirit moves him, which is very seldom.



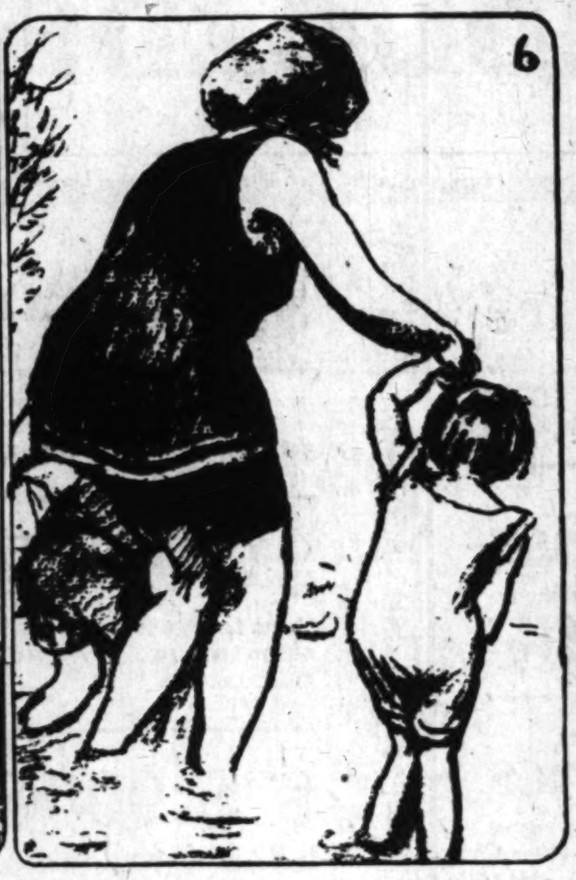
The class in outdoor landscape painting is hard at work back of a cow barn. This is a very popular class—at least five of the pupils have terrible crushes on the instructor. They are painting a distant hillside with a cute little red barn in the foreground. The girl at the extreme left has only taken up art within the past ten days. She came up to visit and it did look such fun. "Oh, Heavens!" she is saying, "I've gone and painted the grass rose madder instead of green! What shall I do?"



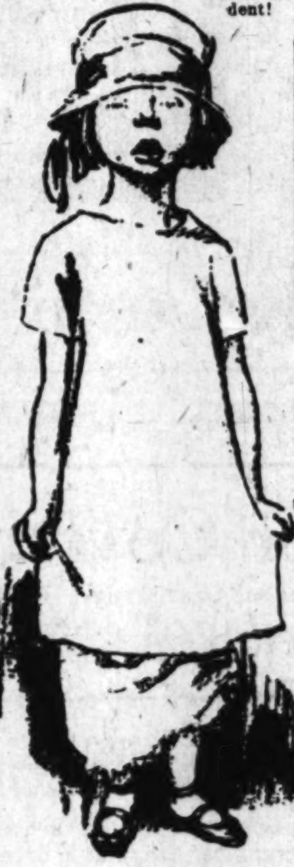
The native, who remembers the good old days when no artists ever came to the village. Hates all artists since the time her cow, Bella, choked on a tube of flakewhite, left in the pasture by some worthless student!



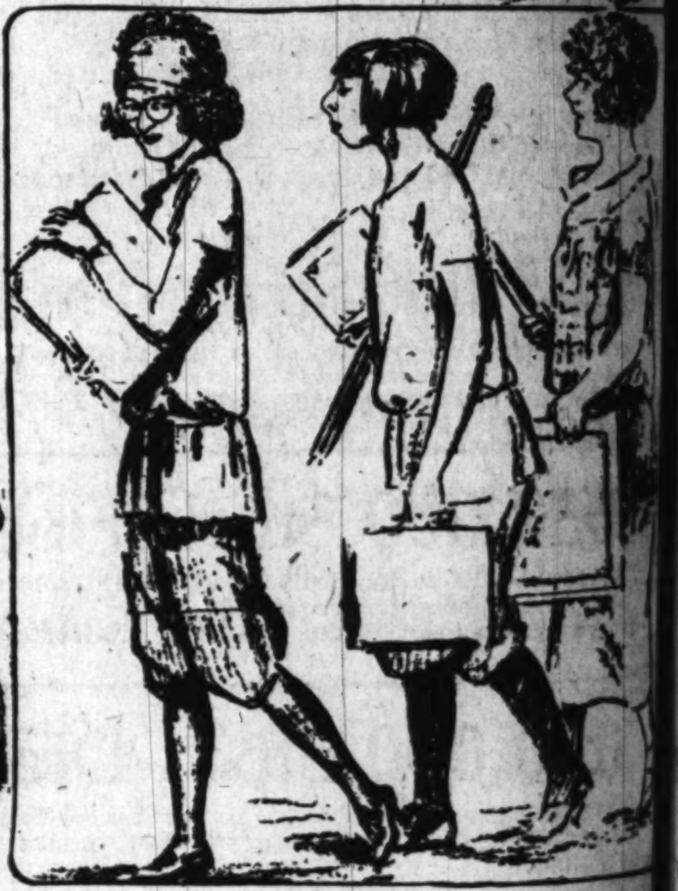
The near-artists are very vie de Boheme. Led by the young man with the home-grown musical instrument, they are singing "Give Me Whisky, Give Me Gin, and Any Little Thing the Cat Brought In."



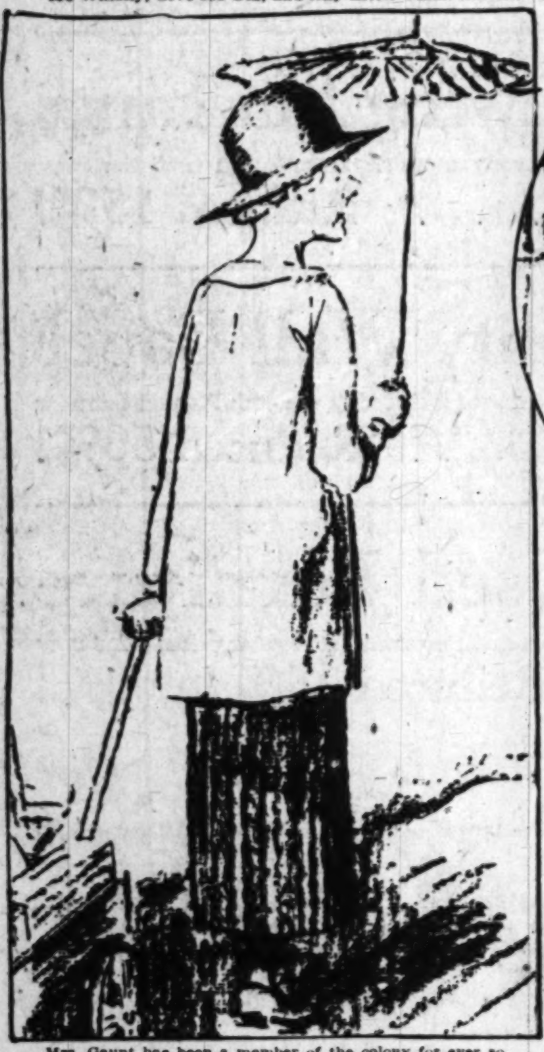
The bath in the brook, that is so full of little sharp stones.



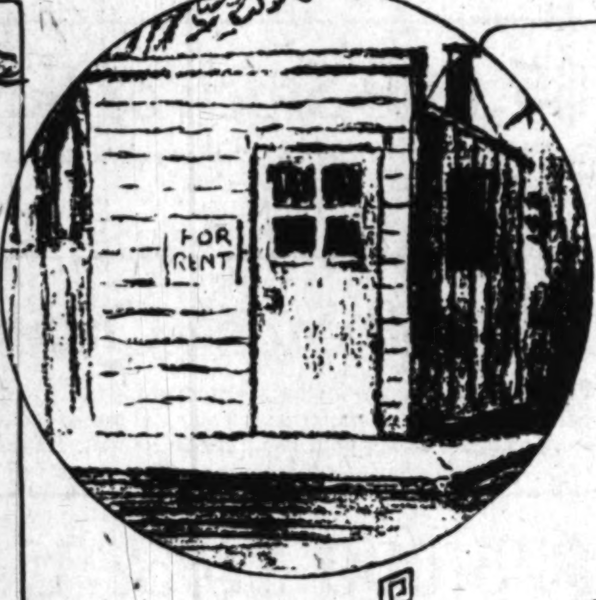
One of those dear little art children.



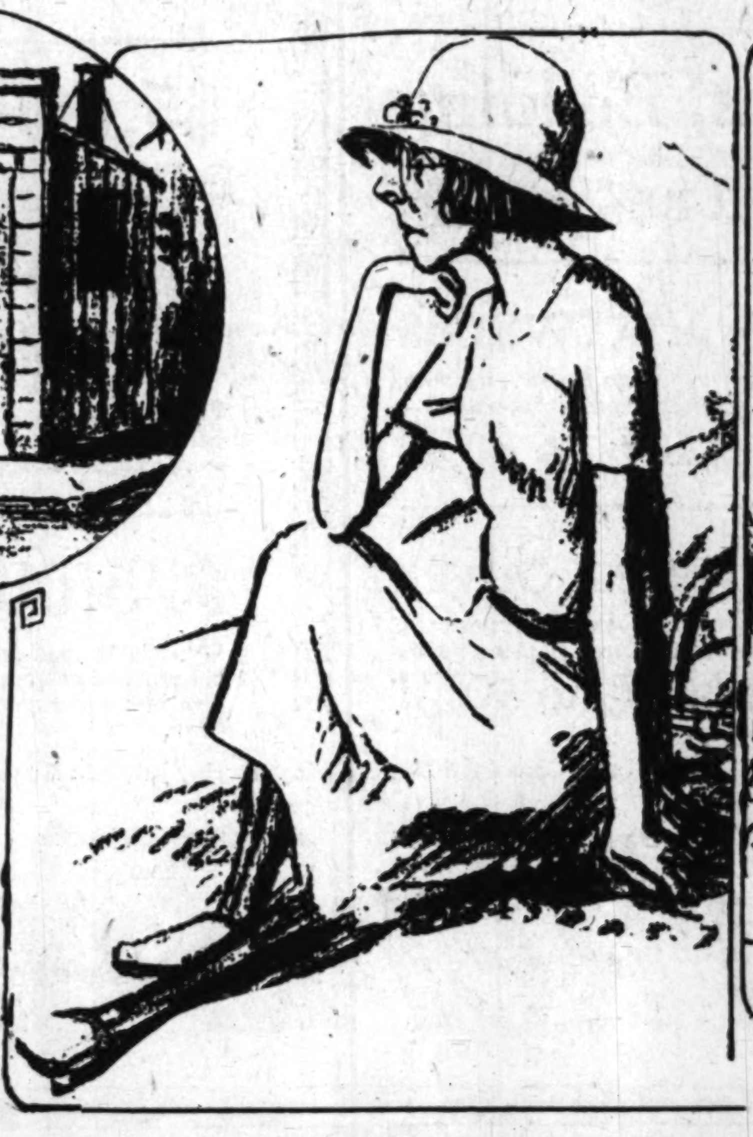
Three girl chums out on a sketching expedition. This ought to show that artists have just as much style as other people.



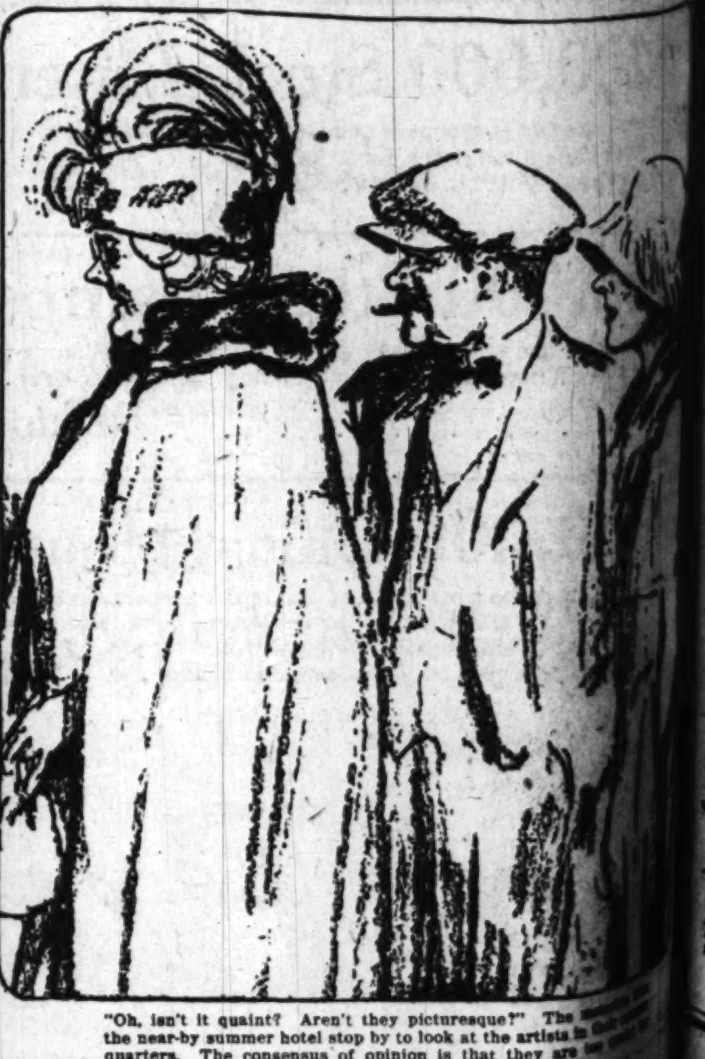
Mrs. Gaunt has been a member of the colony for ever so many summers. She doesn't hold with the moderinists, however. She is out gunning for picturesqueness this morning, and on the lookout for wild cows and bulls.



Isn't this a cute little studio? It's one room, and no bath, with a dear little north light window, for thirty-five a month. Pretty soon an artist's family will occupy it for July and August.



The artist's wife has gathered all the picnic things into the basket and when her lord and master is ready, they will go home. He is very busy just now, flirting with little Miss somebody or other, so his wife will have to wait a bit.



"Oh, isn't it quaint? Aren't they picturesque?" The [illegible] the near-by summer hotel stop by to look at the artists in their [illegible] quarters. The consensus of opinion is that they are [illegible] anything.

MEXICO HAS ITS W. J. BRYAN, TOO

Zuniga y Miranda Sort of Perpetual Candidate

For Twenty-five Years Has Run for Presidency

Lawyer of Unusual Type, But Highly Respected

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—In addition to Gens. Plutarco Elias Calles and Angel Flores, there was another candidate for Obregon's chair at the elections in Mexico. He is the Mexico City lawyer, Nicolas Zuniga y Miranda, and justly may be described as Mexico's professional and perpetual candidate for the Presidency, having figured as such, without interruption, at every election for the last twenty-five years.

Throughout all of Mexico's revolutionary and political disturbances, Zuniga y Miranda has always fulfilled the legal requisites as a candidate for Presidential election, and after the conclusion of the elections, has always retired to his private life in the same unostentatious manner with which he invariably bears himself during the campaign period.

Zuniga y Miranda holds the distinction of being the only candidate who opposed Porfirio Diaz on four consecutive occasions, and he also has opposed the following Presidents of Mexico: Francisco I. Madero in 1911, Victoriano Huerta in 1913, Venustiano Carranza in 1917, Obregon in 1920, and finally, at the elections held on the 6th inst., Calles and Flores. Perhaps on account of the inoffensive nature of his candidature, it has never been taken seriously; at any rate he never appears to have obtained any votes. He is nevertheless one of Mexico's most quaintly interesting figures.

LIKENED TO BRYAN

This perpetual candidate for the Presidency of the Mexican Republic is styled the William Jennings Bryan of Mexico, and some of his proposals for the happiness of the Mexican people are laughable. His program always has contained the reduction of prices of prime materials and necessities to such an extent that, were his ideals realized, the people would certainly have no cause for complaint. He would sell maize at 1 cent per kilogram, eggs at 1 cent each and virtually would give away such food as beans. The latter forms the staple diet of the lower class Mexican. His program, however, has never gone into any wealth of detail as to the practical means he would adopt to bring much of distorted Mexico to the Utopian stage he so often has predicted.

During the last elections he was in danger of losing his honorable record as a Presidential candidate, for he was advised by the City Council authorities of some flaws in the performance of the necessary legal formalities. This put him on his mettle, and he immediately obtained an injunction against the city's civic body, which resulted in his name being recorded in its accustomed place on the list of candidates. He then took the opportunity of informing the authorities that he was the only candidate who could be legally elected to succeed Obregon, affirming that both Calles and Flores were not Mexicans, and further that they had not withdrawn from the army within the legal time specified for Presidential candidates.

ACTIVE LAWYER

Zuniga y Miranda has used the same type of personal card for the last twenty-five years, and it has always borne the superscription, "perpetual candidate for the Presidency of the republic." To those not knowing him personally he might be regarded a person affected mentally, but such is far from being the case. He is a lawyer in active practice in Mexico City, and his electoral propaganda always has been effected peacefully, legally and with every show of seriousness.

He is a man of unquestioned culture, one of the tallest and thinnest in the republic. Close upon noon each day he may be seen on Mexico's fashionable Avenue Madero, garbed in a tail coat, high top hat, dating back in style to about the time he began his Presidential candidate career, and swinging a Malacca cane with an obtrusively large gold head, his other hand being supported thumb in waistcoat.

All salute him with a show of respect, although at times with a tinge of irony in it. His top hat, added to more than six feet of height, makes him an outstanding figure. Each Saturday evening he has made it a custom to keep open house for a small army of beggars, who never leave his comfortable residence without material assistance, either in money, food or clothing.

There are other unusual, but interesting, types in Mexico as Lawyer Zuniga y Miranda. He has attained to the fame of figuring in a number of popular music-hall songs, while Mexico City vaudeville has many times taken advantage of his figure and mannerisms to create a comic part, which is a sure winner in local comedy.

Nina Romano in Film-Queen Role is Talk of Town

Nina Romano is creating no end of excitement in Los Angeles, partly because of her role of the film queen in "The Whole Town's Talking" at the Playhouse, and partly because of the mystery that surrounds her.

When Louis O. Macloon expressed a desire to produce a new play by a young Russian author, but regretted that the translation was a trifle faulty, Nina Romano offered to translate it anew for him.

Mr. Macloon's great surprise did not deter him from turning the manuscript over to her for revision and the actress is working on it now. Fortunately, the lessee and manager of the Playhouse asked no questions, for they would have gone unanswered.

Interest in Miss Romano has even extended to motion-picture producers and she is being considered by many as a likely screen possibility of considerable portent.

Artisans Busy Rebuilding New Cameo Theater

"The best and most luxuriously appointed 'small' theater on Broadway when the renovations are completed."

That's the promise of O. D. Cloakey, manager of the Cameo Theater, the newly named film playhouse, which takes the place of the old Clune's Broadway.

A half-hundred carpenters, electricians, decorators and upholsterers are in possession of the place now. The auditorium is a chaos of wreckage, but out of this chaos William Cutts is devising a new orderliness from which will rise a new theater adequately equipped to take its place alongside Broadway's best.

Its old seating capacity of 800 will be slightly increased by the new space arrangement. A larger orchestra pit is being made to make room for the sixteen players who will be directed by Theodore Henkel, newly appointed musical director. The projection-room will be widened.

A suite of drawing and sitting-rooms is being fitted out in luxurious style on the second floor, where women patrons will find quiet, comfort and opportunity for rest.

Plans are maturing for the elaborate opening of "The Signal Tower," which will be the initial offering. It is a Universal super-feature starring Virginia Valli, Wallace Beery, Rockliffe Fellowes and other film notables.

The date of the opening has not yet been set, but it will be in the last week of July.

UNSYMPATHETIC HERO

Lloyd Whitlock, in several episodes of James Hogan's production "Unmarried Wives," enacts the role of an unsympathetic hero.

IRENE RICH LOSES VACATION

Irene Rich, who has just returned from England where she appeared in a motion-picture production, is not going to have a very long vacation before starting her next picture at Warner Brothers studio. Going from the train, straight to her home and bundling her two small daughters off to a beach resort, this emotional actress planned to have a few weeks in which to rest and tell her friends of the scores of interesting things that happened to her abroad. But, during her absence, a new story had been prepared for her and work will begin immediately.

The new cinema offering, a screen version of "This Woman," by Howard Rockey, has been adapted to the screen by Hope Loring and Louis Lighton. William Beaudine has been selected to direct it. Mr. Beaudine recently completed "Cornered" and has enjoyed a few days' vacation before starting the new screen play.

With Miss Rich in this picture will be an all-star cast of players—carrying out Production Manager Jack L. Warner's contention that a capable actor or actress in each and every role, no matter how small, goes a long way toward making a perfect production.

"This Woman," a story of today, is an outcry against the entrenched offenses of society's conventions, that condone themselves by claiming a sex complex.

This is the first production on Miss Rich's new contract signed an hour before she boarded the train for the East.

MILLARD WEBB SCORES HIT

Millard Webb of Warner Brothers' studios is perhaps the youngest director in motion pictures. He has just completed "Her Marriage Vow," the screen adaptation of Owen Davis's stage success of the same name, which opened yesterday at its world premiere at the California Theater.

That Director Webb made a decided hit with his helpers and members of the cast is proved by the excellent co-operation this director was given on his set.

Here is a director who, each morning at 7 o'clock, goes into conference with his assistant, William McGann, and his "gag" staff. He reviews the previous day's work on paper, looks at the day's "rushes" and comes to a decision on the coming day's activities.

It is characteristic of Webb to rewrite a certain comedy situation during the actual working hours. If a certain "gag" does not come up to his expectation he adds a little new business or slightly revises the preceding and following shots.

Webb is not at all backward in declaring that he likes to direct motion pictures. In fact, he likes it so well he would sooner be at work than spend an hour after "labor" hours in some form of amusement.

The players in "Her Marriage Vow" include Monte Blue, Beverly Bayne, Margaret Livingston, Willard Louis, John Roche and little Priscilla Moran.

DRIVES RUNAWAYS

Dorothy Devore drives a runaway pair of mustangs in Hugo Ballin's production of "The Prairie Wife."

"MONSOONS" NOT STORMS

All or almost all of the early dispatches about the deplorable accident on Mount Everest used the word "monsoon" as if it were the name of a storm — like "gale" "blizzard" "cyclone" or "tornado." As a matter of fact, the monsoon is nothing of the sort, but merely the seasonal wind in that part of the world, corresponding to the trade winds in this part; and while it often, especially at its beginning, is marked by severe storms, no inhabitant of the East thinks of calling such a storm "a monsoon."

What the senders of the dispatches meant was that the annual moisture-bearing wind had started to blow unusually early in the season. The precipitation, at such a lofty elevation, naturally took the form of a heavy snowfall. India and all the neighboring countries await the monsoon not with apprehension, but with eager longing, for it ends the long droughts, and a favorable monsoon assures good crops and prosperity, while if its rains are scanty the result is a famine, sometimes costing millions of lives.

Without the monsoon the greater part of India would be uninhabitable. The climbers of Mount Everest expected to accomplish their task before the "weather broke," as they knew it would before long, but luck failed them.—[New York Times.

Inference Drawn

The family had engaged a maid, and when she arrived they found she was not only disagreeable but useless.

"Well," said the lady of the house to her husband, "maybe she won't stay long—she didn't bring a trunk."

"Don't be too sure, ma," chipped in their eldest son, aged 5. "Just look at baby—he didn't bring anything, but he's still here."—[Exchange.

Everyone May Do Kindly Deed, So Says Colleen

Like a long-distance telephone wire stretching from New York to Hollywood, a fine, slender thread of vast magnetic power links the heart and the brain, the seats of sentiment and of reason.

At one end sits the tiny prompter of kindly deeds. At the other is the inciter of justice—cold and calculating though it may be.

There is no human method of gauging the strength of either factor, or of determining which one is the better schooled in the gentle art of argumentation. Some insignificant interference on the line, some fragmentary loss of fleeting emotion, may overbalance reason or destroy sentiment.

So cogitates Collen Moore, star of "The Perfect Flapper," now showing at the Alhambra Theater when caught in a Hegelian mood. Colleen elucidates:

"I never have known a man or woman who was not capable of some kindly action. Nor have I known one who could not be unkind in some way. It all depends upon which orator of the inner thought wins the skirmish of the moods over that slender, gossamer line which links the sunny land of charity with the austere realm of selfishness.

"We are or we are not. We will or we won't. We may or we may not.

"Those make up the everyway problems of life into which both head and heart necessarily must enter. Their joint judgment, perhaps arrived at only after a fluctating fight, just decides the measure of our action."

The "Flaming Youth," girl is said to even exceed her brilliant work in her previous First National pictures in her latest release, "The Perfect Flapper." She is supported by an exceptional cast of all-star caliber including Sydney Chaplin, Frank Mayo, Phillis Haver, Lydia Knott, Charles Wellesley and many others.

Cruze Vows Not to Shoot Buffalo Stampede Again

James Cruze, the Paramount director, who made "The Covered Wagon," now starting its fifth week at the Million Dollar Theater, will try anything once but he never will, according to his own story, take a chance on trying to film a buffalo stampede again.

Speaking about his most exciting period during the making of "The Covered Wagon," Cruze, the other day, stated that his buffalo actors gave him more concern than anything else in the picture.

"If you have never seen a buffalo close-up," said Cruze, "let me tell you that it is a sight not soon to be forgotten—I mean a wild one.

"Buffaloes are evil tempered beasts and they seem to dislike horses and men especially. They can outrun a horse up a hill and they are as quick as cats and turn on a coin. Maybe that's why they are on the 5-cent pieces we use nowadays. They charge, and come up with their wicked heads and horns, and everything is fish that comes to their net. If they get headed in one direction, nothing can stop them. So you can imagine what a problem we were confronted with in trying to get them to run before the camera.

"Thrills? Well, take all the Wild West shows combined and you get some idea of what it was like? Work? Those actors never worked so hard in their lives and never will again. And it was hotter than the Hinges of Tophet with alkali dust and alkali wind and salt water breezes that burned your face and blistered your lips and made your eyes water.

"Never again," sighed Cruze!

"NERVOUS WRECK" POPULAR

With the fourth week of its run at the Majestic Theater beginning tonight, there seems to be no let-up in the interest being shown in Owen Davis's New York comedy success, "The Nervous Wreck," with the popular Edward Everett Horton in the leading role.

A steady demand for seats indicates that the star and the play are set for a long run, for this laughable farce is said to be a splendid piece of summer entertainment designed to make one forget the warm weather or any other disturbing elements.

That Horton has lost none of his former popularity as a stage star after an absence from the Majestic for two years is attested by the enthusiastic reception that is being accorded him during this return engagement.

Horton is without doubt one of the cleverest comedians that has ever appeared in this city and with his likeable personality and splendid comedy talent has acquired an extensive following who have welcomed his return to the speaking stage.

As for "The Nervous Wreck," the play was the comedy sensation of New York and will be seen again the coming season in New York and on the road and a company now is being formed to take the play to London.

Barbara Gurney, who is playing her first engagement at the Majestic, has made a most favorable impression with patrons of that house in the role opposite Horton, while the balance of the cast give excellent support to the principals. In the cast are such well-known players as Tom Chatterton, Barbara Brown, Henry Hall, Norman Feusier, James Edwards, Edward Woods, Franklin Pangborn, Henry Shumer and George Webster.

STANLEY LEARNING TO SWING "WICKED LEFT"

Forrest Stanley does not claim to be a prize fighter, in fact he has never been inside the roped arena in his entire life. However, he finds himself facing such a strenuous pugilistic encounter in one of the scenes of the B. P. Schulberg production, "The Breath of Scandal," in which he plays the juvenile lead, that he has decided to go into training. He is, therefore, boxing several rounds each day with Joe Rivers and Johnnie Thompson, famous ex-pugilists. These two worthy disciples of the manly art of self protection claim that Stanley swings a wicked right and also has a powerful sleeping potion in his left.

COMPLETES NEW SCRIPT

Harvey Gates has completed the photoplay version of "A Cafe in Cairo," which is to be Priscilla Dean's second Hunt Stromberg production. "A Cafe in Cairo" is from the pen of Izola Forrester, author of "The White Moth," and is now being issued in book form by a prominent eastern publisher.

Clean Living is Recipe of Hiers for Film Fame

If anyone should ask me what I consider the one greatest requisite of film fame, I would reply:

"Clean living."

That statement comes from Walter Hiers, one of the screen's most lovable comedians . . . despite the assertion that nobody loves a fat man.

Hiers says that scores of actors and actresses, sending out advice to beginners, have failed to state that in this day clean living is a vital part of every effort to win screen success.

"Maybe there was a time when people could advance themselves in this industry by unclean methods," Hiers declares. "If there was, it was before my time, and I have been in motion pictures for several years. But if there ever was such a time, it is gone.

"Nowadays it is the sweet, wholesome girl and the clean, likeable man who attain the topmost rung of success in motion pictures."

FOUR FEATURES COMING

Four features are to leave the cutting room at Universal City within the next few days. These are "Clinging Fingers," Edward Sloman's production starring Virginia Valli; "The Husbands of Edith," directed by William Seiter from George Barr McCutcheon's novel and featuring Reginald Denny and Laura La Plante; "The Nightcap," adapted from Max Marcin's play, and directed by Herbert Blache with an all-star cast, and "Flower of Napoli," with Madge Bellamy and Herbert Rawlinson, directed by Edward Laemmle from the story by Gerald Beaumont.

PANTAGES PLANS TRYOUTS

Aspirants for the stage, especially those desirous of booking over the larger vaudeville circuits of the country, will have an opportunity to prove their right of appearing through arrangements just completed and originated by Alexander Pantages of the Pantages Circuit of Theaters.

"Each day a number of men and women, boys and girls, come to my office and request an opportunity for a tryout," stated Mr. Pantages last night, "and in the past I have found it utterly impossible to give these people an opportunity to show what they can do. This plan of mine, of permitting people desirous of making the vaudeville stage a career, an opportunity of showing what they can do, should be of great assistance to them."

The plan, as explained by Mr. Pantages, is as follows: Every morning at 11 o'clock, except Saturday, Sunday and Monday, at the local Pantages Theater, will be tryout mornings. In no way is this to be classed as an amateur performance or entertainment, but any man or woman, boy or girl, who thinks that he or she can act, play or do something that would entertain a vaudeville audience, will have the opportunity of proving what they can do. They will be permitted to appear on the stage of the theater, and do their "stuff" with Mr. Pantages and his staff of experienced vaudeville bookers in the audience. The general public is invited to attend these morning tryouts without any extra charge, as they will be permitted to enter the theater at 11 o'clock, and remain throughout the regular performance, which starts at 1 o'clock.

"Los Angeles has plenty of good talent, and I want to see for myself just what local people can do, and if they possess the right material I shall be glad to book them over my circuit," continued Mr. Pantages. "Acts that need the advice of a professional vaudeville manager will be given all assistance, and I am looking forward to this new venture of discovering new talent, with much anticipation."

SOUTHLAND BEST FOR FILMS, SAYS TELLEGEN

A philosophical word or two regarding the transference of some of the motion-picture work east is offered by Lou Tellegen, who is playing a leading role in B. P. Schulberg's production of "A Breath of Scandal" at the F. B. O. studios. The star says: "All this harangue about where motion pictures shall be produced seems to me a waste of effort. After all is said and done, does it really matter where good pictures are made? What we have to fear most is that producers may move picture making to foreign countries because some have found that it costs less to do so. I've been in Los Angeles too long to wish for a better place."

OFF TO A BUM START

Raymond Hatton's first experience in the motion-picture business was a disastrous one. He started work with George Melford at the old Lasky studios in 1911. Hatton was playing a small part in the picture and wore a long black crepe beard. A large mob, armed with torches was employed in the scene. During the action one of the extra men dropped his torch, which fell in Raymond's whiskers. This accident nearly caused the actor to give up the business.

WHAT SHALL A WOMAN DO?

Ernest Poole Tells of a Wife Who Exploits Her Husband; Nancy Barr Mavity Gives Us the New Woman Occupied With Her Own Affairs

BY LILLIAN C. FORD

THE AVALANCHE. By Ernest Poole. The Macmillan Company, New York.

Ernest Poole is a man of many-sided interests. In his new novel, "The Avalanche," is the subconscious, particularly as related to the cure of nervous diseases, that is his special interest. He is convinced that the possibilities of the human mind and of human life have been little realized and that an awakening is needed.

"The man," he makes his hero, Llewellyn Dorr, say, "who rides in a high-power car is living no bigger inner life than his grandfather in the gig—probably smaller. Our tense little souls get tough and dry; we're afraid to believe, to think or feel. We worry over the state of our health, our bank accounts, our stocks and bonds—so that there's nothing left at night but the 'tired business man,' we say. But the time is soon coming when we'll ask, as a few are already doing now: 'Why be sick, or tired, or cross—or worried and tense, or stale and dry?' Why not look in and learn to draw on some of this life stored up inside. There's such a lot of it in there—and not only in our little selves—for some of us are beginning to feel these subconscious lives of ours may be connected in some way with all the life that has been in the world."

Dorr is a New York neurologist, content to go slowly on his way, devoted to the scientific study of the mind and ever ready to give himself for his patients. He has the misfortune to be called in to treat Dorothea Farragut, who is indulging in a nervous breakdown, largely caused by too much society and the strain of trying to decide whether or not to marry Tom McKane, proprietor of a great New York daily paper. Marriage with him means luxury, society, power, and the opportunity to use her brain on the paper. For McKane was always ready to consult with her, as she had proved her ability as manager of more than one big publicity campaign for charity. Romance alone is lacking.

In Llewellyn she senses a new kind of person. His magnetism and his charm and his genius prove too much for Dorothea, and she marries him on her own initiative. Then she connives with McKane to give her husband the publicity that she believes is all that is needed to make him the leading neurologist of New York, with a huge income. How this irritates and in the end destroys Llewellyn is the story. In it the conflict between an energetic, ambitious wife and her husband, a scientist and an idealist, is well worked out.

The background of prosperous, intrenched, but restless society, momentarily interested in the new, but always suspicious and even contemptuous, is effectively drawn. In contrast with this is that other background, the psychic field, which is so handled as to arouse our speculation.

The book drags a little, here and there. Mr. Poole is too thorough. He is inclined to overdo. This is noticeable in the too-long drawn-out struggle between Llewellyn and Dorothea, since their failure to make a go of their marriage is almost a foregone conclusion. But the book is no ordinary novel, but a thoughtful and well-written one and a valuable commentary on our times.

HAZARD. By Nancy Barr Mavity. Harper & Bros., New York.

Nancy Barr Mavity, literary editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, has written in "Hazard," a first novel that is unlike much of the early literary fruit of the ambitious young of today—it is neither unripe nor flavorless.

"Hazard" is a story of the biographical type, in which Tracy Everson goes through her paces from the age of 14 up to maturity. Quoting George Meredith to the effect that barriers are for those who cannot fly, Mrs. Mavity proceeds to show how her Tracy refused to accept the barriers placed all about her by her conventional family and the small-town community in which she lived. At 14 she refused to glow over the "Little Colonel" series; she refused to be interested in the lady-like little girls selected by her mother as her companions, preferring a brace of Irish urchins; she refused to be neat and quiet, polite and respectful, happy and docile, in the sphere to which it had pleased God to call her.

This refusal of her environment increased as she grew older. She shocked all and sundry by refusing to be "saved" in the conventional way. Then she refused to go to the select young ladies' academy, prayerfully selected for her by her perturbed parents. Here, however, she proved herself a diplomat, holding her peace and betaking herself quietly to Dover College when she had been safely placed on the train for the academy.

At college she led a free, athletic, vigorous life. Graduated, she wished to rush into matrimony with John. But he was canny. He had two years to put in at law school and he wanted no wife to hamper him.

Thereupon Tracy, discovering the feet of clay in her idol, rushed off to New York. Here she landed a job and set up housekeeping with Mary Davis, a girlhood friend. These two free souls are typical young persons out of the lively novels of today. They have no inhibitions but their feelings; no notions about the proprieties; no ambition but to be themselves and live their lives.

Tracy nearly came a cropper in her desire to break down all barriers. This in a scene that might well have been omitted—it smacks too much of "Janet March." Then she decided to marry Oliver Garnett, a decent young man in a publishing house, who preferred a legal union.

The picture of their co-operative housekeeping—Tracy kept her job; of the coming of the baby, who was made most welcome; of Tracy's gallant shouldering of her new responsibilities; and of the happines of the little group reveals a rare feeling for life and for the deeper significance of a home.

The latter part of the book, which shows how Tracy failed to fit in to the conventional environment, after Oliver had inherited his father's interest in a bleachery, and of how in the end they went back to the partnership idea, with both working, is convincingly done. The book has been written from a mind surcharged with ideas about the new place of women on this sphere, and it is a refreshing and vigorous piece of work.

SINCLAIR LEWIS AT HOME

Sinclair Lewis has returned from England, his gray hair flying in the wind, his brisk personality as brisk and as disturbing as ever, not a whit disturbed by the manners of the British Isles. We have read an installment of "Dr. Arrowsmith" in the Designer, and we liked it well for an installment. Of course, the version that appears in the magazine is a somewhat abbreviated one. The novel itself, which will appear next spring, is some 200,000 words in length.

It will be interesting to know just how much effect on the circulation of the Designer the publication of this sensational author's work will have. It is known that they paid the handsome sum of $50,000 for the serial rights, and we have a suspicion that, in publicity value, it has been worth it to them. Mr. Lewis left New York City after a short stay, and sought the solace of his own home town, Sauk Centre, Minn., that town which he made notorious in "Main Street." From there he will go to Canada, where he will accompany "Treaty Party No. 10" sent by the Canadian government to the Red River district to behave in a friendly manner to the Indians. Just what Mr. Lewis intends doing with the Indians we couldn't quite gather.—[July Bookman.

C. E. MONTAGUE'S FAVORITE

Recently Miss Fanny Butcher, literary editor of the Chicago Tribune, asked C. E. Montague what book he would rather have written than any other. This was his answer:

"When I first read Trackeray's 'Esmond' as a boy, I felt that to have written such a book—especially the scenes of Esmond's visit to his mother's grave and of his last visit to Castlewood in pursuit of Beatrix and the pretender—would not merely be more enjoyable than any other completed feat of authorship; it would even be more enjoyable than the acquisition of the amateur boxing or sculling championship or any other of the great prizes of life. Since then, I have learned with awe and wonder that Thackeray's way of writing 'Esmond' was to sit well back in an easy chair, puff a great pipe, and dictate the text without visible signs of travail. This discovery has tinged with an almost religious new fervor my old belief that 'Esmond' is the book to have written. To turn out masterpieces at all must be pretty good fun, but to do it without turning a hair is the sort of fun that we might have thought the gods would keep for themselves. Don't you agree?"

AN INGENIOUS NEW BOOK

The new book by Ernest Bramah, author of "The Wallet of Kai Lung" and "Kai Lung's Golden Hours," is a departure. It offers a group of highly ingenious mystery tales written around a central figure who, if one may call him a detective, is easily the strangest detective in contemporary fiction.

Max Carrados is a gentleman of remarkable knowledge and exceptional taste. He has a peculiarity. He is blind. As the result of long blindness, his other senses are sharpened to an extraordinary degree. As a rule he can read newsprint by passing his finger tips over the page.

His exploits, written with the literary distinction which is stamped on all of Ernest Bramah's works, set a new high mark in the line of what will always be called "detective stories."

"MONSIEULR BEAUCAIRE"

Booth Tarkington's "Monsieur Beaucaire" has been revived in London and is now playing at the Strand Theater with Gerald Lawrence in the title role. The play is especially well received by old-timers, with whom it has long been a favorite. Although this slight but exquisite story was published twenty-five years ago and has been a complete revolution in literary styles, Mr. Tarkington's publishers, Doubleday, Page & Co., report that it continues to be one of the most popular of his books and seems to remain uninfluenced by time and literary fashions.

LITERARY GOSSIP

The church is doomed if it keeps discreetly silent or indulges in merely amiable generalities about the moral issues of politics and industry, of war and peace, declares Glenn Frank, editor of the Century in his July editorial, "An Attempt to Be Honest About the Church and War."

Now that the child labor amendment has passed both houses of Congress and is to be submitted to the States for ratification, there is bound to be a widespread discussion of its tenets. Raymond G. Fuller, in his recent book, "Child Labor and the Constitution," published by Crowell, has already anticipated the arguments which will be adduced both for and against this measure. Mr. Fuller's long connection with child welfare movements has placed in his hands valuable data, with which all voters might well familiarize themselves.

George Haven Putnam, author of "Some Memories of the Civil War" and head of the publishing house of G. P. Putnam's Sons, was one of the Civil War veterans who took part in the Memorial Day ceremonies held in London. He laid a wreath on the cenotaph raised to the Unknown Soldier and later placed a wreath on the St. Gaudens statue of Lincoln and made a brief address to the crowds before Westminster Abbey.

Flaubert's masterpiece, "The Temptation of St. Anthony," will soon be available for American readers in three editions, varying in format and price, to suit all tastes. It is already one of the volumes in Boni & Liveright's modern library, and the same firm expects to bring it out next fall both as one of the volumes in limited subscription set of the works of Flaubert, and in another limited edition of Lafcadio Hearn's translation, illustrated in color and in black and white by Jean de Bosschere.

D. H. Lawrence supplies not only the text but the drawing for "The Dance of the Sprouting Corn," an account of a pueblo ritual, which is a feature of the Theater Arts Monthly for July. The magazine also contains in full a very unusual and interesting play by Jacques Copeau, director of the Vieux Colombier, called "The House Into Which We Are Born." This is Copeau's first play and created a stir at its premiere in Paris this spring.

Thomas Hardy is very much interested in Edna St. Vincent Millay's works, the head of Harper's London office writes the publishers. Mr. Hardy expressed such great pleasure in Miss Millay's poems that Harpers are sending him all of her books.

"The Life and Times of Cleopatra" in a new and enlarged edition by Arthur Weigall will be issued at once by the Putnams. The book is revised with consideration for all the material concerning the Serpent of Old Nile unearthed within the past few years. It presents a picture of Cleopatra as a faithful wife to Caesar, a devoted mother to Caesarion, and a betrayer of Marc Antony at Actium when she found it was his own interests and not those of Caesarion which moved him to war against Augustus.

The front porch campaigns and the cross-country tours of our Presidential candidates are not a very good means of choosing a President of the United States, says Charles Merz, in his discussion of the opening campaigns in the July Century. They are, however, a 100 per cent American method of blowing off steam.

"Is the hero or heroine possessed of a salacious mind, or puerile powers of resistance to evil, any more real in terms of life than a hero or heroine who is not?" questions Lawrence Perry in the July issue of the Bookman.

Jim Tully, whose new book entitled "Beggars of Life," a hobo autobiography, is to be published in the fall by Albert and Charles Boni, has just been engaged to play the part of a prize-fighter in Charlie Chaplin's next picture.

The John Newberry Medal, given annually to "the most distinguished contribution to American literature for children," has this year been awarded to "The Dark Frigate," by the late Charles Boardman Hawes. This announcement was made at the annual conference of the American Library Association at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Alexander Kaun, author of "Leonid Andreyev, A Critical Study," is a Russian by birth and education. He has attended American universities — he recently received a Ph.D. degree from the University of California —and has contributed to American periodicals from the Atlantic Monthly to the Little Review.

Last month Ferris Greenslet, literary director of Houghton Mifflin Company, who took his doctor's degree at Columbia in 1900, a distinction which he claims to have lived down, was honored by Dartmouth College with the degree of doctor of letters. Mr. Greenslet, besides being the biographer of Aldrich, Lowell, Pater and others, unites a profound knowledge of yesterday's literature with a discerning ardor for today's and tomorrow's, while masking his literary omniscence behind a passion for dry-

A PROPHETESS OF THE VELDT

THE LIFE OF OLIVE SCHREINER. By S. C. Cronwright-Schreiner. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

This life of Olive Schreiner, written by her husband, recalls to mind her famous book "The Story of an African Farm," which, by the way, was not a story of farm life in Africa, but the study of a mind tortured by religious doubts. While this book was exceedingly popular and had a tremendous vogue, it is through her contribution to the "woman question" that she is most likely to be longest remembered. One of the picturesque phases of her brilliant career was her feud with Cecil Rhodes, whose imperialistic ambitions aroused every atom of her resentment.

Her feelings of alternate attraction and repulsion to and from Rhodes were violent to the last degree. Her husband declares that the story of the earliest stages of Olive's attitude toward Rhodes is interesting, partly because of the two magnetic and eminent persons concerned, but mainly because it throws a light on the source of the pain which some of Olive's unusual mental traits inflicted upon her personal intercourse. This pain was due largely to the sudden onset of "curious feelings" that came over her when she met people for the first time. These "curious feelings" and first-sight impressions, sometimes violent and unmeasured, were often wrong, and though she unswervingly maintained that they were always right, they often had to be corrected, with pain to herself and to others, in the light of more intimate later acquaintance.

The case of Rhodes may be taken as the best example of both these phases. Olive Schreiner writes, in her letters, of the "curious feelings" she has about a man in Africa, Rhodes, whom she had often seen but never spoken to. She first saw him in England on board ship in 1889 when she was seeing her sister off for South Africa. She says that she saw him then "without the least knowledge of who he was." At once she had this queer feeling about him, which she did not consider personal: "It's not love," she says, but when she sees him walking, she knows "just every sensation he has." Later, people tell her of the kind things he says of her and of his wish to meet her, "but" she continues, "I don't know if I shall ever meet him. It's not love, it's not admiration . . . it's not that I think him noble or good . . . it is the deliberate feeling, 'That man belongs to me.'"

She at last met Cecil Rhodes at Matjesfontein at dinner. On this occasion she writes: "He would carry out better than anyone I know your idea of a man of genius as a sort of child. That huge, hard-headed man of the world, as you would expect to find him, is so curiously like a little child that one feels tender to him. He has such masses of close curly hair and even the same, curious far-off look as Waldo, in 'The Story of an African Farm.'"

Olive Schreiner cared passionately for politics; at first an extreme pro-Boer, eventually a violent pacifist, and always a stormy, passionate creature, she would sometimes fall into such rages of fury at the course of public events that she would bruise herself by dashing against the furniture. In one of her violent encounters with Rhodes she beat her head upon the dinner table until the guests were frightened. Her early admiration for him—she comments: "He is even higher and nobler than I expected"—turned into bitter distrust and vilification. She believed that "Rhodes and his crew," as she called the ministry, were soaking South Africa in materialism and she addressed him in terms no other person dared to use. His whole policy, particularly his attitude on the native question,—he said to her on one occasion, "I prefer land to niggers"—alienated this idealist. The end of their friendship came when she refused to shake hands with him in the Matjesfontein Station because of a transaction concerning some government land, a deal which she called flagrantly and "shamelessly dishonorable."

However, his admiration for her never ceased, and when asked why he did not prosecute Olive Schreiner for various libelous attacks, he answered that he could do nothing against the author of "The Story of an African Farm."

BIOGRAPHY AND REMINISCENCE

UNCONVENTIONAL MEMORIES. By Ralph Nevill. George H. Doran Company, New York.

This is a mildly interesting account of the life of a member of that species known on its native heath—or heaths—as "Men About Town." In other words, this author was a man of good family and sufficient fortune who neither adopted a profession, looked after an estate, nor lost his hand to any other useful occupation. Following a quasi-educational sojourn at Eton and Cambridge, this finished gentleman busily danced, dined, flirted, raced and gamed for a number of years. Following a particularly unlucky season on the turf Mr. Nevill found his finances so depleted that retrenchment and a foreign residence for a considerable period seemed desirable. Having made up his mind to "take a pull" he succeeded in placing himself as "honorary" attache to the Anglo-Persian Mission, whose chief at that time was Sir Henry Wolff, and was soon made private secretary to that astute Minister.

The author's description of Persia and the Persians does not penetrate below the surface of things. When men of his ultra-conventional class visit foreign countries their social and political prepossessions serve as efficient blinders, and their conclusions therefore carry no weight. From Persia this author went to Japan, where he was pleased with the ancient and honorable order of Geishas and other novel institutions, but deeply resented the assumption by Japanese gentlemen of a modern fashion of wearing "howler hats" with kimonos.

Following a sojourn on the continent, our author returned to England on the outbreak of the recent war, and was employed as a government censor during that conflict. Since then this fine flower of British civilization has oscillated between London and Paris, writing innocuous literature and enjoying the life of the last-named city "almost as much as in my Cambridge days."

MEMORIES OF MY LIFE. An Autobiography. By Sarah Bernhardt. D. Appleton & Co., New York.

The second of these books was published in America recently. The autobiography is a reprint of Mme. Bernhardt's book written in 1907. Anyone interested in the intimate life of the great Sarah will find occasion for ironic comment when the two books are read simultaneously, or as nearly so as is possible with two-eyed readers. For Sarah herself writes a book for general consumption, in which only the things she wishes known are set forth. For instance, she prefers to leave a haze about the facts of her birth and parentage. Her mother she speaks of as a beautiful, light-hearted lady of society who traveled much, but who was devoted to her small daughter.

She likewise fails to mention the fact that her father, whom she speaks of so admiringly, failed to legalize his brief union with Julie van Hard, the Flemish Jewess who was Sarah's mother. She is, in fact, respectability itself, with her godfathers and her fine aunts, her mother's elegant apartments and fashionable patrons.

Over her later life Sarah charitably draws the veil, so that we fail to find any explanation of the coming of her adored son, and of the other hectic events in her astonishing career.

After Sarah's death, Mme. Berton, who had been an actress in Sarah's company, told Basil Woon the story of the great actress as it had been told to her from time to time by Sarah herself.

The book written from this material—not translated as is stated on the title page—gives interesting sidelights on Sarah. Since in most details it differs radically from the autobiography, we cannot but wonder where the truth lies.

According to Mme. Berton, Sarah as a child had no longing for the stage. In fact, she was sent to the Conservatoire despite her protests, and then hustled into a small part in the Comedie Francaise, where she failed to attract attention. Discouraged and dissatisfied, she tore up her contract and went her own way, which was not along the straight and narrow path.

Of her triumphs, her intrigues, her plotting and planning for her own advancement, and of her many lovers, Mme. Berton tells with gusto, always maintaining an "I am holier than thou" attitude, which is highly amusing. One thinks constantly of the pot calling the kettle black, but that may be mere prejudice. As it happened, Mme. Berton's husband was one of Sarah's cast-off lovers, which adds complexity to the plot.

At to the whole truth in regard to Sarah Bernhardt and her genius it is yet to be written. In the meantime, we have here two readable books.

OUR SECOND AMERICAN ADVENTURE. By Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

During his second American lecture tour, last year, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, the creator of Sherlock Holmes, had many unusual experiences, and his comments on various phases of American life are given in "Our Second American Adventure." In the course of his journey of 15,000 miles he visited New York, Rochester, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Diego, San Francisco, Portland, Tacoma and Seattle, and returned to New York by way of Canada.

While Sir Arthur discusses many topics, including the dancing craze, jail conditions in Chicago, the Mormons, prohibition, the film world and the oil fields, it is the subject of psychical research that is of primary interest. In this book, therefore, he deals fully with his psychic adventures in America and tells of his investigations of several new developments of human thought and experience.

FREEDOM OF THE SEAS

Longmans, Green & Co. publish "The Freedom of the Seas in History, Law and Politics," by Putman B. Potter, associate professor of political science at the University of Wisconsin. The author calls his subject one of the two or three most vital and profound questions of international political and legal principle, being rivaled in interest and importance only by the question of the balance of power, with one aspect of which it is closely related. The United States has gone to war four times with the object of establishing on firmer foundations the freedom of the sea, yet the subject has not until now been treated in the light of all these great conflicts.

RECENT BOOKS

WHAT THE BUTLER WINKED AT. By Eric Horne (Butler.) Thomas Seltzer, New York.

This book, which bears all the earmarks of genuineness, is the account by a butler of his fifty-seven years of service in the great houses of England in various capacities. In his time he served earls, lords and barons in their town mansions and country seats. That he holds the master and mistress class in contempt is made clear. That he is also capable of instantly recognizing the true aristocrat is also shown. But while he holds the master class generally in contempt his topioftical scorn for the newly rich is both pathetic and amusing.

That he takes both himself and his profession with considerable seriousness is made manifest throughout the work. He details each step in his progress from page boy to butler. It is, in fact, a book that aspiring young men of the servant class in England will do well to read. Likewise if there be youth so minded in this country they will find much in this volume to ponder over. It contains for this class just the inspiration that such books as "From Plowboy to President" holds for the aspiring youth longing to occupy the seats of the mighty at Washington.

It would appear from Eric's account that many of the fine ladies and highborn gentlemen of Britain are anything but ladies and gentlemen in the commonly accepted sense. But while their numerous faults and frailties are dwelt upon at length, we are assured that they are by no means the only offenders against the lofty moral codes of this our very best of civilizations. Indeed, Eric condescends to give us a glimpse of life below stairs in the realm of aristocracy and we are shocked to learn that even the servant class can be loose in its morals. In fact, we find that Eric occasionally had to "wink" at shortcomings among his fellow-servants as well as of those of the master class.

Taken all in all, while a rambling document that at times becomes wearisome, it is a book well worth perusing. For it has much food for thought to those interester in the psychology of the servant class as well as the fine social distinctions that exist among them.

THE GROWTH OF CIVILIZATION. By W. J. Perry. E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

In this work the author continues the exposition of his interesting and notable theories on the birth and progress of civilization, which began in Mr. Perry's book entitled the "Origin of Magic and Religion."

Here he elaborates the theory of a great race which, starting from Egypt about the period of the Fifth Dynasty, disseminated the art of civilization and rule by a military aristocracy over the face of the globe, thus showing war to have been from its inception a disease of civilization, and not as commonly supposed, a heritage from savagery.

Mr. Perry thus throws down a challenge to both scientific theories and popular beliefs that directly opposes the teachings of anthropology, history and philosophy.

He is a young man, still in his thirties, but his books, including "The Children of the Sun," which the Duttons published last year, have already given him a reputation in his chosen field of cultural anthropology as a profound student, a brilliant and original thinker and a forceful, persuasive writer.

YOUNG INDIA. By Mahatma Gandhi. B. W. Heubsch, New York.

A volume of more than 1200 pages comprising a selection from the writings of the great Indian leader whose personality startled the civilized world as has none other in 2000 years. Although many will study and read this book for the facts and opinions it contains, there are many others who will hold it as almost sacred.

The volume reveals Gandhi as no description of the man can do, for here he frankly bares his thoughts on every manner of subject. Of course, he covers political, economic and ethical theories, but his mind is broad enough to perceive the importance of such topics as these, which are selected from hundreds: "Royal Visits, Their Use and Abuse;" "Position of Women;" "Our Fallen Sisters;" "A Wife's Faith;" "Foreign Propaganda;" "Freedom of Opinion;" "The Fear of Death;" "Liberty of the Press;" on "Smoking and Drinking," etc. There is a full account of Gandhi's arrest, trial and imprisonment.

O. HENRY MEMORIAL AWARD PRIZE STORIES FOR 1923. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York.

Short stories are always good for vacation reading. A good collection of contemporary short stories is this, the fifth volume of the series.

The first of sixteen tales in this year's collection is "Prelude," by Edgar Valentine Smith, winner of the first prize, $500 in gold. The story, which appeared in Harper's, is a study of southern "poor white trash," in whom a spark of vitality still lingers. The second is "A Friend of Napoleon," by Richard Connell, who won the second prize of $250 for this amusing tale of a wax-work emperor and his devoted attendant. The third is "Towers of Fame," by Elizabeth Irons Folsom, who was awarded the special prize of $100 for the best brief story under 3000 words.

Among the authors who are represented in the book are Booth Tarkington, Jesse Lynch Wil-

A NAPOLEONIC ROMANCE

In "The Traveler in the Fur Coat" Stanley Weyman Gives Us a Flashing Romance of the Days When the Corsican Was in the Ascendant

BY THOMAS F. FORD

THE TRAVELER IN THE FUR COAT. By Stanley Weyman. Longmans, Green & Co., New York.

A flashing historical romance of the stirring period when Napoleon's sinister shadow was threatening to enshroud all Europe and when but one power stood between him and his goal of world dominion—England.

With this period for his setting, Mr. Weyman has, with that skill which he possesses in an unusual degree, woven a fabric of mystery, intrigue, adventure and romance that holds the reader enthralled from the opening page to the last word.

The story opens just after the battle of Wagram, in which Napoleon defeated the Austrians. His excellency, Percival Ellis, British Envoy Extraordinary to the Austrian Court, is handed his passports. In order to reach England he must cross the turbulent German states. As he is the bearer of secret and vitally important dispatches to his government, it is necessary for him to proceed with great caution. With him are his secretary and two servants, one of whom, Klatz by name, is to act as guide.

The envoy and his suite proceed, his secretary, Cartwright, becomes suspicious of Klatz's loyalty and induces his chief to change the route originally determined upon. This change is suggested by a strange happening. At one of the small villages at which the party stopped for food, the envoy, upon unfolding his napkins, finds a warning note scrawled upon a piece of paper. He is at first inclined to pay no attention to the matter but is finally persuaded, much against his will, to heed the anonymous message. From that time forward events move rapidly. Easy Lessons in AUCTION BRIDGE

New Series

COPYRIGHT 1923 BY HOYLE, JR.

ARTICLE No. 33

There is still a great confusion of thought among Auction players as to the proper type of hand that justifies a take-out of partner's no-trump bid. The confusion of thought is undoubtedly due to lack of understanding of the underlying principles of the take-out.

Suppose the dealer bids one no-trump and second hand passes. With what type of hand are you justified in taking out your partner's no-trump by a bid of two in hearts or spades? In order to understand this point consider the following facts: First, only one more trick is required to score game in a major suit than in no-trump; second, that in a majority of take-outs with five or more of a major suit, at least one more trick will be made at the suit bid than partner could possibly make at no-trump; third, the additional safety of a major suit bid more than offsets the disadvantage of making one more trick to score game. The foregoing are the reasons for the take-out and if followed will give good results. There may be a set-up suit against a no-trump; therefore a suit bid is much safer.

The modern tendency is toward taking out more and more freely. This tendency is probably due to the effect of the informatory double. If Z deals and bids one no-trump and A passes, Y has not the same reason for passing that he did under the old style game. If he has a five card major suit and a fair hand, it is much better to bid the suit at once. If he passes, B, the fourth hand, will probably double or bid and by the time Y has another chance, he may not feel justified in making the bid. As a result of these facts, the modern player is bidding over his partner's no-trump bid more freely than at any time in the history of Auction.

The following cards held by third hand, are a fine example of the merits of the take-out:

Hearts — A, J, 9, 6, 5
Clubs — A, 5
Diamonds — 7, 6, 5, 4
Spades — A, 3

Z, the dealer, bid one no-trump, A passed and Y, with the foregoing hand, properly bid two hearts and made a little slam. If the hand had been played at no-trump, Z could have made only the odd trick. Suppose Y's hand were as follows:

Hearts — J, 9, 7, 6, 5
Clubs — A, 5
Diamonds — 7, 6, 5, 4
Spades — A, 3

With this hand he could have made five hearts but would have been unable to make even one no-trump. Or suppose Y's hand was still weaker:

Hearts — 9, 7, 6, 5, 3
Clubs — A, 5
Diamonds — 7, 6, 5, 4
Spades — A, 3

Y could still have made game at hearts but would have been unable to make the odd at no-trump. The following hands are justifiable take-outs in the major suit provided the dealer has bid one no-trump and second hand has passed. They are all too weak to be of any assistance to a no-trump but fairly sure to make the bid at the suit declaration.

Number 1
Hearts — A, 4
Clubs — 9, 7, 6
Diamonds — 10, 7, 2
Spades — K, J, 9, 8, 5

Number 2
Hearts — 8, 4
Clubs — J, 8, 5, 4
Diamonds — 8, 3
Spades — Q, 10, 9, 5, 8

Number 3
Hearts — Q, 10, 6, 3, 2
Clubs — 6, 5, 3
Diamonds — 7, 2
Spades — 8, 7, 5

With hands Nos. 1 and 2, the bid of two spades would have scored a game that was impossible at no-trump. With hand No. 3, the two spade bid would have been made while it was impossible to make even the odd at no-trump. With any hands of greater strength than those given, always take out partner's no-trump. "The greater the strength, the better the take-out."

Solution to Problem No. 15

Hearts — None
Clubs — A, 10, 5
Diamonds — A, Q
Spades — None

Hearts — None
Clubs — K, J, 9
Diamonds — K, 10
Spades — None

	Y
	Z

Hearts — 4
Clubs — 6, 4, 3
Diamonds — None
Spades — J

Hearts — None
Clubs — Q, 8, 7
Diamonds — 7
Spades — 10

If there are no-trumps and Z is in the lead, how can Y-Z so play the hand that they will win four of the five tricks? Z should lead the seven of diamonds; A must play the 10; Y, the queen; and B, the trey of clubs. Y should now play the ace of diamonds; B, the four of clubs; Z, the 10 of spades; and A, the king of diamonds. Y should now lead the five of clubs, B should play the six of clubs and Z, the queen of clubs. If A wins the trick with the king of clubs, he must lose the next two tricks as Y has the ace ten of clubs. If A refuses to win the trick, Z will lead another club and Y will win with the ace. In either case Y-Z will only lose one club trick.

Problem No. 16

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one spade, A passed, Y passed and B, fourth hand, bid two hearts. Z bid two spades, A bid three hearts and Y and B passed. What should Z now do with the following hand?

Hearts — 10
Clubs — 9, 7, 2
Diamonds — A, K, 9, 5
Spades — K, Q, J, 9, 5

MUSIC AT THE THEATERS

Criterion

English melodies over 400 years old are one of the features in the musical score accompanying "The Sea Hawk," Frank Lloyd's picturization of Rafael Sabatini's book, now in its fourth week at the Criterion Theater. The score, said to be one of the most original yet compiled for synchronization with a motion picture, has several melodies which have been forgotten even by the English people, in whose country they were popular several centuries ago. There are also several English battle melodies which fit into the action of the picture perfectly.

Under the baton of Adolph Tandler the music accompanying the picture has created much favorable comment, as has the special score prepared for the organ by Eddie Horton.

California

Carli D. Elinor, director of the California Theater orchestra, includes a fine variety in his selections for this week. For the concert program for "Her Marriage Vow" his first number is Verdi's gripping overture from "The Force of Destiny." "Neapolitan Nights" is the second number, and Mr. Elinor follows his usual plan by closing with his own arrangement of jazz potpourri.

Loew's

As an atmospheric musical score for the society drama, "For Sale," the locale of which is Paris and New York, Arthur Kay, conducting Loew's State concert orchestra, has selected Wallace's "Maritana" as the overture. Other numbers include selections from "Katinka," by Friml; "Love Song," by Nevin; "Minuet," by Schubert; "Canzonetta," by Hollander; "Intermezzo," by Corensky; "Romance," by Tschaikowsky; "Prologue," by Fanchey, and "Iris," by Friml, as well as divers popular tunes, such as "My Man," "In the Springtime," "Wet Yo' Thumb" and "Say It While Dancing." An elaborate prologue has been arranged as a prelude to the feature picture, entitled "A Night in the Parisian Underworld."

Ambassador Concert

An added feature to the program of the evening concert in the Ambassador Hotel lobby will be several solos by Miss A. Oliver. Following is the program which will be rendered by the Ambassador Sextet under the direction of Josef Rosenfeld:

1. Liebestraum .... Liszt
SONGS
2. (a) "Over the Stepp" .... Gretchaninoff
(b) "The Soldier's Bride" .... Rachmaninoff
(c) "The Rose and the Nightingale" .... Rimsky-Korsakow

ture, was the bugbear of all travelers, especially of those advanced in age, and that the constant consulting of a thermometer, when speeding across latitudes and longitudes, and taking precautions accordingly, staved off bodily ill health.

All present agreed that this was so and that Prof. Inouye's gift to the departing guest was a very thoughtful one to make. They also decided to invest Prof. Inouye with a new title and conferred on him that of doctor of thermometer. The distinction has caught on; Prof. Inouye is referred to by his colleagues by the Japanese rendering of doctor of thermometer, the pupils also refer to him thus, while, it is reported, that a Tokio "Who's Who," just in the course of being handed to the printer, unlocked one of its pages and added doctor of thermometer to the other distinctions that Prof. Inouye holds.

Why He Raises His Hat to Her

Removing the hat has always, in our part of the world, been a token of respect on the part of men. In the old days, the serf would snatch off his hat on the approach of his master. And, later on, the armed knight removed his helmet while with his friends in token of trust, and as a sign that defense was no longer needed.

From these two customs grew up the modern habit of raising one's hat, implying at once friendship, trust or servitude.

In Europe the hat is raised not only to women, but to men as well.—[Exchange.

JONES SYNCOPATERS AT BILTMORE

One of the most noteworthy events on the Biltmore's social program during the past week was the appearance of Isham Jones and his celebrated dance orchestra from Chicago, who syncopated an evening away in the ballroom for the benefit of the many prominent local business men representing the Brunswick organization, for whom this band makes phonograph records.

Arriving from the Orpheum early in the evening, Jones and his musical satellites started immediately to afford music for the hundreds present who gathered to dance to his tuneful strains. Miss Jane Green, another vaudeville headliner, accompanied Mr. Jones and shared with him in the enthusiastic welcome accorded these artists.

Other diversified entertainment numbers served to keep the gathering in excellent spirits throughout the evening, one dedicated to the crowning achievement of American jazz as conceived by one of its most famous eastern exponents.

Odd Cure for Backache

It is the custom among the workers in the field in parts of Great Britain when their backs become tired from bending over with their short shanked hoes to lie down, faces to the ground and to have a friend step across the lower part of the back—in the lumbar region—several times, until the pain and fatigue is removed.

A NAPOLEONIC LOVE STORY

diplomacy—the story of Benjamin Bathurst (son of the Bishop of Norwich and nephew of Lord Bathurst, at one time Foreign Secretary,) who at the age of 25 was accredited to Austria, in the spring of 1809, as Envoy Extraordinary. Upon the defeat of the Austrians at Wagram Bathurst was compelled to retire, and he traveled homeward by way of Germany, then closed to the English, against whom Napoleon had united the whole continent. At Perleberg on the Prussian frontier, traveling with Prussian passports, he disappeared, and though England made strenuous efforts to discover the secret of his fate, and though his wife was permitted to travel on the continent and to make inquiries, the Emperor himself authorizing her, the truth was never brought to light, and is still wholly in question. Nor were the important dispatches he carried ever recovered.

Much of the story in "The Traveler" is, of course, fiction, and the character of Percival Ellis is not drawn from that of Bathurst; but the main facts of the envoys' disappearance have been incorporated. The outlines of the historical facts may be found in the Dictionary of National Biography under "Benjamin Bathurst," and many of the details in the "Life of Bishop Bathurst," his father, and a careful examination of the problem has, by an odd coincidence, been published since "The Traveler in the Fur Cloak" was completed.

This story should prove ideal material for the screen. Here are all the elements of which such stuff is ideally compounded, the quaint costumery of the period, the lonely German roads with their picturesque taverns, the very coaches which were in those days the chief mode of transportation. Then there is the shadow of mystery that surrounds the strange and sudden disappearance of the British envoy, the wild adventures of his secretary and over all the sunset glow of that high romance so dear to the heart of the gallant gentlemen who wield the director's megaphone.

RECENT DOINGS AMONG WRITERS

fly fishing; an avocation that offords admirable practice for the more arduous pursuit of literary material.

Hatcher Hughes, author of "Hell Bent for Heaven," says that the keynote of this play which won the Pulitzer Prize for 1923 and which has just been published in book form by Harpers, is "a people healthy enough and courageous enough to have a sense of humor even in the face of death."

The Macaulay Co., has acquired from Boni & Liveright, the reprint rights for "Flaming Youth," by Warner Fabian, and "Kimono," by John Paris. The new editions will be ready this month. At the same time Macaulay will bring out reprint editions of Floyd Dell's "Moon-Calf" and "The Briary-Bush," recently acquired from Knopf. Another addition to the ranks of reprint fiction is "Behold the Woman," by T. Everett Harre which Macaulay has taken over from Lippincott.

"Gypsy Fires in America," by Irving Brown, author of "Nights and Days on the Gypsy Trail," is announced for early publication by Harpers. In America, according to the author, are to be found more varied types of true Romanies than in any other country.

Dr. I. Singer of Vienna, translator of Dreiser's "American Commonwealth" and several of Upton Sinclair's works, is translating King C. Gillette's "The People's Corporation," published here by Boni & Liveright, into German.

Henry James Forman's "Guilt" (Boni & Liveright) is to be published in Munich and hailed as the first specimen of the psychiatric detective story.

Arthur Guiterman is passing the summer in the Rocky Mountains, camping, climbing, fishing and riding. He assures the layman that poets don't go around with a pad and pencil while on a vacation, setting down rhymes about dawns and sunsets and the songs of birds, etc. Arthur Guiterman fans will soon be able to buy a uniform boxed edition of his works, as Harpers announce that this edition will be published within a few weeks.

A. C. Benson, whose "From a College Window" has become a classic, is the author of two books on the recent Putnam list. One is "The Trefoil," a biographical treatment of his father, the late Archbishop of Canterbury, and the other is "Memories and Friends," which deals with such Victorian figures as Mrs. Olyphant, Oscar Browning and many others.

Edwin Borkman has this to say in the Outlook of Paul Scott Mowrer's book, recently published by E. P. Dutton & Co.: "There are few things which this country needs more badly just now than books like Paul Scott Mowrer's 'Our Foreign Affairs.' What they (other nations) expect from us and have a right to expect is team work, unstinted help on a basis of sympathetic mutual understanding. The greatest obstacle in the way of such action is our ignorance; the next greatest is the false pride that springs from that ignorance Toward the removal of both these obstacles Mr. Mowrer's new book furnishes a most effective impulse. It covers practically every aspect of our foreign relationships, and it does so in a peculiarly able, balanced and lucid manner."

It is a severe indictment of our Presidential campaigns and the public spirit of our citizens that Charles Merz makes in his shrewd analysis of what he calls "The calls "Great American Game of Presidential Elections," in the July Century.

S. C. Staley, director of the men's gymnasium of the University of Illinois, has collected a vast number of games of all kinds, culled from more than 100 books, countless magazines and folders in five different languages. This material will be published in July under the title, "Games, Contests and Relays" (A. S. Barnes & Co., publishers,) and will include over 100 diagrams and illustrations.

S. H. Sime, an artist whose work has been rapidly coming to the fore in London, and who is known to all readers of British weeklies and art journals, is the illustrator of Lord Dunsany's novel, "The King of Elfland's Daughter," which the Putnams will issue shortly. His talent is one closely related to that of Lord Dunsany, and has the same fantastic, beautiful qualities as the writings of the Irish lord. Dunsany, in a recent letter to his publishers, says that the elfland of his story runs through Kent, but unfortunately "villas and motors and advertisements will soon push it away altogether."

EXERCISES FOR HEALTH AND CORRECTION. By Frank D. Dickson, M.D., and Rex. L. Diveley, M.D. J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia and London.

A plain and practical work on physical culture for health and development.

The written text, which is made as brief as possible, is supplemented with many full-page illustrations which clearly explain the movements embodied in each exercise. As a manual of self-instruction this work will be found of particular value.

WERE STRAYBERRIES

The name of the strawberry is explained by some as applying to the custom of throwing straw on the ground about the plants to keep the fruit clean of the dirt of the soil. This is not the case. The plain fact of the matter is that the name is not strawberry at all. Originally this fruit was called the "strayberry," from the habits its runners possess of rambling feet away from the parent plant.

Gooseberry, again, has nothing do with "geese." The bush owes its name to its long thorns, resembling those of gorse, and was originally "gorseberry."

The cranberry should really be "craneberry," because of its long slender stem and branches.

Names of most common fruits are either contractions or corruption. Damsons, for instance, are really plums from Damascus, though quite what they have to do with that Syrian city is a little doubtful, while the so-called Mayduke cherries should be "Medoc" cherries, from the part of France where they were first grown.

Currants, of course, are named from their place of origin, the Greek city of Corinth, while cherries commemorate Cerasus, a town in Asia Minor.

The Whale's Breath

The herring fishermen of the English coast, while searching the sea for their quarry, follow certain signs which indicate the presence of the fish. One of these signs is the presence of a certain whale which lives on the herring. This whale stays around in close proximity to the fishermen while they are at work and seems to regard them as his friends, as indeed they are. Only one habit of his annoys them. If he breathes out one long sigh in the direction of the working crew they have to fly for their lives, for his breath is a suffocating stench.

There are stories that sometimes a fresh and ignorant young deckie has been rude to the herring whale, thrust a boat-hook down his throat, for instance. Thus insulted the whale loses his temper, and will destroy a fleet of nets.

SCHOOLMA'AM AS WIFE

Has Tendency to Feel Superior to Husband, Writer Says

Girls who have made their living by teaching the young idea seldom make perfect wives. The reason they do not make perfect wives is not because of their want of experience, however, but for the same reason that the leader of the orchestra would froth at the mouth when invited to play second fiddle

The teacher deals with little fellows who are almost wholly empty of knowledge. Because she now knows so much more than they even hope to learn, they stand always agape with awe. Every feminine pedagogue is a heroine to her pupils. She is Caesar. The pupils are but slaves, eager to win her goodwill.

Let any man be told a sufficient number of times that he is a wonder, and he will begin to need a steel hat-band. Let the schoolma'am labor for two or more years in an atmosphere of adoration, where her store of knowledge is many times greater than the store possessed by ary of her pupils, and she will be ready to accept the verdict of the youngsters that one small head does well to contain all the knowledge she has accumulated.

Now let her marry, and the fun begins.

Her husband is not a hero, but a small boy in all ways similar to those she wrestled in the third grade. Her husband has forgotten all he ever knew of algebra. She feels superior to him.

As to money, she no longer expects payment for her labors at the end of each month. She must ask for what she gets. Let her love as she will, her pride will cringe and her voice will shake when she asks for money to buy a new frock. Shame will be her daily portion. She will long for the fleshpots of Egypt. And unless she is handled tactfully she will be clamoring for independence within a fortnight, and the only way one can keep her contented is to deliver up the family purse so that she may take what she will, and to confess daily that he was very lucky to win such a prize in a world full of ordinary women.—[Baltimore Sun.

JUST GIVE 'EM ROPE

During a recent political campaign two deacons of the same faith religiously, but on the opposite sides of the fence politically, attended prayer meeting services.

"O Lord," intoned the Republican deacon, "I pray Thee that the Republicans may hang together—"

"Amen," ejaculated the Democrat.

"But not, O Lord," continued the Republican, "in the sense that my Democratic brother means, but in the sense of accord and concord."

"Any cord'll do, Lord; any cord'll do!" was the Democrat's closing thrust.—[Watchman-Examiner.

SICK WOMAN MADE HAPPY

Entirely Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mart, Texas.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to build me up as I was all run-down, nervous and sick. I ached and hurt all over so that I was often compelled to go to bed, and I had to have most of my work done. No medicine seemed to help me until one of my neighbors who was taking the Vegetable Compound insisted on me trying a bottle of it. The medicine helped me from the first, and the best of all is that I can even sew again without that awful, nervous feeling I was used to having. And I used to take crying spells, with such a blue feeling that I cannot explain. Now all that has left me. I feel so cheerful, and I have gained in weight, sleep well and eat hearty. Oh! I wish I had words to express what this medicine has done for me! I am a housekeeper and do every thing from the sewing to the washing now and it doesn't hurt me. You may use my letter in any way you wish. I will be glad to help any suffering woman to the road of health and happiness."—Mrs. B. F. BRANNON, 404 Travis Ave., Mart, Texas

Use Lemons to Whiten Skin

The only harmless way to bleach the skin white is to mix the juice of two lemons with three ounces of Orchard White, which any druggist will supply for a few cents. Shake well in a bottle, and you have a whole quarter-pint of the most wonderful skin whitener, softener and beautifier.

Massage this sweetly fragrant lemon bleach into the face, neck, arms and hands. It can not irritate. Famous stage beauties use it to bring that clear, youthful skin and rosy-white complexion; also as a freckle, sunburn and tan bleach. You must mix this remarkable lotion yourself. It can not be bought ready to use because it acts best immediately after it is prepared.—[Advertisement.

POPULAR AIR HAS APPEAL, SAYS ADELE

Miss Rowland Declares Slightest Affectation in Vaudeville Proves Fatal

"If you will examine the successful popular song, you will find in it a direct appeal," says Adele Rowland, who plays at the Orpheum this week. "The slightest assumption of insincerity or affectation is fatal. Only recently a certain artist, prominent in the concert field, failed ingloriously, because she had the notion that she must adopt an affected pose. She would clinch her heart, shut her eyes, and otherwise prove herself utterly devoid of real feeling. Was the audience fooled? Not for a moment; exit from vaudeville one more artist.

"Vaudeville should be a glorious and priceless experience for most artists. Singers should learn to appreciate the necessity of clean-cut enunciation, the need of artfully contrasted songs. Indistinct enunciation is unknown to vaudeville; the audiences would put a swift end to such a careless artist. As time is a vital factor, each act being permitted a certain number of minutes, there can be no art pauses or stops; each second is a jewel in vaudeville and must be strictly accounted for. A recital artist can keep her audience waiting; the bravest heart among the vaudeville artists would hesitate to commit this offense against the custom—'clock-work precision always.'

"But, of course, there is a vast difference between these two types; the recital artist usually pays to appear before her audience; the vaudeville entertainer is paid.

"There is no free list in vaudeville. Think of most recitalists, without a few sheaves of tickets at their disposal.

"Another point of their paramount importance is that of personal attractiveness. I do not mean that a woman need be beautiful to succeed on the vaudeville stage, but she must possess that indefinable something — personal charm. And she must understand the art of dressing well for, as I have remarked, audiences are objective, the eye must be satisfied.

"As to the kind of music preferred — phonographs have done marvels in the way of disseminating musical knowledge. Almost any number that is popular as a record, I might say, will be eagerly heard by a vaudeville audience. Debussy, Wagner and Verdi find as warm a welcome as any popular balladist, if they are knowingly presented.

"Do I believe a new era is coming in vaudeville? I do. One reason for the generally low standard of music in vaudeville long ago was the inability of the managers to discriminate. In the old days a mediocre singer, a pianist or a violinist would be booked simply because he had a formidable foreign name. The audiences were disgusted, of course, just like any concert audience. After a while the managers became suspicious of artists who proclaimed themselves as purveyors of 'high class' music, and justly so. Today a new spirit of understanding prevails.

"Any artist who now wishes a contract must appear before a representative body of managers and agents. These hearings are in the forenoon, usually, on just the bare stage with only a grand piano.

Blonde Brunette Tresses Puzzle for Allene Ray

Does the wearing of wigs in films lessen the star's popularity?

Many luminaries of the screen often have discarded a popular play or story because it required a wig in a few scenes, or throughout the film.

The question came to Allene Ray after she had finished reading the script for "The Fortieth Door," her latest serial to be released by Pathe. "The Fortieth Door" had an Egyptian girl for a heroine.

Miss Ray is a beautiful blonde, and to keep within the serial, it would be impossible for her to use her own hair. She realized that new fans acquired through "The Fortieth Door" would remember her only as a brunette, while others who knew her as a blonde, would become confused and perhaps disappointed at the change.

With a shrug of the shoulders she donned the brown wig and went to work. Then came the shower of fan letters.

The brunette fans were almost tied with the blonde fans, which only put her in a state of perplexity.

Finally it was decided that she would make another serial wearing a brunette wig. That would determine the controversy. "Ten Scars Make a Man" will be completed soon and then the pretty star will know.

LANDIS IS SCENARIST

Young Star Spends Evenings These Days on Script of "Tumbleweed"

Cullen Landis is not after any of the laurels of the high-priced scenario writers, nevertheless the actor's evenings these days are concentrated on "Tumbleweed," the Hal Everts story which First National will film, William Nigh directing, with Landis in the leading male role. Landis now is established at New Rochelle with Nigh at his apartment and the two are rewriting in part the script of "Tumbleweed," which will go into production immediately when "Born Rich" is completed. Rain has held up the picture, according to Landis, who anticipates its completion the third week in July.

It will be news to many of the young star's admirers to learn that he can operate a typewriter. But, as a matter of fact, when he was at the Old Balboa studios where he did everything, one of his jobs in the evenings was putting into continuity the episodes to be shot the next day.

"Tumbleweed" is one of the most popular of the western romances and the plan is to make it a special feature, so Landis is provided with a splendid opportunity for virile characterization with romantic appeal.

MEN, A MESSAGE TO YOU—

There are thousands of men in Los Angeles who are dissatisfied with their present positions. They are filling the ranks of bookkeepers, auditors, struggling lawyers, dentists, shoe clerks, mechanics, boiler makers, railroad men who realize they are slowly losing out in the battle for a greater degree of success.

They all have ability lying dormant, only needing the right thing or the right situation, or the proper aid to bring out and develop that power to do bigger and better things.

Don't let others keep telling you that you are not entitled to the better things in life; you are, and this message is sent out to you by a person who was in the same predicament a few years ago.

The selling profession in our line is the highest paid in America. To you men who are now employed I will give a free training that will not interfere with your present occupation. This training will mean thousands and thousands of dollars to you, it will mean big positions, it will mean happiness for you and your family, something which you know is denied you now.

Be here promptly at 7:30 p.m., Monday, July 21.

LIFE INSURANCE AS A CAREER IS ONE OF THE HIGHEST AND BEST BOTH IN EARNING POSSIBILITIES AND SERVICE.
THE FAMOUS PACIFIC MUTUAL POLICY "IT PAYS 5 WAYS."
IS A WINNER FOR THE INSURED AND THE SALESMAN.
To be successful requires training; our practical method of training under personal supervision will enable high class men, who can and will apply themselves, to qualify for a successful career. To eliminate the merely curious, we require a nominal deposit to show good faith, which is refunded under certain conditions.
The company is 56 years old. Its assets exceed eighty millions.
For particulars apply to WALTER R. HOEFFLIN, assistant manager, 322 Pacific Mutual Bldg., Los Angeles.

WE MUST HAVE
Several exceptionally high-grade salesmen at once; men who can assimilate the details of our proposition and present them intelligently. This is an oil proposition of genuine merit, radically different from the usual thing. We furnish bona fide leads and pay a very liberal commission. The company is strictly a co-operative one with several hundred live stockholders who are all prospects for additional subscriptions. Many stockholders have subscribed as often as eight and ten distinct times. If you are capable of presenting this proposition in a businesslike way to people who have every confidence in it, your earnings will be steady and unusually large. Apply Monday morning to Mr. Jenner, 6912½ HOLLYWOOD BLVD. Phone GRanite 5701.

TROY MOTOR SALES CO.,

THE WHOLE TOWN IS TALKING!

About Bozzani's monster sale of used cars. Listen brother, when you can buy a Buick roadster with a California top for $250, or a Maxwell coupe for $445, or a dandy Ford sedan for $325, and a Gardner touring for $175, then you had better hurry before they are all gone.

It would bust me a small fortune to advertise every car in the newspaper, so I will leave it to your sense of good judgment to look our stock over before buying.

We are not in the used car business, consequently every car sold you has been traded in on new Willys-Knights and we do not have to make a second profit from used car buyers.

We give liberal terms and are open evenings.

BOZZANI MOTOR CO.,
Sunset at Broadway.

ZOOM!

The battle is on! Brother do you see those people milling around 617 N. Broadway? Well, they are just part of the crowd that are looking over Bozzani's huge stock of used cars now on sale. Every summer we clean house. Join the crowd, be a lucky buyer. Do not take chances, buy from Bozzani and save the difference.

CURIOUS ANIMALS

Like a vast prehistoric page from nature's wonder book, Australia holds great interest for the naturalist and traveler because of the peculiar animals found there, many of them being members of species that have long been extinct in Asia and America. Some of them afford connecting links by which scholars are able to trace animal life of the present back through the ages. Mammals that lay eggs, bears about the size of French poodles, opossums that fly, wolves striped like tigers and birds that laugh, are among the queer specimens found in this topsy-turvy land. One of the oddest animals in the world makes its home in Australia, the platypus, an amphibious creature which has fur, webbed feet and a bill like a duck. The lyre bird, a magnificent specimen that struts about like a golden pheasant or peacock and has a tail shaped like the musical instrument from which it is named, is another of the many interesting creatures native to the island continent.—[Popular Mechanics.

[illegible] Farmer's figures comparing [illegible] six months of 1921, 1922, [illegible] and 1924 reflect the growth [illegible] Angeles. Taking the value [illegible] property involved, the first [illegible] showed an increase [illegible] of 21.56 per cent. The [illegible] months of 1923 registered [illegible] over 1921 of 103 per cent, [illegible] a record of 145 [illegible] in comparison [illegible]

[illegible] it is contended that [illegible] true in one title company [illegible] other title companies [illegible] proportion, so that [illegible] the fluctuations of [illegible] market for the last [illegible] is mirrored in the same [illegible] the records of other insti[illegible] of like character in this [illegible] Southern California.

[illegible] pointed out that the fore[illegible] observations re[illegible] the transition being [illegible] by the real estate mar[illegible] the present economic read[illegible] which, it is asserted by [illegible] is now taking [illegible]

[illegible] emphasized that with the rapid growth of a large city, inevitably real estate transactions are to assume greater proportions.

It is also stated by real estate men that Mr. Farmer's statistics substantially refute the distorted rumors current in the East to the effect that a marked slump is taking place in Los Angeles development.

Mr. Farmer's figures simply back up the story told by bank clearings, national bank deposit increases and like comparison so ably tabulated by the Chamber of Commerce and other organizations to show the real condition of Los Angeles at the present time.

ORDER PLAN DRAWN FOR NEW PLUNGE

Salt Water Swimming Club Pool Will be One of Country's Largest

Ben D. Harris, president of the Egyptian Salt Water Swimming Club, announced yesterday that he has completed arrangements with Architect Albert C. Martin for the drawing of the final plans for the erection of the largest salt water swimming pool in the world. A wave maker will be installed so that the plunge will have all the appearance of the ocean. The plunge will be situated on Mesa Drive and Thirty-sixth street and will be of Egyptian style in architecture. The main plunge will be 300x100, and three smaller plunges will be installed for women and children.

Many features will be installed in the building including mah jongg rooms, private sleeping rooms, tub baths, turkish baths, gymnasium, handball court, ballroom, restaurant and ice cream parlor. The entire plunge will be lined with tile, and the salt water will be pumped direct from the ocean.

NEW BUILDINGS GOING UP IN HOME GARDENS

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HOME GARDENS, July 19.—During the past week brick work on the new theater building owned by S. L. Stofel and A. W. Swanson was completed, and the contractors now have a force of men at work on the interior. It is expected the structure will be opened to the public by September 1, next.

V. E. Johnson will soon begin the erection of a store building on Tweedy Boulevard which will be two stories high and of brick. It will cost about $30,000. In dimensions it's to be 75 by 90 feet. Another brick building is to be built on the lot owned by John Griff. Two other brick business buildings are being contemplated for this section. All these structures are being set back from the building line to allow for a contemplated eighty-foot boulevard.

FACT AND COMMENT

There is a great deal to be said in favor of the high-pressure salesman and saleswoman. Both have contributed mightily to the general prosperity of the nation. They have opened new fields, charted new trade routes and have had a large part in the development of the country. They are the missionaries of business and commerce and as such deserve due credit.

But high-pressure salesmanship in the real-estate profession here is somewhat overdone. It too often takes the tone of bullying. It becomes not a question of selling the prospective customer, but of forcing him to buy even against his or her better judgment.

Such methods, it is true, are only infrequently employed and, even in these cases, the individual salesman, and not the firm which employs him is responsible. It is also true that the real-estate firm has no method of telling in advance the type of men whom it employs. It can obtain a general estimate of the man or woman from his or her previous record, but farther than this it cannot go. There is this much that the firm can do, however: It can discountenance such practices and can get rid of the men and women employing them.

A man or woman need not buy if they do not wish to. That is, of course, true. But there have been too many instances in the past where old men and women have been taken on excursions by real-estate salesmen and practically forced to buy. Even the hardened individual is not entirely immune from the rapid-fire attack launched at him by such a salesman.

But the greatest objection against such methods is that it is not necessary to employ them. Property of any merit in Southern California will almost sell itself sooner or later. The real-estate business is too solidly intrenched in Southern California to need the aid of unscrupulous salesmen.

It is true that, even in cases where the individual buys almost against his will and better judgment, that he has not been "gold-bricked." In the end he no doubt will realize a profit from the more

FIVE STRUCTURES LISTED

Architects and Builders Report New Additions to Sky Line of Los Angeles and Santa Monica

What is planned to be one of the finest beach club buildings on the Coast is the six-story Club Casa Del Mar to be erected at the foot of Pico Boulevard at Santa Monica, at a cost representing more than $1,000,000. A California charter has been granted to the club, which is being sponsored by prominent business men of Southern California. Architect Charles F. Plummer is the architect.

Club Casa Del Mar marks a radical departure in club buildings, in that the ground is already acquired, and the handsome structure will be financed with private capital and ready for occupancy before the last of the club memberships have been allotted. Architects' plans are being drawn, excavation will begin within thirty days, and building operations within ninety days.

START OPERATIONS

Several small buildings now occupy the club site, but will be removed at once, and a fence inclosing the entire property will be erected so that club members will have the benefit of an exclusive bathing beach this summer.

Site of this club property possesses a beach frontage of 210 feet and extends back from hightide 375 feet to Appian Way as the eastern extremity, the city park as its south boundary, and Pico Boulevard as its north boundary, with an uninterrupted view of the ocean.

Club Casa Del Mar is to be an exclusive social club organized to satisfy a demand of the socially-elite of Los Angeles and neighboring cities for a seaside clubhouse with excellent service and accommodations for the amusement and enjoyment of club life and ocean bathing at a private beach. Two floors of the building will be devoted to sleeping apartments.

Appointments will include every facility for comfort and luxury, and will particularly feature an indoor swimming pool with continuous running, tempered sea water, when surf bathing is not desired.

DINING FACILITIES

Interior plans for the magnificent structure include a dining and ballroom, spacious lounge and lobby, also private dining rooms, tea room, grill and sun porches where meals can be served or mah jongg or other games can be played out-of-doors, protected from any possible inclement weather. Comprehensive landscaping will give the clubhouse an artistic setting.

Club organization headquarters have been established in Los Angeles. W. Y. Jackman has been engaged as organization director. Mr. Jackman's experience in club organization work should be a guarantee of rapid success in the enrollment of the membership.

AUTO BUILDING

One of the largest improvements announced for the development of South Figueroa street is the construction of a $200,000 structure, according to statement of R. O. Searle. It is especially designed for retailing automotive merchandise and services of all descriptions.

This building, which will be known as the Motor Marte, is to have 220 feet frontage on Figueroa street, extending from Twenty-first to Twenty-second street. Plans have been drawn by Russell & Alpaugh, architects. Luther T. Mayo is in charge of construction work.

The Motor Marte embodies a plan that is entirely new in Los Angeles. In some easter cities, such as Boston and Minneapolis, it has proven very successful, both to the merchants and the customers of their establishment.

Here in one location motorists will be able to get accessory or automobile service. Figueroa street, because of its automobile traffic and its fame as the automobile row of Los Angeles, makes an ideal location for an automotive shopping center of this description.

On the first floor there will be thirty stores, each devoted to a separate noncompeting line of business. The second floor will contain offices and shop space with a connecting ramp.

SKATING RINK

The Los Angeles Ice Skating Association, of which C. E. Hopkins is manager, proposes to build for ice hockey and skating during the coming fall and winter, an ice rink to be known as the Los Angeles Ice Palace. This building, it is expected, will make Los Angeles the center of the two great winter sports, ice hockey and skating. Artificial ice will provide the hard surface necessary for these games.

Mr. Hopkins, who has visited ice plants and ice palaces all over the country to get ideas and see such plants in operation, says there is no doubt that good ice could be furnished even in summer here, not to mention winter. Architect's plans show that the ice surface will be 80x180 feet and that the seating capacity will be 3500, with provision for enlarging if necessary.

There will be rest rooms, refreshment rooms, skate attaching rooms and all the adjuncts which have been found advisable in other cities where ice rinks are in operation. Mr. Hopkins has conferred with building and operators of ice palaces elsewhere and is in a position to take advantage of the best points of each. Cost is $200,000.

DENTAL BUILDING

Another fine addition to the group of buildings operated by the Community Dental Clinic is the one to be erected on the northwest corner of Soto street and Brooklyn avenue at a cost of $60,000, including equipment. This new building will have a frontage of 144 feet on Brooklyn and 62 feet on Soto street.

According to Dr. R. B. Stone, manager of the clinic, the building

President Henry P. Barbour of the California Real Estate Association has named the following as members of the legislative committee of the California Real Estate Association:

Freeman H. Bloodgood, Santa Ana, chairman; William H. Akin, W. L. Brent, Los Angeles; C. E. Arnold, San Diego; F. R. Caldwell, Oakland; B. H. Spalding, Los Angeles; Leslie E. Burks, San Francisco; Chris R. Jones, Sacramento; E. J. Morrissey, Sacramento; W. F. Price, Santa Rosa; Bruce Cornwall, San Francisco; Frazier O. Reed, San Jose; M. V. Hartranft, Tujunga; Frank D. Parent, Inglewood.

The committee will meet shortly to draft plans for the forthcoming legislative session. It is the intention of the members to have everything in shape to present to the members of the association at the annual convention in Pasadena in October.

Legislation to be Discussed at Convention

What promises to be one of the most important sessions of the leaders in the real estate and financial world of California will take place at Catalina Island September 11, 12 and 13 next, when the California Title Men's Association and the California Bankers Association will hold conventions at the invitation of the President of the California Title Men's Association, President Henry P. Barbour of the California Real Estate Association will send a representative to address a joint meeting on real estate legislation.

It is considered likely under a plan now being formulated by the California Real Estate Association, that several changes will be asked in the real estate laws of the State. Efforts are under way to formulate a program to harmonize the real property laws of the State to make for greater efficiency and speedier release on the part of the title companies.

BOND ISSUES ARE PROPOSED

Subcommittees Report to Glendale City Council Following Investigation of Conditions

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

GLENDALE, July 19.—Important recommendations in connection with proposed bond issues for Glendale were made Wednesday morning in reports by subcommittees to the general bond committee selected a few weeks ago by the City Council.

The power-plant committee, headed by R. L. Kent, recommended that nothing be done at this time in the way of voting bonds for the construction of a plant.

W. L. Twining of the fire protection committee urged that a bond issue for $60,000 be called for the purpose of bringing the fire department up to the proper standard for a city of the size of Glendale.

The committee on police and fire alarm systems recommended that a bond issue for $99,722 be called for the establishment of features of that character.

That a garbage-disposal plant is absolutely necessary for Glendale was the report of the committee appointed to investigate, headed by H. M. Bennett, and a bond issue for $50,000 should be called at the earliest possible moment.

A recommendation that nothing be done in connection with erecting new and permanent bridges over the Verdugo Wash until steps are taken for improving the wash.

The civic center committee reported that the Harvard High School plant should be purchased and that $650,000 be named for the purpose.

BUILDERS WARNED OF FAKE AGENT

Man Posing as Solicitor for Association Said to be Spurious

E. Earl Glass, executive secretary of the Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors of America, yesterday issued a warning to all local construction firms and building contractors to beware of solicitors purporting to represent the association in obtaining membership fees.

"About a year ago," said Mr. Glass, "a number of building contractors, operating on both small and large scales throughout Southern California, were defrauded by a man who claimed to represent the Associated General Contractors as a membership solicitor. His operations were reported to police in Los Angeles and surrounding suburban communities and he disappeared.

"Recently our office was notified of similar operations by several persons who claimed to be representatives of local construction organizations affiliated with a national association of builders. Since there is no national organization of builders other than the Associated General Contractors, and since that body employs no solicitors or field workers of any kind, it is important that the statements of persons claiming to be membership salesmen should be rigidly investigated before any funds are paid to them."

CAMPBELL COMPANY HAS ANNUAL PICNIC

Glendora Foothill School and true California sunshine furnished an ideal setting for the W. Ross Campbell Company annual picnic which took place Wednesday.

The picnic, which was attended by all members of the Campbell organization, was featured by excellent meals and a variety of sports, such as swimming, baseball and tennis. In the evening dancing was participated in.

REALTY LICENSE DRIVE PLANNED

Keiser to Bring State Statute Violators to Justice

Many Complaints Received of Unauthorized Sales

Los Angeles Board Pledges Aid in Campaign

State Real Estate Commissioner Edwin T. Keiser, has received many complaints that unlicensed persons are accepting commissions or fees for real estate transactions in California, and yesterday announced his determination to launch a Statewide campaign to bring to justice these violators of the State laws.

The act creating a State real estate department makes it a felony for any person to accept emoluments of any kind for participation in a real estate transaction or deal unless such person is a licensed broker or salesman.

Commissioner Keiser has appealed to the real estate organizations and realty brokers throughout the State, to co-operate with him in this undertaking. Complaints are to be asked against all persons considered guilty of violation of the law, in the Commissioner's effort to clean up the situation and vigorous prosecution of all such cases is promised.

W. L. Brent, president of the Los Angeles Realty Board, yesterday made the following statement:

"The Los Angeles Realty Board approves the attitude of State Commissioner Keiser and will co-operate in every way to aid him wherever possible in carrying out the provisions of the statutes. Our entire organization will be notified of this action of the Commissioner, and asked to unite in the rigid enforcement of the feature of the California Real Estate Act.

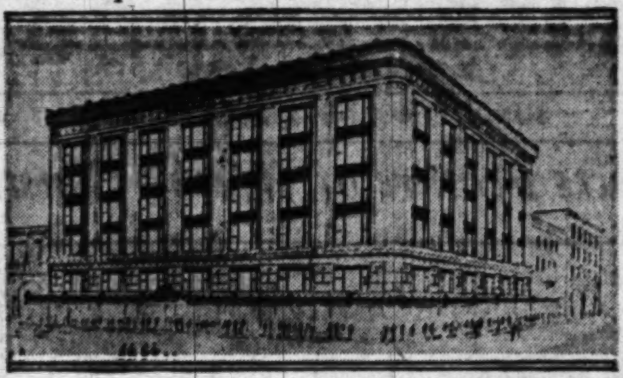
"Members of the Los Angeles Realty Board were instrumental in initiating and carrying through to a successful conclusion the campaign which resulted in the passage of the act and subsequent amendments. So it can be readily understood that the membership will now combine in an effort to enforce both the letter and the spirit of this legislation written on the statute books for the protection of the public.

"It is self evident that the average person is much more helpless in the hands of such an unlicensed individual, if he proves to be unscrupulous, than one dealing with parties regularly licensed by an authorized agency of the State government."

DEMAND OWNERS SIGN ALL LISTINGS

The Alhambra Realty Board and the Long Beach board have passed amendments to their by-laws making it imperative for the owner to sign a listing before it will be taken by any member of either realty board. This decision was reached after it was ascertained that listings had been given without due authority and that when the real estate broker appeared with the client it was impossible to deliver the property. Hence the rigid enforcement of the amendment will be demanded.

Department Store to Be Built



For Radin & Kamp Firm

Preliminary plans for a new building at Fresno have been completed by the R. F. Felchin Company. Cost is $500,000.

FRESNO BUILDING PLANNED

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

FRESNO, July 19. — Work is progressing rapidly on wrecking the Edgerly Building at the corner of Fulton and Tulare streets, and the Ruth Building adjoining on Fulton street, which will be replaced by the new $500,000 home of the Radin & Kamp Department Store.

Construction on the Radin & Kamp Building will start in August or as soon as the old buildings are wrecked. It will be completed before September 1, 1925. Plans call for a five-story building with a frontage of 165 feet on Fulton street and 150 feet on Tulare street. The entire building will be used by the department store and will be the largest floor space devoted to a similar institution in interior California.

The present four-story building of the Radin & Kamp store on Tulare street has been sold to the Bank of Italy. It is 100x100 feet and adjoins the Fresno branch of Bank of Italy. The bank will take possession of the property September 1, 1925. It is understood that the bank may tear down the old Radin & Kamp Building to be replaced by a building to conform with the Fresno branch building, a ten-story structure, and to house the First Branch Bank now located at Mariposa and Broadway.

FACT AND COMMENT

or less forced transaction. But he remains dissatisfied. He is apt to turn knocker and to condemn everything in Southern California generally. This has not infrequently happened. The real-estate dealers cannot afford to antagonize prospective customers by creating ill feeling among a few who have been "high-pressured" into buying.

Forward March

Concrete evidence of the steady progress of Los Angeles toward industrial supremacy is given in figures compiled by the Chamber of Commerce which were released last week. Fifty-one nationally known concerns are manufacturing their product in this city. This does not include hundreds of other plants opertaing here, many of which are on the threshold of world distribution for their goods.

Eighteen of these nationally known manufacturing establishments located in Los Angeles during the last year alone. Scores of smaller factories also were added to the list during the same period.

It is evident that keen business heads of the East rapidly are awakening to the fact that Los Angeles offers possibilities for manufacturing second to none in the nation. The extensive domestic and foreign market reached more quickly and cheaply from this city, the assurance of cheaper production and freedom from labor troubles form a combination unbeatable.

Each year sees an enormous increase in the number of Los Angeles factories and the growth is greater each succeeding year. Los Angeles-made goods are to be found in every quarter of the globe even now, and there is little doubt but that within a few years the city will be known throughout the world as one of the leading industrial centers of the nation.

Realty Sales Gain

More than 20 per cent increase in the amount of money involved in real estate transactions in Los Angeles during the first six months of the present year over the same period last year is indicated by figures announced last week by an official of one of the city's leading trust companies. The figures taken from the escrow department of the firm are about the average for all the title companies of the city, it was reported.

It is true that subdivision sales have fallen off to some extent during the past summer, due to a number of temporary causes which now have been eliminated. The figures issued by the trust company officials show that while the number of sales has shown a decrease over last year, because of this quiet period in small lots, the amount of money involved has been considerably more.

Nothing could better prove the basic soundness of the city. Any little flurry will reduce realty sales dependent upon the cautious investor of small means. The increased movement in high-priced property is evidence of the faith in the district held by those who know conditions. One capitalist may make a mistake, but when big business men in general are buying property the smaller investor seldom makes a mistake by following suit.

Optimism Topic of Realty Man's Convention Talk

William C. Keim, chairman of the committee on divisional co-operation of the Los Angeles Realty Board, spoke before the convention Thursday of the California State Safe Deposit Association on the subject of "Optimism."

"Outimism an salesmanship go hand in hand," said Mr. Keim. "Always have in mind that you are salesmen first and bankers last, but that you are business men all the time. Elbert Hubbard, when asked to answer the question, 'What is a business man?' replied in these words: 'A business man is a man who gets the business,' and I want you to know that in whatever capacity you serve the safe deposit department of your bank, whether in the honorable callings of office boy, stenographer, clerk or guard, or in charge of the destiny and success of your department as manager, you are there for one prime purpose and that purpose is to sell the safe deposit department of your bank to the public.

"To accomplish this, honesty and trustworthiness are, of course, basic essentials, requisite qualifications inherent in every business, but which, standing alone, are insufficient to success without the real selling ability which has its foundation in true optimism, as reflected in the pleasant smile, the retort courteous and the display of a reasonable amount of constructive mental aggressiveness."

NEW BUILDINGS CONTEMPLATED

will contain every facility for the operation of a dental business. The structure, one-story high, will contain sixteen operating rooms, lecture hall, three stores and clinics. John M. Cooper, who has designed the building, has used terra cotta and white brick for exterior and a special coloring arrangement on the interior to harmonize with the profession.

Dr. Stone states that the clinic will be operated on a nonprofit basis, service being given at cost plus a certain percentage for upkeep. They will cater to charity patients and children regardless of religious affiliation. Every convenience known to the dental profession will be installed in the buildings.

FOR FOURTH STREET

A dental department will be in charge of Dr. Stone; an eye, ear, nose and throat department in charge of Dr. B. Katz; optometry department in charge of Dr. N. Saltsman; and X-ray department in charge of Mr. McDonnell. Officers include Dr. Stone, who is president; Dr. Harry Morgan, vice-president; Dr. D. G. Nadaner, in charge of the prosthetic department.

The northeast corner of Fourth and La Brea will be improved with a class C building to be built by Christ Thoren under the supervision of Walker & Eisen, architects. Designs of the building have been taken after the Spanish renaissance architecture with stucco exterior and tile roof. Cost is estimated at $50,000. Eight apartments will be contained in the structure.

PETITION IS READY FOR WIDE ROAD

Wilmington Residents Get Required Signatures for Widening Boulevard

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

WILMINGTON, July 12.—A petition for the widening of Wilmington Boulevard from sixty-six to eighty feet, between B street and West Anaheim, has the required number of signatures, it was reported last week by Clarence J. Smith, who has been active in the interest of the proposed improvement.

The improvement covers a distance of six blocks, the plans providing for the construction of twelve-foot sidewalks and the installation of attractive street lights at all intersections.

The intention of those behind the movement is to make the boulevard a business avenue of large proportions equal to any similar thoroughfare in the harbor district. Added to several business houses already located on the boulevard, B. O. Miller announces his intention of erecting a three-story brick building at the Anaheim intersection, while George C. Lewis will put up a modern market on the boulevard immediately south of Anaheim.

A second petition calling for the widening of Wilmington Boulevard from Anaheim, north to O street, providing for sidewalks and ornamental street lights is also in circulation, bearing at the present time half the required signatures.

Further plans also have been made to widen Wilmington Boulevard ultimately to Reyes avenue on the extreme north boundary of the city, making the entire improvement from B street to Reyes, sixteen blocks in length, the north portion of which will pass the entire length of two new subdivisions located on this street.

Mr. Smith is the largest individual property owner on the boulevard with the exception of the Dominguez Land and Water Company, the co-operation of which the promoters of the project are assured.

Riverside Holdings Bring Large Consideration for Two Transfers

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

RIVERSIDE, July 12.—Through a deal completed last week, P. T. Evans of Riverside sold his 400-acre Highland Home ranch near Beaumont valued at $150,000, and acquired the Magalia Apartments on Third street, Los Angeles, valued at $250,000, and the Casa Blanca bungalow court at Long Beach said to be worth $58,500.

In the transaction the Highland Home ranch was divided into two plots, one comprising an apple orchard which was traded to Carl O. Nordell for the Long Beach property and the other comprising the ranch and twenty-room residence, which was traded to Mrs. Gula Johnson for the Los Angeles apartment-house. The residence was formerly a part of the Glen Eyre resort.

With the ranch go the Glen Eyre water rights and government filings, which comprise the only available water on the Beaumont side of the San Gorgonio watershed. The Magalia apartment-house is a three-story brick unit with basement.

PRECEDENT HAS ADVANCED ARTS

Architects Study Old Designs for New Ideas

Influence of Foreign Styles is Seen in Homes

Plan of Home Meets Conditions of Southland

BY HAROLD O. SEXSMITH

Precedent has always found an important part in the advance of all the arts. There are many who believe that it is a limiting rather than a helpful force toward the upward growth of any of the arts. Architecture, perhaps, more than any of the others, is honeycombed throughout all its various styles with examples where precedent has led the way.

Books have played a major part in the advance of the art of architecture. The designer looking for newer and better material which will aid in crystallizing his ideas has always turned to architectural books. Every epoch in architecture, at least since the Reformation, has been ushered in by the dissemination of new material, measured drawings or photographs, of hitherto more or less unknown architectural monuments.

Atlantic Coast States are dotted with dwellings and public buildings done in the Greek manner. These structures, which were built in the late eighteenth century, are examples of the classic revival in America. Greece had recently been invaded by English architects whose books found their way into the hands of Colonial builders and architects.

INFLUENCE FELT

Influence of precedent is again being felt in Southern California. Recent years have brought forth scores of excellent books on the architecture of Spain and Italy. Mexico may now be included in the list for it also is rich in examples which are an inspiration to the architect. Photographs and drawings in these books are forming the basis of much of the beautiful work which is now being produced in and around Los Angeles.

Architecture of the Latin countries has perhaps the greatest influence in our current domestic design. This is not a forced condition as was the case of the classic revival. We are not imposing a style which is out of harmony with our climatic conditions as was the Greek in our Eastern States.

Precedent is functioning in another manner not as desirable as the one we have mentioned. We brought along our Illinois or Iowa ideas of how a house should be planned, but when we came to California they didn't fit. Many of us will shake our heads skeptically when we look at the plan shown today and say, "That would never do for me. I wouldn't have my living-room looking out on the garden and paved court, which would be just another place to keep clean."

CITY LOT PATIO

A patio scheme is very difficult to accomplish on a city lot. It has been accomplished here on a fifty-foot lot with several feet to spare to satisfy the building ordinance. The portico with its ornamental iron grilles shelters the patio from the street without cutting it off entirely. The garage is in the best position for ease in access to the car, a joy to timid drivers. The patio with its central fountain could be made a riot of colors with the use of potted plants. With garden furniture it would literally become a most delightful outdoor living-room.

The bedroom wing is somewhat a standard arrangement but provides unusually ample closet space. The living-room, which serves also as dining-room when the breakfast nook is found too small, is of excellent proportion for a high-ceiling room. It will have a pleasant outlook upon the garden as well as the patio. An interesting and important feature of the plan is that practically every room has cross-ventilation.

The scheme is fundamentally correct to meet the needs of Southern California conditions. Family life within its walls would be more comfortable and therefore more enjoyable. The Spanish settlers of the early days accepted conditions as they existed and built their houses to fit them. We would do well to emulate them.

GLASS RETURNS FROM CONTRACTORS' TRIP

Earl Glass, executive secretary of the Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors of America, returned the latter part of this week from San Francisco where he joined the Contractors' Association of Northern California on its excursion to the Hetch-Hetchy Dam in the Yosemite Valley district. More than 150 contractors from Southern and Northern California were members of the excursion party. They all left on a special train which carried them over the Hetch-Hetchy Railroad from San Francisco through Rainbow Canyon to Moccasin Creek and on to the Hetch-Hetchy Lodge.

Community Development

PROJECT RANKS AMONG HIGHEST

Bel-Air Development Said to be One of Best

Many Attractions Feature of Local Community

Future Improvements Slated by Developers

[This is the second of a series of articles concerning the development of local community projects and subdivisions written by a staff writer.—Ed.]

BY AN OBSERVER

Ever since the early days when Bel-Air was a part of the famous San Vicenté Rancho, an original Spanish grant from the crown, it has been famed throughout the country for its rare beauty and scenic splendor. But not until the last few years has any attention been accorded it along constructive development lines.

Through the ambitious efforts of its owner, Alphonzo E. Bell, an area of hillside property has been transformed into a highly restricted residential development, termed by its promoters as a "Community of Gentlemen's Estates." Situated as it is amid thousands of acres of foothill property on a wing of the Santa Monica Mountains, it provides a site that commands a panoramic view of the mountains, valley and sea.

FOREMOST PLANNERS

Taking advantage of this sweeping outlook, Mr. Bell has engaged the foremost architects, landscape engineers and subdivision authorities to create a residential area that will eventually compare with the Riviera of France, the Montecito of Santa Barbara or what Tuxedo is to New York City. Every knoll has been allotted in varying sizes so that each homesite will have advantages of scenic features.

Realization of Mr. Bell's vision is to be seen in the strides taken by the community in the last twelve months. During this period construction has been progressing to a remarkable degree. Here and there, dotting the hillsides and canyons, may be seen attractive homes, each expressing the personality of the home vista and built under the supervision of an architect engaged by the project managers.

Within its bounds have been developed fine roads and bridal trails for the convenience of residents. Numerous trees of various specimens have been planted throughout, with flowers and shrubs supplementing the natural plants found in abundance in Bel-Air and in Stone Canyon. In this near-by scenic canyon are found innumerable possibilities for outdoor recreational activities and park development.

THE WATER SUPPLY

Besides providing a direct route for the water supply of Bel-Air, Stone Canyon leads into one of the watersheds of the Los Angeles Aqueduct, where a lake of considerable magnitude has been established by the construction of a large dam more than 100 feet in height. Water from this lake will be used for supplying various plunges, fish ponds and running streams which feature the community property.

Words sometime prove inefficient in describing the many qualities of Bel-Air. Like other high-class community developments, it has all the metropolitan conveniences including water, electricity, telephones and gas, all of which are brought in underground conduits. Street electroliers of the latest type will be installed on all the main thoroughfares with many other improvements contemplated.

It is the intention of Frank Meline and his realty organization to create a residential project that can be recommended to professional or business men of any clime or time. The Meline Company has an envious record for projects of this nature, having handled many of the larger tracts of Los Angeles and suburbs. These specialists are exclusive selling agents for Bel-Air.

MANY FEATURES

A short sketch of the main attractions at Bel-Air will include the Bel-Air Riding Academy where owners may keep their horses, the Mulholland Skyline Drive which touches the tract on the north, the proposed Bel-Air Country Club which will provide facilities for golf, tennis, swimming and social activities, Stone Canyon Lake which embraces a part of the aqueduct system, Alphonzo Bell residence, community park and canyon recreational playgrounds.

With Mulholland Skyline Drive on the north, Beverly Boulevard on the south, Sepulveda Boulevard near the western boundary, the newest development will be, in all probability, one of the most exclusive home communities in the Southland within the next few years. Without a doubt, persons will always be impressed with the ingenious efforts and accomplishments of Mr. Bell and Mr. Meline.

NEW SUBDIVISIONS APPROVED

Slight Increase Shown in Number of Tract Maps Submitted to Committee; Eleven Acted Upon Favorably

Twelve maps of new tracts, a slight increase over the last few weeks, were acted upon last week by the subdivisions committee of the City Planning Commission. Of the twelve, eleven were either formally or tentatively approved, while one was held over for further consideration. Following is the report of the committee:

5549—A new subdivision lying westerly of Wonderland avenue and northeasterly of the proposed location of Hollywood Boulevard. Formally approved upon the following condition: That Hollywood Boulevard be dedicated through the tract according to the plans of the City Engineer's office; that the turning place at Oakwilde Lane be redesigned as indicated on the map; that the streets at the sharp curves be made thirty feet in width; that the roadway of Skyline Drive be widened and the grade reduced; that the necessary storm drain easements be granted. This map will not be accepted until said widening and reduction of grade is completed on the ground.

5564—(Sheets 1 to 5, inclusive.) A new subdivision lying on Doheny Drive and northerly of Villa Drive. Held over for further investigation.

5533—A new subdivision lying on Escarpa Drive, formally approved upon condition that Escarpa Drive be widened by at least six feet along the sharp curves.

8584—A new subdivision lying westerly of Canyon Drive and northerly of Canyon Cove avenue; formally approve upon the following conditions: That the street along the northerly boundary of the tract be curved through lot No. 12 as indicated on the map; that a ten-foot radius curve be provided for at the street intersection at Canyon Drive; that the necessary storm drain easement be granted.

8586—A new subdivision lying southerly of Isabel street and easterly of Cedar street, formally approved upon condition, that the sharp angles on Shurtleff Court be eliminated as shown on the map, also that the necessary storm drain easements be granted.

7760—A new subdivision lying westerly of Van Horne avenue and northerly of Huntington Drive North. Formally approved upon condition that the alley along the easterly boundary of the tract be widened by three feet, also that the necessary storm drain easements be granted.

7882—A new subdivision lying southerly of Yosemite Drive, about 700 feet west of Avoca street, tentatively approved upon the following conditions: That a twenty-foot alley be dedicated from its present terminus through the tract; that a thirty-foot street be dedicated along the easterly boundary of the tract; that the width of Mariposa street be made to conform to the width of the streets to the east and west; that no lots be less than 4000 square feet in area; that the requirements of the City Engineer's office in regard to storm drain requirements be met.

8267—A new subdivision lying northerly of Valley Heart Drive and westerly of Lankershim Boulevard; formally approved upon the following conditions: That the construction of the Greece-street bridge meet the requirements of the City Engineer's office; that the corners of the intersection of Greece street and Lankershim Boulevard be rounded by ten-foot radius curves; that no portion of the tract subject to floods be included in the map; that the requirements of the City Engineer's office in regard to storm drain easements be met.

8429—A new subdivision lying northerly of Country Club Drive and easterly of Pruess Road; formally approved upon condition that the necessary storm drain easements be granted. No curves were provided on this map as tentative approval was given prior to the adoption of the policy requiring curves on street intersections.

6709—(Sheets 1, 2 and 3.) A new subdivision lying at the northerly end of Curson avenue and known as Wattles Park; formally approved upon condition that the requirements of the City Engineer's office in regard to storm drain easements be met.

Subdivisions and Subdividers

Southern California's shrinking coast line is a phenomenon that requires little scientific explanation, but which is becoming more apparent every summer. Every year sees added portions of ocean frontage taken over for industrial purposes, for amusement parks, beach clubs, and private development, while at the same time a substantial increase takes place in the number of visitors to the beach.

Ocean frontage that once seemed limitless is becoming decidedly restricted and the question of sufficient beach for the public to enjoy is apt to be very acute with the passing of a few years.

"The city's development of Cabrillo Beach is a step in the right direction, but will by no means serve to solve the problem. In the thickly settled portions of the Atlantic Coast the question of sufficient beach frontage for the public to enjoy has been a serious one for a long time, and we are unquestionably going to experience the same trouble in Southern California," says Henry Clarke, director of sales of the Palos Verdes Estates.

"Regardless of the law in the matter, the public will always feel that they have a right to share the use of the ocean beach. Countless conflicts over this have arisen in the East, on the Long Island beaches and elsewhere. In recognition of this instinctive feeling that the strip of beach is something that should belong to everyone as much as does the ocean beside it the planners of Palos Verdes have deeded practically five miles of ocean beach to the Palos Verdes Home Owners' Association, to be used only for park purposes.

"It was felt that in this way the question would be settled for all time in the most completely satisfactory way. Passage along the beach of the Palos Verdes Estates will always be unrestricted, and enjoyment of it will never be hampered by any encroachments of a commercial nature. It will be open to everyone on the same terms, and we believe it will be an asset of increasing value with the passage of every year."

Girard Fortunate

Girard has been particularly fortunate in being located in the path of the new Mulholland Scenic Highway, which is now under construction. This great drive will pass through Girard for more than two and a quarter miles.

In choosing the site for the construction of an ideal home community, Victor Girard did not know that this drive would be constructed. He did not know that this new community would some day be in the path of a great highway. However, he was positive of the fact that he was choosing one of the beautiful spots of Southern California and at the same time securing a location where a city should logically be located.

Construction of the drive is being rapidly rushed to completion by the crews of the city under the direction of Dewitt L. Raeburn, engineer in charge. It is estimated that the drive will be open for travel by the first of January. Temporary grade will be established within the next few weeks.

Camp No. 3 of the Mulholland Drive construction force is located within the limits of Girard. This outfit is working upon that portion of the highway which passes through Girard. They are working in an easterly direction, toward the forces of camps working in a westerly direction. It is expected that the forces of the two comps will meet within less than a week.

Representatives Meet

Cities of Southern California, through their various chambers of commerce, have adopted a plan this year of sending their representatives to the various home communities of Southern California with the idea of getting new community development plans.

This week 175 secretaries and their wives made a tour of inspection of Hollywoodland. The calvacade was escorted from the entrance portals of Hollywoodland throughout the entire property. The building methods, home plans, road construction and general hillside development work were

THE HOME OF THE AVOCADO

OUTLOOK—PRESENT AND FUTURE

"That the avocado has come to stay as an important crop in California is assured beyond a doubt. With the ever-increasing land values, especially in the more climatically favored portions of the State, crops yielding HIGH GROSS RETURNS PER ACRE MUST BE GROWN. As population becomes more and more dense the tonnage of food produced per acre must likewise increase; the food value of the fruit (the avocado) and its potentially high production per acre are sufficient reasons to justify its place in California agriculture."

HAVENHURST BONDS SOLD TO STRAUS

Construction Work to Begin at Once on New Apartment-house

Financing for the new Havenhurst Apartments at Hollywood was completed today when S. W. Straus & Co., nationally known investment banking house, purchased a $250,000 bond issue secured by this property. Construction of the building is to begin at once at the southwest corner of Franklin and Whitley avenues. The completed property will represent a $450,000 investment.

The building is to comprise fifty suites of two, three and four rooms, will be five stories high and of most artistic design in an adaptation of Spanish type of architecture. The building is designed by Walker & Eisen architects. Thomas A. McNamara is president and M. A. Charleston secretary of the Havenhurst Apartment Company, both well known in Hollywood business circles.

The floor plans of the new building are skilfully arranged, providing for large rooms and corridors and lobby. The structure will front 185 feet on Franklin avenue and 100 feet on Whitley avenue, enclosing an attractive formal garden occupying the entire roof of a garage structure which will accommodate thirty-seven cars and which will be reached from a private driveway entering from Franklin avenue.

The building is to be equipped with the most modern apartment-house conveniences, will be served by passenger and service elevators, steam heat, automatic refrigerating system, water softening plant, garbage incinerator, laundry and ample storage space for the accommodation of tenants.

The site chosen is a most desirable one, occupying a picturesque elevation two blocks from Hollywood Boulevard and adjoining the business district of Hollywood. The southerly, easterly and westerly exposures look out over Western Los Angeles while the windows to the north command a view of the hills.

Plans Laid for Mountain Hotel Near Redlands

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

REDLANDS, July 19.—Plans for another beautiful hotel in the San Bernardino Mountains east of Redlands were announced during the week by Arthur Gilman of Los Angeles, who is in charge of the subdividing of Glen Martin at the crest of the road to Bear Valley.

Glen Martin has been owned for many years by Charles Martin, one of the pioneers of the San Bernardino Mountains. There are 320 acres which he took up from the government in 1886.

Mr. Gilman has planned for a $75,000 hotel there. There will be one main building in the Norman style of architecture which will have a large lounge, billiard room, dining-room and kitchen, office and rest rooms. Then there will probably be sixty small bungalows as hotel rooms with all modern conveniences.

The opening of the Nottingham Apartments at 2819 Leeward avenue was attended last Monday by a large gathering of prominent people. The building is a four-story, forty-seven apartment, white glazed brick structure overlooking Lafayette and Westlake parks. It is one of the most pretentious and luxuriously appointed and furnished apartments in the city. Each apartment is provided with telephone, dressing-room, tile kitchen and bath, and shower. Other desirable features are the elevator, dumb waiter, fully-equipped laundry, service, storage and individual locker rooms.

The building was erected and is owned and operated by James W. Weitzman, local building contractor, who for the past fifteen years has been engaged in the construction of apartment-houses.

The manager is Mrs. S. H. Leonard, who was formerly in charge of the Regent and Wilshire apartments here, and the Palace Apartments in Long Beach.

HOLLYWOOD GETS HOTEL

Vine-Street Corner to be Site of Height-Limit Hostelry Costing in Excess of Million

Construction will start at once on what is planned to be one of Hollywood's finest hotels. It will be located on the northwest corner of Hollywood Boulevard and Vine street in the heart of the Hollywood business district. Announcement of this was made last week by Earl W. Foster, manager of the hotel and apartment division of Merrick & Ruddick, Inc. Cost is estimated at $1,500,000.

This new structure will be a Class A, height-limit building, containing 596 rental rooms, all of which will have outside windows and equipped with bath. The hotel entrance will be flanked on either side by ten stores. The lobby will have a recessed entrance of unusual beauty and design.

LARGE LOBBY

The lobby itself, 60x94 feet, occupies the center of the main floor, opening into the main dining-room, measuring 35x38 feet, and the ball room, 37x56 feet. These rooms will be separated by accordion doors which will permit their being opened into one large room for large gatherings. Another feature of the hotel will be a women's lounging room on the main floor, separated from the general lobby.

On the mezzanine floor are embodied features of design which will add greatly to the popularity of this new hostelry. The mezzanine itself measures 82x93 feet, covering practically the entire area of the building. On it are provided accommodations for lunching clubs, recitals, musicales and private dining-rooms. A separate kitchen is also planned so that delays in service will be eliminated. There will be a radio and lecture room on this floor, a men's lounging and card room, as well as women's clubrooms, and women's private smoking room.

OPEN-AIR HALL

Access to the open-air balcony to be used for outdoor concerts, is also gained from the mezzanine, while openings through from the dining and ballrooms will allow guests on the mezzanine to enjoy the music from below.

Plans for the building, drawn by Architect H. Ryan, have been viewed by several hotel men who pronounce them to embody the very best ideas for a hotel planned not alone for the comfort of the guests, but for profitable operation as a business enterprise.

The hotel project is already financed and the contracts let, so that this new addition to Hollywood's skyline should be finished and ready for occupancy in the next few months. The entire negotiations for the ground lease, building construction, and financing were handled by Mr. Foster.

AWARDED SCHOOL WORK

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

EARLIMART, July 19.—Graham & Son of Dinuba held the lowest bid on the new schoolrooms at Earlimart, their bid of approximately $14,000 also including heating and plumbing. Work is to be started at once and the building is to be completed by September 5 next or a penalty must be paid. Owing to the fact that the present heating system is not satisfactory and inadequate to furnish heat sufficent to keep the present building warm, an entirely new plant will be installed.

ORANGE REALTY BOARD WINS TAX REDUCTION

The Orange Realty Board has succeeded in having the City Council of Orange reduce the occupational tax on real estate brokers to $12 per year instead of $24, according to advices received at the headquarters of the California Real Estate Association. Willa A. Martin and G. W. Murphy, representing the board, appeared before the Council and stated that the tax was originally made high to protect the brokers of Orange from outside competition, but that in that regard it had failed utterly and therefore a reduction was asked. The Council was unanimous in granting the reduction.

Something for you to think about

WHEN you grow tired of the congestion of a big city and the struggle for the daily existence of yourself and your family . . . .

When you consider the cost of acquiring a comfortable home on a fifty foot lot and the drain upon your pay check each month to maintain that home . . . .

When the time comes for you to surrender your position in favor of a younger man . . . .

When your hair is sprinkled with grey and you realize that your earning power is not the same that it was . . . .

Think of a beautiful home in the country located on fertile acres where an income for all time is assured . . . .

Think of this rose covered home surrounded by towering mountains where your children may enjoy the freedom of healthful out-door life . . . .

Think of the vista from your front porch where grape vines stretch row upon row and will produce an income for you during all of the years to come . . . .

Think of the small cost it will mean to acquire this home and this assurance of financial protection . . . .

Think of how the money you spend in the city for the mere privilege of existence will acquire this suburban home and income for you that you may call your own as long as you live and then hand it down to your children and your children's children . . . .

RECESSION SEEN IN COAST WORK

Total for Building Activity Four Per Cent Less

First Six Months This Year Shows Slowing Down

Several Cities Make Gains During Same Period

Building permits to the number of 91,904 and calling for $250,853,663 in construction costs were issued in seventy-nine cities of the seven Pacific Coast States during the first six months of 1924, as shown by a special semiannual building survey issued by S. W. Straus & Co.

Although this volume of construction amounts to more than a quarter billion of dollars, it reflects a slight recession in building activities from last year, being 4 per cent less than the total for the first half of 1923, but is 30 per cent greater than that of the comparative period of 1922.

This slowing down of building programs, in keeping with general business policy throughout the country, is particularly evident in California where fifty-six cities, comprised in the survey, report a total of $199,151,007, 9 per cent less than the total for 1923, but 27 per cent greater than for the first half of the previous year.

Washington, Oregon and Arizona show substantial gains over both 1923 and 1922, while Nevada and Idaho show reductions from both previous totals and Utah a 15 per cent loss from 1923, but a 73 per cent gain over 1922. The most stable building activity is that of Oregon, where three of the four cities included show gains over 1923 and all gained over the previous year.

Los Angeles reports 27,748 permits issued calling for a construction total of $78,818,738 for the six months, 16 per cent less than for the same period of last year, but 32 per cent greater than for the first half of 1922. In the Los Angeles metropolitan area, fifteen municipalities report $105,440,890, a 12 per cent reduction from last year but a 41 per cent gain over the previous year.

San Francisco issued 5396 permits during this period at a construction total of $26,157,670, which is 8 per cent greater than for the first half of 1923 and 11 per cent greater than for like period of 1922. In the San Francisco Bay metropolitan area, fourteen municipalities issued $52,673,004 in building permits, 8 per cent more than for the first six months of last year and 30 per cent more than for the first half of the year before.

PORTLAND GAINS

Portland issued 7646 permits at $15,032,355 in construction costs, 13 per cent over comparative figures of last year and 16 per cent over those of 1922, while Eugene and Salem reflect the building prosperity of Oregon to a remarkable degree. Eugene, with $1,555,435, shows a gain of 169 per cent over 1923 and of 185 per cent over 1922, while Salem, with $1,157,255, gains 129 per cent and 136 per cent over the respective previous comparative figures.

Seattle reports 5546 permits issued at a construction cost of $16,892,9350, a 22 per cent gain over the 1923 comparative total and 62 per cent over that of the previous year. Spokane's $1,985,874 shows 81 per cent more than for the same period of last year and 11 per cent over that of 1922. Tacoma, reporting $5,335,275, shows a 55 per cent gain over last year's comparative figures and 102 per cent over those of the previous year.

Salt Lake City, with 864 permits to cost $2,831,318 for the first half of the year shows a 16 per cent reduction from 1923 but a 68 per cent gain over 1922. Ogden's total of $899,950, is 19 per cent over that for the first six months of last year and 91 per cent over that of the previous year.

San Diego reports 2869 permits to cost $6,655,032, January to July, a gain of 18 per cent over last year and 68 per cent over 1922 comparative figures.

Sacramento's 1789 permits at a construction cost of $4,277,439 for the first half-year is 2 per cent over that of last year but 17 per cent less than for 1922.

Long Beach issued 2719 permits for the six months calling for $13,826,790 in costs, a 13 per cent reduction from last year but a 47 per cent gain over 1922.

Oakland's 6479 permits to cost $14,392,135 show a 4 per cent gain over the first half of 1923 and an 18 per cent gain over comparative months of the year before.

PLANS FOR RELIGIOUS SITE BEGUN

Redlands May be Center of Large Church Colony Under Consideration

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

REDLANDS, July 12.—Plans for a great mountain camp ground for summer conference, meetings and schools in the Mill Creek Canyon near Redlands are being perfected by one of the most active religious organizations in the south. The plans are for a project somewhat similar to the one started by the Methodists at Pacific Palisades, near Santa Monica, and it is understood that the site is to be decided soon.

In case plans work out as they now stand it will make one of the finest colonies in the mountains, for it is planned to acquire a large tract of land, the central part of which is to be set aside for a hotel, for a pavilion and for necessary buildings for a great camp and conference ground, where religious meetings of all kinds can be conducted during the summer months.

Then a large part of the tract will be given over to small lots for private homes, so that the members of the denomination can go there and spend the summer and enjoy the meetings that will be given. It is planned to have conferences with some of the great religious leaders of the denomination present. The denomination is fostering one of the colleges in the south, the faculty of the school being also available.

Builders' Questions Answered

By Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors of America

[With the view of rendering assistance to prospective builders and for the purpose of giving sound advice on problems arising in connection with building projects, The Times has instituted this department, which will be conducted as a weekly feature. All questions should be sent to the Real Estate and Building Department, Los Angeles Times.]

Unit Price Contracts

Question: Will you please describe the unit-price form of contract in building?

Answer: A unit-price form of contract is based upon the naming of prices for each kind and class of work to be done upon a building. By this method the exact amount of each class of work need not be definitely known if only the different classes and kinds of work are known. With a price set for each unit, it is then possible to carry on the job, paying the contractor only for the work actually done. The difficult feature of this method of carrying on a contract for a building, is the great variety of work that must be done and the difficulty of obtaining unit measurements for each item. Coupled with this, architects are usually loath to take the time and trouble to measure up and keep a record of the various units. This form of contract, however, is excellent for engineering construction, but is not so well adapted to architectural work. It is necessary for most contractors to estimate most construction upon a unit basis even when other forms of contracts are used, but the general preference for contract forms has been that of the "lump sum" contracts. Under the "lump-sum" contract, a price is figured by the contractor who names a stated price or sum for a completed structure, according to the owner's plans and specifications. Thus the owner and the architect depend upon the price bid, and are not bothered with units or quantities so far as estimating costs are concerned. The lump-sum form of contract has been the one most used for decades in erecting buildings of all descriptions.

How Plastering is Measured

Q.: Will you kindly tell me how plastering contractors arrive at an estimate for any given job?

A.: The total is usually determined by multiplying the total square yards in the job by a figure per square yard.

Painting Brickwork

Q.: Is it possible to give brickwork a coat of paint that will endure?

A.: Yes, it is. But the brickwork must be thoroughly dry before the paint is applied. In order to obtain a satisfactory result it is necessary to prevent the brick from absorbing the oil in the paint before it has had an opportunity to completely dry. This may be accomplished by first applying two coats of raw linseed oil with the addition of one pint of oil dryer per gallon to the brick. Liquid dryers and Japans are not suitable for this work and will not provide satisfactory results. Full coats should be applied and each coat should be allowed to dry for ten days. After this treatment, the finishing coats of oil may be applied. These may be similar to the paints used for soft pine woods.

Pamphlet on Care of Floors

Q.: Where can I procure a pamphlet outlining the care of hardwood floors?

A.: Such a pamphlet can be secured, free of charge, by addressing Frederic J. Haskin, Washington, D. C., or by addressing a request for same to the Department of Commerce, by which it is published. This particular pamphlet is very exhaustive on the treatment of hardwood floors.

Proper Mix for Driveway

Q.: What is the proper mix for a concrete driveway and should the mix be different for different cars?

A.: What is known as 1:2:4 mix is generally safest, although 1:3:5, if properly handled, is entirely satisfactory. These figures indicate the proportions by volume of cement, sand and gravel or broken stone, respectively. Unless the work is done by an experienced cement contractor, the builder should post himself thoroughly on the use of cement as certain rules and precautions must be observed to prevent a botched job. Even then there is a certainty of the lack of skill in the use of forms and finishing tools, making a permanent monument to the amateur builder. Full instructions in the use of cement for such purpose may be secured upon request to the Portland Cement Association, Merchants' National Bank Building, Los Angeles. (b) If the concrete work be well and honestly done, a thickness of four inches on a well-prepared subgrade will suffice for all passenger cars, but might be broken up by heavily-loaded trucks, which is sometimes done during building operations.

RETURNS FROM TRIP

Returning from an extensive trip by motor along the Pacific Coast, O. S. Lair, secretary-treasurer of the W. Ross Campbell Company, industrial and business property brokers, brings to Los Angeles word of prevailing good business all along the Coast. Mr. Lair during his trip visited San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, Vancouver and Victoria, B. C.

LANDSCAPE SUGGESTIONS

BY STUART CHISHOLM

Gertrude Jekyll, perhaps the greatest living authority on garden design, says "It is upon the right relation of the garden to the house that its value and the enjoyment that is to be derived from it will largely depend." If more of us followed this simple law, the results would be far happier, whether our holdings were a fifty-foot lot in congested city life or a fifty-acre property in the open country.

In building the garden, we too often fail to take into consideration the type of the dwelling, which is the focal point of our possession, and around which we are attempting to show our appreciation for the "goods the gods have given us" in the form of trees and flowers and all green growing things.

The chief fault with the most of us lies in this careless disregard of conditions by our house. In most cases the architect has given a fitting structure for our particular property and geographic location. We can do no better, then, than follow his "tip."

FORMAL LINES

In the consideration of the small garden around a small house on a small site, it is safe (after we have committed to memory Miss Jekyll dictum) to plan our garden along formal lines. Once the boundary lines are firmly established in our minds, and the surrounding outlooks and native conditions noted, the problem to be solved lies in the immediate dwelling area.

In the plan presented today, the garden scheme is entirely satisfying from the point of view of sympathy with the house and also of fitness in connection with the size of the property. The long terrace running the length of the living-rooms of the house starts us into the garden with a pleasant feeling, and from it, the descent into the garden follows naturally and easily. The simple open area in the foreground does not give a cramped feeling, nor is there a jumble of flowers or shrubs or garden ornament doing their best to shut nature out.

HAS CONGESTION

It is an everyday error to thickly plant the smaller garden areas up to the living-room windows, with no central path or open panel of lawn to invite one into unexplored quarters at farther distance. Garden builders, who aim to imitate nature, do this in their wild desire to eschew the formal; but if they only knew it, they are crowding nature out, and blotting out space, and confusing things to such an extent in general, that no result is reached. Instead of pleasure there is a resultant impression of annoying confusion and cramp.

In this garden, nothing of that sort, exists. To be sure there are delightful plantations of trees and flowers and garden ornament. There is order and fitness and sympathy. Furthermore, the builder, realizing the vital need of tying house and garden together, has introduced some of the elements of the dwelling into the garden. The grille of the garden gate echoes the grille of the windows. The court repeats the general feeling of the walls of the house. The decorations at the terrace ends, carry the dwelling into the garden. The garden design is a fitting counterpart of the design of the house.

The fact that in the last year more than $2,500,000 in home sites have been sold in Hollywoodland and at the present time more than $1,500,000 in homes for this new residential community are under construction or being planned for immediate building demonstrates that the handling of Hollywoodland and the treatment of this hillside is receiving recognition.

Employees Wear Buttons

At the third semimonthly meeting of the Frank Meline Company employees a new idea was introduced in the form of large celluloid buttons bearing the name, office, department and nickname of the members.

The Frank Meline Company has increased its activities to such an extent that it is impossible for salesmen and members to become acquainted with all the members of the organization without some special method of this kind, according to O. S. Strain, general manager of the realty brokerage departments and chairman of the meetings.

For the Los Angeles, Glendale, Burbank, Hollywood, Santa Monica and Beverly Hills brokerage offices alone more than 150 buttons were required, he states. This does not include the Pasadena or Alhambra offices or any of the Meline subdivisions. The meetings are devoted to both business pleasure, committee reports covering various business and real-estate activities taking up the first part of the meetings.

Development Feature

An ambitious plan of development, the outstanding feature at Toluca Lake Park, is receiving a most enthusiastic response, according to the subdividers. It is the desire of the owners to develop what will be the most unique and one of the most attractive natural homelands in the entire West.

Several hundred visitors interested in securing homesites may be seen each Sunday at the tract. Interest in the last four weeks has made sales of more than $450,000, it is said.

Construction of homes is expected to be started on a large scale shortly as an example set by one owner, who started workmen on his home the day after he purchased his lot, is expected to be an incentive for other owners.

The realization of an ideal has been the result of the efforts of the Heffron-McCray-St. John organization in subdividing this homeland. The site is between Lankershim Boulevard and Pass Avenue north of Universal City. This tract has been laid out as a modern homeland and yet has retained to a remarkable degree, the romantic atmosphere of its original Spanish owner.

Industries Promised

With new settlers moving into the colony daily, establishing homes and commencing intensive cultivation of the soil, several new industries are promised for the Happy Valley district, adjacent to Riverside.

Negotiations are reported to be under way for the erection of a broom factory, to be supplied with its raw material from Happy Valley lands. Soil in the district is said to be particularly suited to the growth of broom corn—a crop which, under present prices, it is said, will yield a large profit from a small acreage.

Agricultural experts affiliated with the John P. Mills Oranization, Inc., selling agents, are also investigating the advisability of establishing the growth of the carab, an unusual tree from the Holy land, the fruit of which is generally referred to as "St. John's bread."

The carab is said to have been grown successfully on an experimental basis near Riverside. Its products have numerous uses and the tree is said to be exceptionally profitable.

SAN FERNANDO PARK PROJECT IS PUSHED

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

SAN FERNANDO VALLEY, July 19. — Civic organizations throughout the valley are launching a campaign through their parks and playgrounds committees, in conjunction with Los Angeles city officials, the county supervisors and planning commissions in an effort to hit upon a logical plan for the realization of a 3000-acre park project. S. G. Chamberlin, San Fernando civil engineer, proposes the utilization of the three great washes that wind through the valley from the foothills to the river. He would combine pleasure with utility by making the washes accessible for flood control, parks, boulevards and pipe-line rights of way. All routes lead from the head of the valley to Los Angeles, although the utilization of Pacoima Wash would result in the creation of a boulevard leading from San Fernando to Cahuenga Pass. The park plans are to be the subject of discussion at the July meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of San Fernando Valley, which will meet and banquet at San Fernando next Tuesday evening.

WIDER STREET SOUGHT IN HUNTINGTON PARK

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HUNTINGTON PARK, July 19. A petition is being circulated to have the city trustees order State street widened, if the property-owners representing the great amount of frontage look with favor on the proposition. The thoroughfare from curb to curb is only thirty feet in width, the property line being fifty feet. This gives ten feet on each side for sidewalks and parkings. The plan is to have the thoroughfare eighty feet in width, extending from this city, through South Gate and on to Long Beach Boulevard.

SUBURBAN DISTRICTS REPORT EXPANSION

Considerable Farm Land Development in Valley Section as Result of Increased Demand for Garden Products Grown in That Territory

BY HELEN STARR

San Jacinto and Perris valleys are largely concerned with the problem of irrigation and continued expansion of their communities. Plans for the future are directly dependent on increased water supply for orchard and farm. Hemet probably would no have come into existence if a water supply problem had not been brought about.

The late W. F. Whittier, a resident of San Jacinto, developed a dam on beautiful Lake Hemet and wanted the residents of San Jacinto to join in his efforts to form a large water company. San Jacinto residents at that time wanted to continue with their own water company, and refused, Whittier, in a disappointed mood, bought the land where Hemet now stands and developed a rival town on that site.

For thirty years after San Jacinto and Hemet had become towns farmers took their water supply from the two established water companies or from their own wells. The San Jacinto Valley is proud of the artesian well water, which is soft and pure. However, now it seems practical for the water consumers to buy over the two existing water companies and to build power plants in the mountains.

These plants will generate power from the mountain streams, double the water capacity for the valley and make water cheaper. It is even hoped that the farmers may ultimately have the use of free water by this plan. The Hemet Chamber of Commerce and prominent citizens of San Jacinto and Hemet are working to make this plan a reality in the near future.

AVAILABLE LANDS

The most reasonably-priced farm lands in the State are to be found in the San Jacinto and Perris valleys. In the San Jacinto Valley general farm land is quoted as low as $200 an acre, and fruit lands from $400 an acre up.

Fruit of all kinds grows in this valley in abundance. There are 5500 acres of apricots, 2500 of peaches, 250 of pears, 400 apples, 1200 acres of walnuts, 415 acres of olives and 1500 of oranges. More than 200 carloads of oranges leave this valley each year.

The valley offers an ideal place for the dairyman, as there is plenty of feed, reasonably priced land and an all-year climate that agrees with the stock. Some 3000 gallons of milk come into a central plant each day for shipment to Los Angeles. Dairymen in the San Jacinto Valley have a milk return of $80,000 a month.

Growing of alfalfa is on the increase in this valley, a local demand combined with close proximity to the Los Angeles market making this a profitable crop. Sixteen carloads of alfalfa left the valley in 1923, while alfalfa seed, grown during the summer months, is in demand on account of its color, hardiness and cleanliness. Some 3500 acres are planted in alfalfa.

Wheat and barley are produced successfully on 10,000 acres, and milo maize also grows abundantly. Hogs are a safe investment in the valley, a prize-winning herd of the State having its home there. Poultry raising is also firmly established, while in the surrounding mountain country beef cattle thrive. Soil conditions are conceded to be all that could be desired. A rich, deep sandy loam with no hardpan adapts this section for practically every crop grown. It is a soil that works easily and holds moisture. The valley has few high winds, and rarely a fog.

TWO CANNERIES

The town of Hemet has two large canneries, which employ about 1800 persons. During the summer 3000 to 4000 extra persons come to the valley to harvest the crops. Hemet is the headquarters for the Southern California prune and apricot Association, where all packing is done for this section. There are two orange-packing houses in addition, and a new walnut-packing house. The new Walnut Association Building was recently erected at a cost of $26,000. The Howard Rose Company, located at Hemet, makes a specialty of growing roses to be shipped to all parts of the United States. This company has several hundred acres set out in roses.

As in almost all other towns of Southern California, Hemet feels the constant need of new school buildings. Bonds are now on the market for a $60,000 addition to the Union High School. A large gymnasium, built partly by the manual-training department of the high school, has just been completed. Besides Hemet High Schools and Junior High additions, there are three grammar schools. The town has a fine Carnegie library, Kiwanis Club, Woman's Club, one of the finest theaters to be found in any small town in California, and an active Chamber of Commerce with 350 members. J. O. Percival, bank director and formerly president of the Chamber of Commerce, is largely responsible for the growth of this body and for many improvements for the community.

Palms set out on the streets of Hemet some five years ago add greatly to the beauty of the town. Seven miles of street paving were completed last year. Five acres in the center of town have just been presented to the city for a park by Dr. John B. West. The City Trustees have appointed a park commission so that the park will be developed and improved at once.

NEW STRUCTURES

The Park Hill Nursery has built two apartment-houses and three new stores in Hemet in the last year, while William Rothaus has added a new business block to the town. Hemet has a splendid swimming tank at the edge of town, its water supply coming from a warm mineral spring. The town at present has a population of 2000.

The Ramona pageant given in Hemet annually is attracting many visitors to the town. This pageant, adapted from Helen Hunt Jackson's book, was given for the second time last April and will be continued and enlarged each year. The pageant ran for four days and was staged by Garnet Holme, director of the Mission Play at Carmel, the Mt. Tamalpais play and other historical California pageans. A canyon at the south end of Hemet is called Ramona Bowl, this natural outdoor theater having remarkable acoustic properties. Some 5000 persons sat on the rocks and terraces of this canyon bowl last April to witness the pageant. Many of the characters of the original story of Ramona live in and about Hemet and San Jacinto, and it was in the near-by mountains that Allesandro was shot. Some professional actors take part in this pageant, including many local residents. Aria's Mexican Band of Los Angeles provided music for the dances in the pageant.

Many vacationists and those seeking health come to Hemet. Mt. San Jacinto, 10,500 feet high, offers mountain scenery unexcelled. Hot springs of repute are located in this valley. Gilman's Relief Springs are to the west of San Jacinto and Soboda Hot Springs are to the east. Both have ample hotel accommodations. Gilman's Springs have nearly 500 guests a greater part of the year.

SAN JACINTO

San Jacinto, three miles from Hemet, boasts its own paved boulevards, electric light and gas systems. The Santa Fe Railroad touches both these towns, while auto stages run at frequent intervals to San Diego, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Riverside and to the mountain resorts back of San Jacinto. The town was originally started one mile east and at that time was the site of the County Hospital. The buildings of the latter burned and it was then moved to Arlington. San Jacinto "Old Town" was abandoned when the Santa Fe Railroad crossed the country a mile distant, while the present San Jacinto came into being near the railroad line.

San Jacinto, although a town of only 1500 persons, boasts a splendid hotel. Tourists en route to the mountain resorts, travelers and business men go by circuitous routes to reach the Hotel Vosburg and enjoy its unusual hospitality. This hotel alone has done much toward attracting visitors to the town. San Jacinto has one bank, a theater, four churches and a public library. There is a high school and one grammar school.

REPAIR HIGHWAY

The highway between San Jacinto and Hemet is now being resurfaced. Long's Implement Building is one of the newest business edifices at San Jacinto and will house farm implements and autos. The local newspaper, the Register, is building a new printing office and a group of new stores. Foundations have been laid for the new Record Garage. The Pansy Nook Shop is housed in an attractive new building, as well as the Tomlinson Electric Company. There have been fifteen new homes erected in the last few months including an addition to the Hotel Vasburg.

Idylwild and Keen Camp are located back of San Jacinto. Tauquitz Lodge at Keen Camp is built on a plateau, 5000 feet above sea level where the pines make the air fragrant and healthful. The lodge is built in the midst of a dense pine forest. Huge pines, centuries old, surround the buildings.

For the hunter, grey squirrel are plentiful as well as quail and deer in season. Good fishing streams are easily reached from camp. The world's famous San Jacinto Peak can be reached safely from Tauquitz Lodge by horseback trail. Lake Hemet, which is not far from Keen Camp boasts splendid fishing.

PERRIS

Perris Valley is underlaid with a very large natural reservoir of water which has provided a supply for the irrigation of many hundreds of acres of alfalfa, cotton, milo, maize, citrus and deciduous fruits and other crops. The cost of this water pumped and delivered on the land through pipe lines is less than the cost of irrigation water in most of the district of the State. Perris Valley supply is free from grass or weed seeds which contaminate the supply of many districts as delivered through open ditches. An underground supply is the surest and most incontestable water right any property can have.

Perris Valley will also participate in the division of the flood waters of the San Jacinto River, large quantities of which have heretofore gone to waste. The conservation of these waters by the Perris Valley Conservation District recently formed will add to the irrigated areas of Perris Valley. The cost of water per acre will be very modest.

Engines at the wells are now lifting water ninety feet at a cost of 5 cents a miner's inch for twenty-four hours. The small poultry ranches near Perris will soon be helped, for the City Trustees will soon call a bond issue for $9000 to build 500,000-gallon city reservoir. The present storage plant has been found inadequate.

COTTON INDUSTRY

Perris has 900 acres set out in cotton and plans to increase this in years to come. This cotton has better bolls than plants in other localities. Perris Valley is the only section in the United States where only one variety of white staple cotton is grown and recognized as a source of supply for pure seed for planting. Acala cotton is the variety grown and it yields more than one bale an acre on irrigated ground. From each bale of cotton there is about 1000 pounds of seed. This finds a ready market not only for planting but among the dairymen of this section for feed

FAMILY LAUNDRY THRIVES

Automotive Parts Manufacturers and Bag and Paper Company Show Great Business Gain

The Peerless Laundry Company, whose plant was visited during the past week by the Chamber of Commerce photographer, is claimed to be one of the largest and best equipped family laundries in the world. The plant, which is located at the corner of Slauson avenue and South Main street, has an area of approximately 150,000 square feet, and employs more than 500 persons. The company, which has been in operation for about ten years, is headed by L. F. Caswell.

Another plant visited was that of Gilfillan Brothers, Inc., the demand for whose products has increased so fast that it has necessitated four moves to larger quarters in the past eight years. They are now located in their new works at 1815 West Sixteenth street, where 200 skilled workers are employed in manufacturing auto ignition parts, repair replacement parts, portable electric tools, radio parts and neutrodyne radio sets. The plant, which has a floor area of 45,000 square feet, represents an investment of more than $1,500,000. The company is headed by S. W. Gilfillan, president, and J. G. Gilfillan, vice-president.

The Angelus Bag and Paper Company plant at 2444 East Twenty-fourth street, also visited by the chamber photographer, is one of the newest additions to the Los Angeles industrial group. The factory, which turns out a complete line of paper bags, has 20,000 square feet of floor space and employs about 50 persons. The firm is headed by Frank L. Taylor, president and general manager.

Green Stamp Organization Takes Lease

The Sperry & Hutchinson Company, nationally known green-stamp concern, whose Los Angeles branch was formerly located at 226 South Spring street, has leased for a term of years from Glaser Brothers the one-story brick building at 311 South San Pedro street, which it will use for its offices and warehouse. The leasing negotiations for all parties to the transaction were handled by J. W. Kinsella of the J. W. Lewis Company. The Sperry & Hutchinson Company specializes in a service of advertising through green stamps, which are handled extensively by the retail stores throughout the United States and are exchangeable by their customers for merchandise premiums. A display room for premiums is maintained in the Fifth-Street Store.

HOME MAGAZINE INTERESTS

In Homecraft, the monthly magazine for homebuilders, the August number is showing an enlarged edition, with pages nearly double the former size and containing many striking illustrations.

A popular type of California home is reproduced in four colors for the front cover. Further interest is added through the repetition of this house picture with the floor plan on an inside page, enabling the reader to gain an accurate idea at once of the interior development of the plan.

Articles contributed by local writers include an interesting discussion of the better type of small homes. An article of merit on the comfortableness of the small home by Mrs. Henrietta Horton Kapp declares that furnishing and interior decorations should be in harmony with the architectural design, contrasting types of architecture being designated as bungalow or small home of the colonial type or the Spanish or Italian stucco.

Art of China making is a subject developed by Mrs. S. A. Stevens, who traces the advance in the art from the early history of China to the modern manufactures both at home and abroad.

That the month of August is the time for preparation for fall gardening is suggested in an article by F. C. McNabb, whose practical experience enables him to give information of value to all who are interested in home gardens.

Modern Factory Supplants Fire Destroyed Shop

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SAN DIEGO, July 19. — Six months after fire destroyed the candy factory of Showley Brothers, the modern new plant of this pioneer confectionery firm, costing about $250,000, was completed and business resumed on a larger scale than ever.

The new factory, located at Eighth and K streets, contains almost every modern device now in use in the candy making business. The building is 100x100 feet, of fireproof construction, and is three stories high.

The Showley Brothers company, which started in business twenty years ago in a small room, now ships its products to every Western State.

Action of the Santa Monica Chamber of Commerce, last week in indorsing the Shoreham Apartment-Hotel project, goes on record as being unique in the annals of chamber history, according to the Frank Meline Company. This is the first time a chamber of commerce, in Santa Monica has gone on record as indorsing a stock issue, it is stated.

Los Angeles has fifty-one nationally known industries!

These are exclusive of the world-renowned film companies which produce 82 per cent of the sphere's motion pictures.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce presents these facts in answer to a report declared circulated from Northern California cities, particularly Oakland, that the Southland metropolis attracts only the "small-fry" manufacturer.

All of the trade names of these products rank high in national recognition. A few of them follow:

Canco, manufactured by the American Can Company; Bradley's Commercial Fertilizer, American Agricultural Chemical Company; Aetco and Kanspar, American Encaustic Tiling Company; Acme Quality, Acme White Lead and Color Works; F. HUGE PLANT OF LATEST DESIGN

Mammoth Structure to Rise on Hostetter Tract

Union Pacific Rail Spurs Will Serve Factory

Large Warehouse Included in Novel Plans

The latest ideas in manufacturing plant design are to be incorporated at once in a factory on the Hostetter tract, according to R. O. Whyman, construction engineer and manager of this property.

This huge structure will be 1216 feet long and 330 feet wide, and will consist of two long buildings joined at one end by five-story warehouse of 242,000 feet floor space. The manufacturing plant proper covers 511,000 feet of floor space.

Two parallel spur tracks direct from the main line of the Union Pacific will be laid between the two manufacturing wings and continue on through the warehouse, and loading platforms the entire length will serve each individual tenant.

LIGHTING GOOD

By this design lighting facilities are made particularly good. The reinforced concrete construction of this Class A building permits maximum floor loads for the heaviest kind of manufacturing.

Units of from 5000 to 100,000 square feet and over will be leased to tenants, and on this basis the lessors will acquire title to their unit at the end of twenty years with no additional payments.

ENCOURAGEMENT GIVEN

"We are building this plant to encourage new and young industries who do not wish to invest large sums at once in plants of their own," said Mr. Whyman, "but require the capital to get into production right at the start. Besides the railroad and loading facilities, the warehouse service is especially advantageous, for the individual tenants may store their surplus manufactured stock as well as raw materials here and thus keep their manufacturing unit clear for rapid production.

Factory architects are now collaborating with construction engineers in the final details of the building plans, and work will start at once. Some of the units will be ready November 1, the remainder by January 1.

FUND IS RAISED

Many of the plants which came to Los Angeles during 1923 and 1924 were brought here through the efforts of the Chamber of Commerce, according to A. G. Arnoll, manager of the chamber's industrial department, which is conducting a "balanced prosperity" campaign in an effort to bring more factories to the city.

Under provisions of this campaign, a fund is being raised out of which experts in various lines of industry are employed to make complete, unbiased surveys of the city's resources with a view to determining just what types of industry can be supported here.

These surveys, in the making of which the experts have been given absolute free rein, and which are not distorted, are placed in the hands of the industrial leaders whom the chamber hopes to interest in the city's manufacturing possibilities.

FIRST READY-BUILT DUPLEX IS DESIGNED

STEP MARKS NEW ERA IN THE HISTORY OF COAST COMPANY

The first double or duplex house ever designed and erected by Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., is now under construction on one of the lots at the company's exhibition grounds, 1330 South Hill street. This structure, according to W. P. Butte, president of the home builders, marks a new era in the firm's history.

"The duplex house we are now building here on our exhibition grounds," Mr. Butte said, "is to be stucco, finished in lavender and salmon. This home is to be two complete houses in one, and each is to contain a good-sized living-room, a bedroom, kitchen and spacious breakfast nook. In the living-room there will be a large bed closet set off very attractively with doors of full-size French glass."

SAN FERNANDO INDUSTRY ALIVE

Workmen Rush Cannery at Pacoima Location

Plan Start Soon on Burbank Potash Factory

Ground Broken for Van Nuys Brick Works

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

SAN FERNANDO, July 19.—Industrial development of the valley is keeping abreast of other expansion as revealed by the new enterprises started during the current week. At Pacoima, builders are racing against time in an endeavor to erect the Brooklyn Heights Canning Company plant. The structure will be 74 by 112 feet, and is alongside the Southern Pacific tracks on the easterly side of San Fernando Road.

The new home of this institution is designed to accommodate the machinery now utilized in the plant of the same corporation on Boulder street, Los Angeles. The desire is to have the plant ready for operation by the time the tomato crop is ripe. The building permit for the first unit of the new plant calls for the outlay of $10,000.

At the outskirts of Burbank work on the new soda and potash factory is to start soon.

Ground has been broken at Van Nuys for the establishment of the factory of the Owens Brick Company. The site of twenty acres is to represent an investment of $65,000 in land and equipment.

The Heinz interests this week started work in the new pickle plant, turning out the first dill pickles ever prepared for the market in the valley.

In the same vicinity the new iceless refrigerator factory is soon to be in operation, the site having been selected and plans accepted for the building.

FACTORY SITES MEAN PAYROLLS

and buildings of these dozen plants alone represent investment of approximately $1,500,000. They employ about 600 persons, with a pay roll of approximately $25,000 a week, or $1,300,000 a year. With their families these employees in this single group number not less than 2500 persons who derive their entire living from this one industrial subdivision and spend their $1,300,000 in Los Angeles for food, clothing, domicile, newspapers and entertainment that make up the happy home life of California's independent labor.

These factories are not sheds nor shanties. They are substantial and artistic buildings of steel, brick, terra cotta, glass and concrete. The employees have modern conveniences and comforts. The grounds are parked and planted to lawns and shrubbery. And as long as the city of Los Angeles stands this industrial subdivision will make millions of dollars of new money for new commodities manufactured, which will go to the upkeep of the residential subdivisions needing this production for their existence.

The factories above alluded to include two brick factories now under construction for future requirements; the Commercial Fixture Company, warehouse for Von's; Superior Honey Company warehouse for the Austin Company; Black Planing Mill Company; Modern Warehouses, Inc.; Coast Oilfield Supply Company; L. A. Spring Bed Company; the C. L. Greeno Company and Pratt & Warner. Other industrial buildings besides these have been erected in this tract for United Furniture Manufacturing Company; Bleeker Brothers Sheet Metals; Ganahl Lumber Company; Archer Blower and Pipe Company; Repath Manufacturing Company; King Brothers Smelting Company; Pacific Glass Company; A. F. Hartung; H. O. Tucker; George A. Williams; Kelly Machinery Company; Bishopric Manufacturing Company; Veal Reed Chair Company; Normany Products Company; Union Cornice Works; W. H. Cain Radiator Company; Tibbetts Westerfield Paint Company, and there are also several storage yards for contractors and a number of tenant industries. The latter nearly double the number of workers in the district.

So this single industrial subdivision, which sixteen months ago was barren land, at the present time is supporting the families of more than 1000 workers, who spend a total of $3,000,000 a year with "the butcher, the baker and candlestick maker" in other sections of Los Angeles and Southern California.

Speculative selling of lots or parcels in industrial subdivisions is not sought, in spite of the fact that in Los Angeles these lots have advanced at a greater rate than residential. The industrial subdivider is interested in making his lots produce pay rolls, hence he looks for and sells to actual factory builders. He knows that every pay roll increases the value of the entire tract, while it helps at the same time to increase values throughout the metropolitan district.

The difference between the continuous production of money for general circulation on the part of an industrial subdivision and the residential property which lives from the product of the industrial is what I have been trying to make clear. This simple instance will show how necessary to the future prosperity of Los Angeles is the continued expansion of manufacturing. And when it is stated that the industrial development of the past three years has failed by far to keep pace with the residential and population increase, those with money to invest will see the necessity for getting behind our industries with their money and also the necessity for backing up all the work of our civic and commercial bodies and organizations that are trying to bring new and build up existing industries in Los Angeles territory.

MANY PERMITS ISSUED

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

VAN NUYS, July 19.—July building figures are showing an increase. During the week a total of forty-seven permits was issued for the valley annexation district. These represented an outlay for improvement totaling $47,275. Of the whole number of permits issued, ten were for the Van Nuys zone and called for an expenditure of $10,550.

ROCK BUNKERS ARE OPENED

The new rock and gravel bunkers of the Los Angeles Rock and Gravel Company, located at El Monte, were opened with a grand barbecue last week. It is estimated that 3000 persons partook of the hospitality of H. W. Hawley, president of the Los Angeles Rock and Gravel Company, and enjoyed the splendid program which had been arranged.

The new bunkers are at the El Monte terminus of the private railway line which the rock and gravel company has constructed from their rock crushers at Baldwin Park, to a connection with the main line of the Southern Pacific Railroad at El Monte. The capacity of the new plant permits distribution of several hundred loads of sand and gravel daily, and the company owns and operates its own engines and rolling stock.

The program at the barbecue was in the charge of Frank M. Colville, secretary of the El Monte Chamber of Commerce. Among the speakers were Asa Keyes, District Attorney; C. S. Ranger, Mayor of El Monte and president of the El Monte Chamber of Commerce; H. W. Hawley, president of the Los Angeles Rock and Gravel Company; T. H. Lambert, representative of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of San Gabriel Valley, and P. T. McCaffery, construction engineer. The Harold Brown Orchestra of eight pieces furnished music.

The barbecue was under the direction of Jose Romero, Spanish chef.

The rock and gravel company will employ about 100 men at their El Monte plant.

SUBURBANITES REACHING OUT

tween 2000 and 3000 acres are set out in apricots and peaches. W. A. Hackworth who has one of the largest poultry farms had a net profit of $2.16 a hen last year and will increase his flock by several thousand next year. There are silica mines at the south end of town.

The Nueva district, only about a mile distant from Perris, claims better fruit this year than for many years past. Los Angeles and Riverside residents originally bought up this section, called it the Nueva Land Company and sold it in tracts of from five to forty acres. Wells were put in on many of these ranches and used for irrigating.

OLIVE ACREAGE

There are 250 acres of olives in the Nueva district, fifty acres in Bartlett pears and fifty-five in grapes. Besides these, crops of corn, potatoes, apricots and peaches are grown. The August Rohrbacker ranch is in this section and the Peter B. Kyne ranch is not far distant. The Santa Fe Railroad has built a spur into this country so that fruit can be carried in carload lots. The Nueva Road district is now spending $114,000 on a new road which will be eight miles long. This new road starts at the Perris Riverside Boulevard and will eventually reach to Marino Boulevard.

Alfalfa has become the standard forage plant of the world, and is a success in the Perris Valley. Properly tended fields may be cut six times each year and will yield from eight to ten tons per acre and the average price of baled alfalfa has been more than $12 per ton.

The main business streets of Perris will be paved in the near future by the town and county of Riverside. Perris has a population of 700. The new Lowrey Block, housing four stores, was added to the town last year as well as a new garage and a number of small business concerns.

Perris has a union high school employing twelve teachers. There is a bank, library, Congregational, Christian Science, Catholic and Methodist churches here. Several fraternal organizations are here as well as a woman's club and chamber of commerce.

THESE two cartoons by Gale, reprinted from the Los Angeles “Times” of recent dates, strikingly point the crying need for a sane and proper reservation of Beach and Playground areas. Palos Verdes has done this.

This can NEVER be in PALOS VERD

3½ miles of Shore Line and more than 450 acres of the New City are reserved in perpetuity, against either private ownership or business encroachment

IF some people had their way, the beautiful beaches—for which California is famous—would no longer be accessible. Palos Verdes in other hands might, too, have become a commercialized district, and its wonderful shore line forever forbidden to the public

Instead, the Palos Verdes coast line is practically the only long strip between Santa Monica and Balboa that is not given over to dwelling shacks, cheap amusements, and other forms of private or commercial or industrial ownership.

And the beauty of it is that the Palos Verdes coast line will always remain intact—as it is today—dedicated to the community.

Rigid Protective Restrictions ensure a wonderful time for all children in Palos Verdes.

Never can their free open ‘play spaces’ be taken away from them. A public park or a school playground will never be demolished to make way for a commercial building.

The 157-acre Golf Course in Palos Verdes will always be there for the recreation of the grown-ups. The decorative driveways and parkways will never be sacrificed, they are part of the pre-arranged program of development. The New City by the Sea will be the premier residential community of the Southland and it will remain as Nature intended it should.

Why not make Palos Verdes the objective of your next automobile drive. Go down and verify these exclusive features for yourself. There are over 20 miles of good roads and avenues, the location and the view are unsurpassed. Palos Verdes has all the appeal of the ‘outdoors’ with none of the drawbacks existing in many seaside communities. Palos Verdes has just what all right-thinking people want for a permanent home facing the Pacific.

Homesites are still $2000 and up.

$20,000. $20,000. MR. BARGAIN HUNTER.

The sudden change from adversity to prosperity has come with such rapidity that I am afraid some of you Bargain Hunters will be too slow in appreciating what it means in buying a home now and doing it quick. Follow the world's stock market and you will see that terrific advances have been made in the last few days. You can apply the same to buying a home as you can to buying wheat.

There is a tremendous scarcity in two-story dwellings in a desirable neighborhood around the $25,000 mark. In fact from Westlake Park to Beverly Hills I defy you to locate 10 new two-story homes that can be purchased for the amount mentioned. Often the remark is made to me, "too high, they will come down," and "they will keep it at that price." What's the use of kidding yourself any further. They are not too high. These homes are much less in price than is being offered in Chicago, Detroit or any other large city. As for keeping them at the price asked is concerned, that's a joke, because they are selling them every day.

Now, I am offering you a two-story stucco, modern in every particular, located in the Wilshire district, 5 bedrooms, 2 baths, interior mahogany finished, large living room and it's all you will ever get for $20,000 and I personally believe it to be more for the money than anything I have ever seen. WHY I LIVE IN MAYWOOD

BECAUSE it is a community with a wonderful future.

Because some of America's greatest men are spending millions in MAYWOOD CENTRAL MFG. district, with its splendid factories, each one clean and wonderful.

Because Maywood is high, dry, has pure air, good restrictions, all streets paved, curbs, sidewalks, fine homes, gardens, cheap domestic water and lots of it from artesian wells; 4 grade schools and a high school to be built in the near future, good car service, good bus service.

Because Maywood is within the 5-mile circle from 7th and Broadway, located in the direct path of the MILLIONS being spent by the Union Pac., Santa Fe, Bandini, Dunn, Vernon and Central Mfg. districts.

Because Maywood is the logical and best residence and business center for all of the above fast-developing factory districts.

Because a good class of people live here. It is quiet and peaceful, restful to my nerves. I sleep well at night. A homelike place among people who appreciate each other.

CHAIN STORE ENTERPRISE.

"Rare opportunity for a capable business man to become financially and actively interested in a going and profitable concern."

An organization operating seven department stores in prosperous small cities in California is about to open four more stores and wish to associate themselves with young men of initiative, personality and a thorough knowledge of merchandising, together with their ability to make an investment in the concern.

The men who can measure up to the above qualifications, after sufficient training, will have complete charge of the stores in question and an opportunity to fill other new executive positions that are opening, together with the unlimited possibilities for expansion in the West, and especially in California, makes this proposition very interesting.

The organization in question will bear the strictest scrutiny and will expect the best of references from those interested.

When applying give experiences and some of your references in your first letter.

PROCESSIONS OF CATTLE ON BROADWAY RECALLED

Shoemaker Sage of New York Has Memory of Days When Horse Cars Furnished Thrills

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

NEW YORK, July 19.—There are many old-timers of New York and many who are not so old, and hundreds of thousands more scattered throughout the country, who can recall without effort the songs and plays of Harrigan and Hart, which were the songs and comedies and tragedies of the East Side and West Side and the song-and-dance and actor artists in their time. Many of the admirers of the famous team will remember their great hit of "The Market on Saturday Night," but many thousands of them never saw the old Washington Market about which was framed the play. Even the characters taken from it.

"Everybody in New York within reaching distance of the market went there some time during Saturday," said Thomas J. Kehoe, the shoemaker sage of 167 Greenwich street, who has lived where he is since the days of the Civil War, "and it was crowded till midnight and later. It opened at 5 a.m. to receive the market wagons loaded with fruit and vegetables and all kinds of produce from the farms of New Jersey and Long Island. Women went there with their baskets to do their marketing for over Sunday, and a lot of them had to wait until night when the old man came home with the pay envelope.

THINGS CHEAP THEN

"Mike and Phil Dwyer, the race-track plungers, had stands in the wholesale market and sold beef to the trade, and, believe me, the beef was good and cheap in those days; the best of it at 10 cents a pound and a little higher. Chicken and turkey sold at the same ratio, and you could get chicken for fricassee for 6 cents a pound that would melt in your mouth.

"Down at the end of Park Place, which was then known as Robinson street, was the Bull's Head, where they sold cattle on the hoof, and many a procession of live stock have I seen going up West street and sometimes along Broadway. In the old market there hung in the belfry the fire bell that used to awaken the echoes of the night to call out the Volunteer Fire Department. Everybody within earshot of that old bell turned out whenever it clanged the warning of fire.

"Old Engine No. 20 was in Cedar street near Trinity Place and Hose Carriage No. 49 was on Cedar street near Washington. The old market was between West and Washington streets and extended from Dey to Vesey. Right down there the steamships of the Anchor Line used to dock, and it was there that the Albany boats used to land.

"Gen. Thomas F. Barry, the great old soldier who made such a fine record and wound up at the head of the Department of the East on Governor's Island and died a few years ago, was born at 125 Greenwich street, where there is now a big building.

THE BRADY BOYS

"You may have heard of the Brady boys, and who hasn't? There were Dan and Jim, both rich men and fine fellows. They were both born down here—on Cedar street, I think it was. And it was little that 'Diamond Jim' Brady was thinking of diamonds in those days, although both he and Dan were always leaders among the boys of the neighborhood. You know 'Diamond Jim' fairly glistened with precious stones and jewels and wore a diamond stomacher, the cost of which I haven't the faintest idea, but it cost enough I dare say.

"Col. Cavanagh of the old Fighting Sixty-ninth Regiment, lived at 106 Cedar street, on the South Side, after the Civil War, and quite frequently Gen. Thomas Francis Meagher walked down there to call on him. That was a great event for the kiddies in the neighborhood. They'd all turn out to see the old hero and regar dhim with awe when he went by. The soldiers were quartered in those days over where the Postoffice Building is at Broadway and Park Row, and that was a great place for the kids to assemble.

"Chinamen sold the boys strong cigars and the women peddled them Washington pie, and neither made them sick. You couldn't hurt those kids, and they could digest a brick. Let the American kid alone and he'll shape himself all right.

PATRIOTIC PLAY

"Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's were great feasts for turkeys and they never carried the birds home in a bag. No, sir, a man would just throw the national bird over his shoulder and let the world know that he had a turkey. Washington's Birthday was another great day to celebrate. Down in the Bowery Theater they'd put on 'Washington Crossing the Delaware,' and what a show that was for the kids, my fellow countrymen!

"And another of the greatest cards at the old Bowery was Fanny Herring in 'Mazeppa.' Did you ever see 'Mazeppa?' Fanny was a wonder, and how the house did come down when Fanny, in tights, rode across the stage tied to the wild horse of Tartary! It was a noble steed from the street department. It carried ashes all day and carried Fanny at night. But we didn't know the difference, and Fanny would have got as great a hand if she dashed across the stage in tights on a Shetland pony.

"We went to Coney Island in the summer, but there wasn't much to go there for except the bathing. There were three ways to go through. One was by water on the old Idlewild, which was run by Norton & Murray, and carried you to Seagate, then known as Norton & Murray's point. In those days there were four houses between the point and what is now the west end of Coney Island.

RIDE ON HORSE CAR

"Then there was the old Gunther route; ferry to Brooklyn and then a horse car to Twenty-fifth street and Fifth avenue, where you got a train with a dummy engine. Or you could cross over on the Fulton Ferry and ride for the rest of the day, almost, on a horse car.

"Going to Hoboken in those days was a great outing for Sunday. Right outside the ferryhouse in Hoboken were the Otto Cottage Gardens, which were the land of milk and honey for beer. There were swings and rides for the kiddies, and it was a great family resort—an old-fashioned German beer garden. Where the best residential section of Hoboken is located today were the Elysian Fields; just a lot of country land, where they played mostly ball. And when we got up to the Palisades we thought we were half way to Albany.

"They used to have steamboat excursions; sometimes a steamer, with a couple of barges for dancing. But it was a great trip to take the steamer for an excursion to Fort Lee or Staten Island and make a day out of it. Now we go to either place in half an hour. But those were the great days."

HOUSTON TO SELL POWER TO BIG AREA

President Reveals Plans for Distribution by Plant to Cost $10,000,000

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

HOUSTON (Tex.) July 19.—Judge Edwin B. Parker, umpire of the Mixed Claims Commission, who is spending a few days at his old home here, stated that the $4,500,000 unit of the plant which the Houston Lighting and Power Company, of which he is president, is constructing on the Houston Ship Channel, is only a fraction of the ultimate size of the plant. The total cost will be approximately $10,000,000, he stated.

"We expect to place electric current at the gates of Galveston, Wharton, Orange, Beaumont, Port Arthur, Rosenberg and other Texas cities," he declared. "We will offer the current to the companies operating in these cities for distribution cheaper than they can manufacture it. In no instance do we expect to supercede the local company."

Judge Parker said that a total of 12,500 claims have come before the Mixed Claims Commission for adjudication. They cover a wide range. Some are for American merchant ships sunk at sea before the United States entered the war; some are for lives lost aboard passenger vessels sunk by the Germans; some for property owned by Americans in foreign countries and confiscated by the Germans. If the commissioners cannot agree upon a claim then Judge Parker rules, and his decision is final. Many claims are allowed some are disallowed, and others are considerably reduced. The total amount of claims so far presented has reached the sum of approximately $1,500,000,000. The work of the Mixed Claims Commission should be finished in another year, he thinks.

BANDIT LOOT HUNT LASTS FIFTY YEARS

Aged Recluse Still Seeks Cache of Oklahoma and Kansas Robber Gangs

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

ARKANSAS CITY (Kan.) July 19.—Elzy Harris, 70 years of age, still is searching for the treasure of the Cummins, Cook and Walker bandit gangs, which he firmly believes is buried in Southern Kansas or Northern Oklahoma.

Mr. Harris, a prosperous farmer, has been hunting for this treasure trove fifty years, and he has found just trace enough to encourage further search. He was in Arkansas City yesterday, looking for old-time maps and data that would aid him. He believes there is bandit loot buried in Natural Bridge Park, east of this city, a wooded section dotted with caves and hidden springs and rugged gulches that would require a lifetime of labor to explore.

An aged negro woman, whose name he refuses to reveal, is said to have seen part of this loot buried.

For twenty-five years, Harris has lived the life of a recluse, mostly in woods and canyons, carrying on his work alone, and he still believes he will be successful.

The bandit gangs referred to ranged this section in 1870. They looted wagon trains and stores, and were said at one time to have had more than $2,000,000 in gold dust. The members of the band were captured or killed, but the secret of the cache died with them.

Chicago Stock Yards to Help Sale by Clubs

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

CHICAGO, July 18.—Clubs of boys and girls all over the country who are growing calves and thereby earning money for their schooling and clothing will be interested to learn that the Chicago Union Stock Yards is offering its facilities to help the sale of these calves. Auction sales will take place at the yards every Tuesday afternoon during the country fair season.

The club movement has grown to such vast proportions, principally throughout the South, West and Southwest, that the packers have found it impossible to send buyers to all the county and State fairs where these baby beeves are exhibited. The stock yards offer makes it possible to bring these animals to the central market and sell them to the best advantage. The International Live-stock Exposition will furnish the auctioneer and have direct charge of the sales.

BRIDGE REPLACES OLD FORD

Memory of Emerson Hough to be Honored When Red River Structure is Dedicated

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WAURIKA (Okla.) July 19.—A toast to the memory of Emerson Hough, western fiction writer of international fame, will be drunk by Gov. Trapp of Oklahoma and Gov. Neff of Texas, about the middle of August, on a bridge being erected across Red River north of No-herds of the 60's.

cattle herds of the sixties.

The bridge will be dedicated at that time and the ceremony is regarded as appropriate because of the herd of cattle driven from Gonzales county, Texas, to Abilene, Kan., in 1867, told about in Hough's "North of 36," across Red Rriver near the site of this bridge.

The Nocona Bridge Company, which is erecting the bridge, expects to invite the highway officials of Texas and Oklahoma and other representative men to attend the dedicatory ceremonies. Just prior to these ceremonies, an old covered wagon, drawn by a team of oxen and followed by a heard of cattle will be driven across the stream near the bridge. It is planned to take motion-pictures of this movement as well as of the bridge ceremonies.

Nacona residents have proposed that the principal highway between Bowie and Red River, passing through Montague and Nocona, be named the Emerson Hough highway. On the Oklahoma side it has been proposed that the cattle trail be marked with suitable monuments but not that a highway be established, and that the trail will be called the Emerson Hough trail. Mr. Hough himself, while gathering story material, traveled over this trail.

MINNEAPOLIS

MINNEAPOLIS, July 19.—Minneapolis's population has increased officially by 36,698 since the 1920 census, bringing the total to 417,280, the Censusu Bureau at Washington estimated today. The figure was arrived at by applying the ratio growth shown for the decade between 1910 and 1920, when the last actual census was taken, to the last four years. The 1920 census gave Minneapolis's population under two headings, 380,582 in the city proper and 29,902 "outside the city." The estimate given out today makes mention of population just outside the city limits, where residential development has been rapid. The last City Directory estimates the city's population at 466,116 on the basis of 21,960 names listed.

HILL PALACE TO BE BUILT BY OIL MAN

Frank Ketch Buys Site for Summer Home in Oklahoma Mountain Paradise

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

OKLAHOMA CITY (Okla.) July 19.—Frank Ketch, millionaire oil operator of Ardmore, and until recently administrator of the estate of the late Jake L. Hamon, has purchased a 4000-acre ranch in the heart of the Wichita Mountains, Southwestern Oklahoma, and has contracted for erection there of a summer home that architects say will be the most beautiful in the State. The site for the home is near where Gen. Philip Sheridan established a camp in the Wichitas more than sixty years ago, and near the base of a peak that was named in honor of Gen. Sheridan.

The ranch is in the vicinity of the Fort Sill military reservation and the United States game preserve, a few miles west of Medicine Park, and near the ranch of Frank Rush, formerly superintendent of the game preserve. It was bought at a receiver's sale when assets of the Powers Land and Cattle Company were put on the block. The retreat once was frequented by Mexican gold seekers and later by Colorado miners who believed they had found paying gold, silver and copper ores.

Two large lakes are involved in the general scheme of improvements. One of these is partly complete and has been stocked with 60,000 bass. Gardens, drives and shady scenic spots are to be laid out and beautified. The grazing lands already have been stocked with pedigreed cattle and several hundred acres are in cultivation. The home is to be completed and ready for dedication by Hallowe'en.

LAND REVERSION IN STATE SMALL

Oklahoma Buyers Paying Delinquencies

Good Wheat Crop to Help Cancel Debts

Surrenders Set at Three Per Cent of Total

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

OKLAHOMA CITY (Okla.) July 19.—Of the 2,500,000 acres of land sold by the State in Western Oklahoma a few years ago for about $30,000,000, probably not more than 75,000 to 80,000 acres, valued at about $300,000, will revert to the State because of the inability of purchasers to pay, according to the Oklahoma Land Office. During the first half of this year a number of tracts reverted because of poor crops, business depression and the fact that some purchasers paid too much for the land.

At the beginning of the year delinquencies amounted to about $1,250,000. This was reduced during the first six months by $400,000 to $500,000. Officials believe that a good wheat crop grown in that territory will enable farmers who did not surrender their land to pay up before the end of the year.

Practically the entire amount of delinquencies in the agricultural and grazing leasing division probably will be collected this year. The amount at the beginning of the year was about $250,000. Collections to July 1 have totaled $187,000. There are 800,000 acres of State land under agricultural and grazing leases.

In recent years the amount loaned on farm lands by the Land Office has increased from $5,000,000, an amount given the State by the United States government, to $22,000,000. The sales division also has about $16,000,000 placed at interest. The total of annual interest collections is more than $2,000,000.

About 500 agricultural lessees, whose leases expired about two years ago, declined to sign renewals unless the State amended the lease to provide that it carried mineral rights. No such amendment was made. Early in July it was announced that practically all lessees had signed renewals. A suit is pending in the United States Supreme Court, initiated by the State association of school land lessees, to determine whether the lessees have mineral rights.

SHOWCASE COMPANY IN NEW PLANT

Weber Firm, for Quarter of Century Located in City, Expands

Among the remarkable instances of commercial progress in Los Angeles one of the most outstanding is the development of the Weber Showcase and Fixture Company. Not quite twenty-five years ago Fred Weber started a small cabinet shop in the days when Los Angeles was a pueblo. Last Tuesday they moved into what is believed to be the largest plant of its kind in the West—and in some ways the most unusual of its kind in the world.

Modern methods of manufacturing and the latest type of machinery will enable a 50 per cent increase in efficiency this year over last. The new plant is a one-story affair, mostly glass, which permits brilliant lighting in all parts of the factory. It covers more than six acres with departments devoted to the manufacturing of high-grade showcases and store fixtures, soda fountains and bank and office partitions.

During the last year the sales of the Weber Showcase and Fixture Company have increased 33⅓ per cent over the previous year. The company has been aggressively developing new business and in the last year has established export trade with South America, Central America, Porto Rico and Honolulu.

Not satisfied with covering the Northwest, they have extended sales representation and made sales campaigns in Texas, Florida and Illinois, besides developing the territories of Arizona, Washington, Utah, Idaho, Nevada and Oregon. Present plans contemplate the development of other States.

At the present time the Weber Showcase and Fixture Company is selling store equipment in direct competition with large manufacturers in the East in their territory. This is due to the unusual type of display equipment, which is totally different from that found in the East.

TULSA EDITOR PLANS BATH HOUSE PROJECT

COL. CLARENCE DOUGLAS TO DEVELOP RESORT IN OKLAHOMA

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

OKLAHOMA CITY (Okla.) July 19.—Col. Clarence Douglas of Tulsa, pioneer and picturesque newspaper editor of the old Indian Territory, has obtained a permit from the State Issues Commission to sell stock in a bathhouse enterprise at Claremore, a mineral-water resort in Eastern Oklahoma. The plans of Col. Douglas call for the erection this year of a $40,000 unit of a bathhouse and hotel plant. Eventually the plant will be one of the largest in the Southwest, he says.

A franchise was granted recently by the officials of the city of Claremore to the Oklahoma Union Railway Company of Tulsa, which is to extend an interurban railway from Tulsa to Claremore. Officials of the company expect to be operating cars before the end of the year. This company, now owned and operated by the Slick and Frates interests, expects to continue the interurban to Miami, Okla., and later to lay a line east from Bristow to Oklahoma City. This would give Oklahoma City and Joplin, Mo., interurban connection.

Col. Douglas resigned some time ago as manager of the Tulsa Chamber of Commerce and has been devoting himself to the erection of the twenty-story Mayo Hotel at Tulsa. This building, he says, will be completed by the end of the year.

RANCHERS FIGHT BUGS WITH BUGS

Experts Talk to Local Citrus Growers

Tell of Battles Being Waged Against Pests

Two-Day Session Ends at Pasadena

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

PASADENA, July 19.—War that has been waged on the black scale, which attacks citrus orchards, for the past few years was explained in detail this morning to several hundred ranchers representing six Southern California counties gathered at the Pasadena High School. Today was the second and last day of the annual Citrus Institute and Pest Control School.

Harry S. Smith, associate professor of entomology of the University of California, was the principal speaker of the day. He told how beneficial parasites were imported to Southern California from South Africa and used in local citrus orchards to destroy the dreaded scale. For four years, he said, E. W. Rust of Pasadena has been in South Africa sending shipments of beetles to this country. They are sent by cold storage.

The University of California is now experimenting with eight species of black scale parasites, the speaker declared. In China investigators are working with red and purple scale.

A. J. Basinger, also from the northern university told the ranchers of the treacherous orange tortrix, a buff colored moth which does great damage although it lives but a few days. This pest bores holes in the fruit and leaves them infected.

H. M. Armitage, superintendent of the Los Angeles county insectary, discussed the damage done by the mealybug. Every year, he said, hundreds of acres of fruit are damaged by this pest.

At the conclusion of today's meeting C. E. Meyers of Glendora, and R. S. Worglum of Los Angeles were appointed as a committee to draft a resolution expressing the organization's appreciation to the University of California for the work they are doing along this line. Knowles Ryerson of Los Angeles presided today.

Play Old Game With New Rules and Gasoline

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ORANGE, July 19.—The famous "hare and hound" chase will be revived in Orange county tomorrow, modernized, however, to the extent that motorcycles will play the leading roles.

The event will be sponsored by the Orange County Motorcycle Club and is scheduled to start from in front of the clubrooms, Santa Ana, at 8 o'clock tomorrow morning.

A side-car outfit, piloted by Glen Copeland, and carrying Buster Skaggs as passenger, will represent the "hare." The sidecar will be given a ten-minute start on more than a dozen motorcycles, carrying solo mounts, which will act as "hounds" in the modernized game.

According to rules laid down today, the sidecar will cast paper along the route wherever it makes turns in the road. The motorcycles, starting ten minutes later, will follow this trail.

The chase will be conducted over rough, unpaved roads, the machines being banned from the paved highways. Should the solo machines overtake the sidecar within three hours, they will be declared winners, otherwise the "hare" will be victorious.

Those participating as "hounds" include Dee Dorsten, Hank Nuslien, Floyd Douglas, Byrell Holland, Roy Douglas, Ray Roberts, John Carpenter, Lee Kaiser, Charles Skaggs, Ralph Van Arnam and Kenneth Huston.

LOSE BOOZE IN ONTARIO RUM RAID

Officers Find Three Stills, Gallons of Liquor and Make Four Arrests

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

ONTARIO, July 19.—Three stills, 5500 gallons of mash, 100 gallons of wine and sixty gallons of brandy were confiscated and four alleged bootleggers were arrested in raids along the eastern border of the city early today under the direction of Constable J. A. Larson.

Sam Mazzola and Nick Mazzola, well-known Italian ranch owners, were arrested and a large still in full operation was seized in a raid on their ranch at Eighth street and Vineyard avenue, this morning. Three gallons of mash and a small quantity of liquor were also seized. The brothers denied all knowledge of the still, declaring that they had leased their property.

A raid of the ranch of James Matheson, Cucamonga avenue and Eighth street, resulted in his arrest and the seizure of a still, 1500 gallons of mash and 40 gallons of grape brandy. V. Servetti was arrested at his ranch, Baker avenue and Fifth street, where the officers found 250 gallons of apricot mash and 10 gallons of liquor. Participating in the raids with Constable Larson were Deputy Constables J. E. Castro, John Orchard and R. A. Bradford and Special Dry Officer J. D. Orendorff. The arrested men are slated to be arraigned before Justice W. C. Belden in Cucamonga township Monday.

Gun Fire Stops Busy Peddler of Bad Booze

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

PASADENA, July 19.—Shoppers were considerably startled, as was Mike Cremidas, alleged bootlegger, when Officers William A. Beal and Harry Thomas opened fire on the fleeing liquor vendor this morning on East Colorado street during the busiest hour of the day.

Four bullets from the officers' guns found their mark in Cremidas's high-priced roadster. One barely missed the man's head and shattered the windshield, while another hit the side of a door panel in which was secreted a quantity of liquor. Several bottles were broken by the flying lead and the bootleg liquor flowed freely to the street.

Cremidas who resides at 2118 Scott avenue, Los Angeles, was in the act of delivering whisky when the arrest was made, the officers report. Beal and Thomas disguised in overalls, witnessed the sale of one bottle and then attempted to arrest Cremidas. Instead, the Los Angeles man cursed the officers and put his car in gear. As he started off he attempted to run down the two officers, it is said.

After the arrest was made several hundred pint bottles filled with the illegal drink were found in secret compartments in the car. At the City Jail Cremidas was charged with illegal possession, transportation and sale of liquor. Bail was fixed at $2000, which up to a late hour today had not been furnished.

This is the third member of a large Los Angeles rum ring that Pasadena vice squad officers have apprehended this week. Yesterday T. E. Tobin and Carl Cox, both of Los Angeles were caught delivering liquor to wealthy Pasadena families. Both were fined heavily.

LONE WOLF LOSES NERVE

Boy Bandit Who Terrorized San Bernardino Cries When Judge Pronounces Sentence

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SAN BERNARDINO, July 19.—Crying like a child, Myron H. Turvey, the self-styled "lone wolf," whose banditry in the fashionable residential district baffled police for weeks, was sent to a State reformatory today by Superior Judge Benjamin F. Warmer.

On his mother's shoulder, the youth continued to sob, crying for joy that he was not sent to the penitentiary on his plea of guilty to a charge of robbery. Judge Warmer granted the appeal of the youth's parents and sentenced him to a reformatory until he becomes of age, in an attempt, the jurist said, to reclaim Turvey for society. The boy is 19 years of age, and the son of one of the city's most prominent families.

Turvey was not the boasting "lone-wolf" bandit in the courtroom that he was when the police captured him six weeks ago, after a sensational midnight chase through the city. Joking with the officers about how he had fooled them for weeks, the youth then said he was the "lone wolf" who had robbed twenty-seven homes. Questioned further, Turvey admitted authorship of the vulgar notes that terrorized a score of housewives, who found them slipped under their doors after being summoned by mysterious knocking. Today, Turvey was broken. Six weeks' imprisonment in the County Jail had stripped him of his boastfulness and he was a pale, trembling figure before the jurist.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

BAKERSFIELD, July 19.—Laura Luce, 14-year-old Wasco district girl who received lacerations and bruises when a dynamite cap exploded in her hand near the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Luce, today was reported to be recovering rapidly at the San Joaquin Hospital. She is being treated by Dr. N. N. Brown.

The girl lives about twelve miles west of the Wasco townsite on the Lost Hills-Paso Robles Highway. The little girl was playing with several smaller children along the highway when she found an unexploded dynamite cap which she attempted to open with her finger nail. The other little tots gathered around and laughed with glee to see the sparks fly. Then, either due to heat from the friction or because Laura penetrated to the explosive materials on the interior, the cap exploded. The screams from the children brought her father running to find the little girl badly mangled and bruised. He immediately rushed her to the office of Dr. Matlock, Wasco surgeon.

When first-aid attention was applied it was found the cap had blown off the thumb and forefinger of the girl's left hand and that the flying particles had entered her left eye, apparently destroying the sight. Her body and hands were badly lacerated and bruised by other flying particles. Dr. Matlock brought her in to a hospital in Bakersfield. The other children were not injured.

SECOND LIQUOR HAUL

Santa Barbara Officers Find Stock in Garage

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SANTA BARBARA, July 19.—Following a clew received late last night, Sheriff James Ross and a group of deputies made the second large liquor haul here within two days when nearly 300 cases of Scotch and Canadian whisky were seized late today in a garage in one of the most fashionable sections of Montecito, on land adjoining a house which had been burned.

It is thought that the liquor had been cached in the building without the knowledge of the owner of the property and had been landed from a ship and hauled over the Coast Highway from Carpinteria. Many of the cases and bales bore marks similar to those seized when the Sheriff raided a liquor-landing party and took 235 cases of whisky two nights ago, which were being landed from a ship in the channel, which later escaped.

According to officers, the license number of the truck which is believed to have brought the liquor here, has been obtained, and arrests are expected within a few hours.

TO FACE TRIALS IN FEDERAL COURT

FRESNO, July 19.—Guilio Biondi, wanted for violation of the national Prohibition Act at Newman, and Jim Lombardo of Los Banos, were placed in the County Jail as United States prisoners last night by Sidney J. Shannon, deputy United States marshal, and Thomas J. Niceley, Federal prohibition agent.

Lombardo was arrested at Los Banos during recent raids made there by J. C. Williams, local private detective, operating for Merced county authorities, and turned over to Niceley for trial in the Federal court. Biondi was also taken into custody by Williams, acting for Shannon, who has been seeking Biondi for four months on a warrant issued by the Federal court at San Francisco.

ABANDON BOROUGH PLAN

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ZELZAH, July 19.—The Zelzah community, which was entertaining dreams of operating under a borough system, is today abandoning the thought, upon receipt of information that the borough form of government is not legally applicable to a 4000-acre community that has a population under 40,000. The way under which this semiself-government plan could be adapted to the community, according to the borough advocates, would be to make the scheme so comprehensive as to include the entire west end of the valley. In this connection they state that there is no thought at this time of undertaking a campaign of that nature.

Upland Man Is Candidate for Legion Honors

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

REDLANDS, July 19.—San Bernardino county, which furnished a candidate that was runner-up for the post of Commander of the American Legion of the State in the convention last year, will probably furnish another again this year.

Harold C. Moore of Upland, who is the commander of the County Inter-post Council, will likely be the candidate. He managed the campaign of Bruce W. McDaniel of this city, who only needed a few votes to be made commander at the last convention.

The posts of the Eleventh Congressional District are sending delegates to Santa Ana for a meeting tomorrow night at which time a caucus on the activities of the district in the State convention will be held.

Mr. Moore is believed to have an excellent chance because the north is split between Fred Bebergall and Judge A. E. Graupner.

MUST FACE COURT ON ASSAULT CHARGE

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

BAKERSFIELD, July 19.—Motion to dismiss a charge of having committed assault with a deadly weapon brought against Newt Walker, was denied today by Justice Edward V. Jones. Walker is charged with having shot and wounded Floyd Fisher at French Gulch, on the Isabella-Kernville road last Sunday.

The complaint against Walker was sworn to by F. T. Fisher, brother of the wounded man. On the contention that the complaining witness was not familiar with the facts of the case, Attorney Rowen Irwin argued for a dismissal of the information against Walker.

According to the brother of the wounded man, who swore out the complaint, Newt Walker assaulted Fisher, shooting him twice with a revolver. According to F. T. Fisher's allegations, Walker's shooting was without provocation.

Mr. Young states that Becky's eggs average 6⅝ by 7½ and one of her companions a Rhode Island hen recently laid an egg measuring 6⅝ by 8¼.

GAME FISH VICTIMS OF GREAT FIRE

Heat and Ashes Work Havoc Along Streams in Mountain Region

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

BAKERSFIELD, July 19.—All the fish in Bull Run Creek will probably die as a result of the forest fire in the Greenhorn Mountain district of the Sequoia National Forest, from ashes floating down the water, Forest Supervisor Frank P. Cunningham at Hot Springs, said today.

Kern River fish may also die in great numbers, Mr. Cunningham said, since Bull Run Creek flows into the river, and since the fire burned along the river bank for some distance.

"California has suffered an enormous loss in her forest wealth, about half the watershed of Bull Run Creek has been destroyed, which will materially affect the water level in Kern River and the State must bear a fire-fighting cost of at least $100,000 as a result for Greenhorn Mountain fire which has been burning in the Sequoia National Forest for almost three weeks."

These announcements were made by Forest Supervisor Cunningham at Hot Springs, who reported that the fire is now dying out. About forty men are retained patrolling the burned-over area and will be held for four or five days more, Mr. Cunningham said.

The fire, which is said to have been the worst so far in the State this year, burned over about 25,000 acres. The break of the fire line across the Kern River, which occurred several days ago, has now been fully controlled. A small fire is burning within the burned-over area, but is being closely guarded.

VICTIM OF FATE

Mentone Merchant Has More Than One Man's Share

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

REDLANDS, July 19.—Hard luck is the lot of T. H. Lehmann, owner of a department store at Mentone, near here.

Four months ago two men entered the store at Mentone and asked for tobacco. Lehmann opened the money drawer when given a bill. He was shot by Marvin Smiley, one of the two bandits, and for several weeks was in the hospital, slowly recovering from what it was thought would be a fatal wound.

Soon after he went to the hospital, his son, who had been seriously ill with tuberculosis, became worse and was taken to a sanatorium. Before the father had recovered his health the young man died.

A week ago Mr. Lehmann was again taken to the hospital because the old wound began to bother him and it was decided an operation was necessary.

While in the hospital, his home, next to his store, caught fire and burned to the ground. The store was saved after the fire department had been called. Mr. Lehmann is in a serious condition.

WATER FOR THE FUTURE

Head of Chamber of Commerce Comments on Plan Recently Suggested

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ORANGE, July 19.—Discussing the article appearing in The Times Sunday, the 13th inst., relating to a community aqueduct plan, V. D. Johnson, secretary of the Orange Community Chamber of Commerce, today declared that from the number of Orange people remarking favorably about the plan it evidently had created considerable local interest.

"However," said the secretary, "the problem is so vast and the equities, not only of the various communities, but of various classes of occupation to be served, are so diverse that it certainly will require to the fullest extent the 'big, generous, broad-minded, practicable' way recommended by The Times in order that all the issues involved can be fairly and satisfactorily adjusted."

"Particularly," he continued, "the matter of such water as would be used for agricultural purposes. If the entire Southland is to be included in the plan, then there is of necessity included also the acreage of the farmers of the Southland. Since it is true that no farmer could afford to irrigate with water at city prices there would have to be some equitable adjustment whereby water for irrigation could be furnished at a rate considerably less than that used for domestic purposes.

"If the farmers' lands would have to be taxed, bonded or otherwise encumbered in order to secure the proposed aqueduct development, then such tax or encumbrance should bring a benefit rather than a burden. With this part of the problem worked out, there would be removed, insofar as the farmer is concerned, a chief objection, and he would be left with the splendid asset of a never-failing water supply.

"The article states also that with the increase of population through subdivisions and other development, agricultural lands in certain portions of Southern California rapidly are being converted into residential districts, the writer stating, however, that the water used for agricultural purposes has been found to be approximately equal to the amount required when the acreage was converted into residential land.

"There is little comfort in the thought that our agricultural lands will constantly be diminished. There yet remain many thousand acres of land in Southern California that could be brought under the plow if water were available for irrigation and it would appear that a wise and beneficial plan would be to make such arrangements as would care not only for the farm lands that might later be converted into residential districts, but also for future development of irrigable acreage throughout the region.

"Southern California, even though it some day will reach an immensity of population as yet undreamed, will never see the time when it can afford to let lie idle one single acre of land that is capable of so marvelous and profitable development from an agricultural point of view.

SEES END OF CITY'S WATER WAR

Manager of Alhambra in Effort to Pour Oil on Troubled Waves

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ALHAMBRA, July 19.—Peaceful settlement of the water dispute which has been waged between the cities of Alhambra and Pasadena for the past year was predicted today by City Manager J. Floyd Moore, who announced that intended litigation against the Crown City would be dropped.

An injunction to stop Pasadena from drawing water from the Bland well had been prepared by City Attorney Gould at the direction of the Alhambra Commissioners. This document will not be filed, said Mr. Moore, and the proceedings will be stopped. The City Manager indicated that Pasadena has shown a willingness to meet Alhambra more than half-way in the water question. He added that he believed the matter will soon be settled amicably and in the best interest of all concerned.

The dispute arose when Pasadena ordered the construction of three wells which would draw water from behind the Raymond dike, a basin from which comes most of Alhambra's supply.

A committee representing the chambers of commerce of the cities of Alhambra, Pasadena and South Pasadena have been working recently on the water problem effecting the three communities, and reported this week a recommendation to avoid a competitive struggle for supremacy of interest in a water supply, the pooling of interests and rights and deprecating any court action. The committee consists of Will Thrall, Alhambra; Franklin Thomas, Pasadena, and E. O. Wickhizer, South Pasadena.

A SUMMER SPLASH

A STREAM CROSSING

Stretch Between Rincon and Coldbrook Camps Finally Opened to the Throttle Pusher

A combination of circumstances—light rainfall with resulting low water in San Gabriel Cany on and some diligent road work—has resulted in the motorizing of a stretch that for twenty years has known only the horse and the burro. In the old days it was an all-day journey from Azusa to Coldbrook Camp. Now it's a twenty-mile spin that can require at the most an hour to an hour and a half. A big Paige equipped with balloon tires and piloted by Jim Sterling found the going easy and the many water crossings a pleasure. The photographs above testify to the charm and beauty of the canyon trip. Layout by Times Staff Artist A. L. Ewing.

A NEW PLACE TO DRIVE

Head of the North Fork of the San Gabriel Canyon Opened to Motor Travel This Year

Did you ever drive your car to Coldbrook Camp, far up at the head of North Fork in the San Gabriel Canyon? Probably not, but you can do it this summer, for the first time in the history of the canyon. For twenty years, Coldbrook has nestled remote under the shaggy cliffs of Mt. Islip, undisturbed by the new mode of transportation, but this year a combination of light rainfall with resulting low water in the canyon, and some energetic road work, has made possible the opening of the stretch between Rincon and Coldbrook to motor travel. Do not expect a boulevard, for it is a long ways from being a finished road that you will find, but any good motor car, with a driver who is experienced at all in mountain driving should have no trouble in negotiating it.

It is twenty miles from Azusa to Coldbrook Camp. In the days when all travel up the canyon was by horse-drawn stage it was an all-day ride from Azusa to Coldbrook. To those who look back on the days when the road followed the bed of the river, through glaring patches of deep sand and beneath cool shade of alders by the stream, the present-day change in transportation seems marvelous, indeed. The slow stage that plowed through sand and lurched over myriad boulders at a gait of two or three miles an hour seems unbelievably crude as compared with a combination of road and machine that today permits you to reach Coldbrook in an easy hour and a half from Azusa. And if

MOTOR DEALERS TO GOLF

First Annual Tourney Scheduled for Next November; Committee Appointed; Motor Row Gossip

BY PAUL LOWRY

Speedway rumors having died to a whisper last week Brother Burt Roberts arose from his secretarial chair and, speaking for the Motor Car Dealers' Association, announced that the first annual golf tournament of that body will be held at Santa Barbara next November.

So many of the esteemed lights of the "row" have fallen for the noble game of golf it has been decided to substitute for the annual jinx a golf tournament, to be staged in a locale somewhat removed from the home stamping grounds, where everybody can get together for a few days, become better acquainted and test their prowess on the links in pursuit of fame and silverware.

That this quaint idea of Bro. Roberts will meet with favorable reception up and down the row is indicated by the number of champions who readily admit they are good, concealed in the imposing motor emporiums on "auto row."

A high-powered committee composed of A. D. Robbins, Leo Starr and Jimmy Woolacott has been appointed to put the thing over in regular style. Inasmuch as each one of the gentlemen named is a player of rare distinction and some skill it is expected that the Santa Barbara tournament will be han-

Mt. Wilson Record Falls Before De Palma's Attack

MARK IS BUSTED BY TWO MINUTES

Stock Chrysler Car is Used by Italian Driver

Before-Sunrise Climb Made to Avoid Old Sol

Demonstrates Gear Ratio Strictly Stock

Whirling up Mt. Wilson toll road in the gray dawn of Wednesday morning, Ralph De Palma, at the wheel of a stock Chrysler six, cut 2 minutes, 2.81 seconds from the former record, which had stood undisturbed for more than two years. The Chrysler's mark was 25m. 48.85s., an almost unbelievable record to anyone who is familiar with the famous mountain road, with its climb of more than 4600 feet in nine and one-half miles. It was particularly remarkable in view of the fact that the car was not stripped, but carried all fenders, and was minus only the top glass in the windshield and the top. Even the muffler was not removed, nor was a cut-out used, and De Palma's only complaint at the finish was over the fact that he had more power at his disposal than the rough condition of the road permitted him to use. With the exception of three short stretches, where he dropped to low, he used second gear all the way up the hill, and at one point on the way up reached a speed of forty-four miles an hour.

The Chrysler's record run was checked by four Los Angeles newspaper men, and was timed and handled in exactly the same fashion as were the previous record runs in the past. De Palma was started from the toll house at the foot by one of the newspaper men, while the other three at the hotel at the summit listened to the starting word over the telephone as the signal to click three synchronized stop watches. The time as shown by the three watches varied less than a second and the average of the three was taken as the time. Shirley Olympius of the Examiner sent De Palma away, while the three clockers at the summit were Fred Ross of The Times, Frederick Wagner of the Express and H. L. Blewett of the Herald.

De Palma made a before-sunrise climb, to avoid the blinding glare of the early sun, which would have imposed a greatly added hazard on some of the turns. The Mt. Wilson road, due to the dry winter, is in by no means as good condition as when former runs were made, in the opinion of Manager Cory of the Mt. Wilson Hotel. Notwithstanding this handicap, De Palma reached the top without other mishap than a slight dent on one rear fender, where he scraped the rock of the mountain side on one turn. The heat indicator on the Chrysler dash showed less than 200 degrees at the finish, the water in the radiator had not boiled, and the radiator was as full as when the car started.

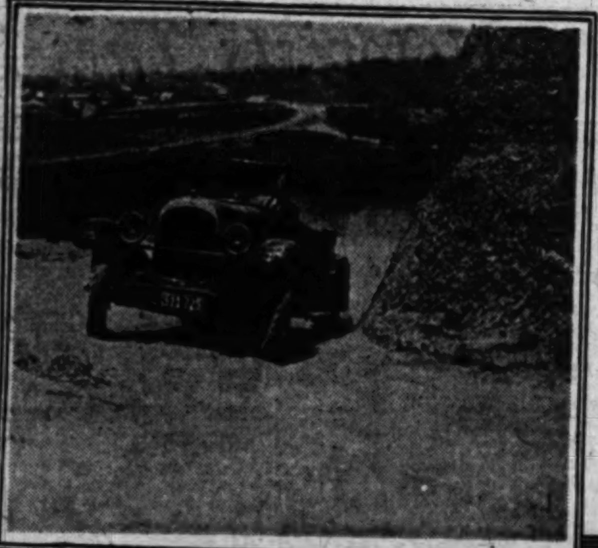
BUSTS ANOTHER MARK

De Palma's mark not only set a new stock-car record for the mountain, but likewise demolished the former nonstock record, held by a stripped car, specially prepared for the climb. The nonstock mark was 26m. 56s., more than a minute slower than the Chrysler's new record.

From the summit of Mt. Wilson, De Palma, accompanied by the newspaper observers, drove the Chrysler direct to the Culver City track, where he circled the mile track in 59s., and showed a speed of seventy-two miles an hour in the straightaways, demonstrating conclusively that the gear ratio of the Chrysler was strictly standard.

Ventura gasoline was used on the shod with full balloon equipment. De Palma declared the balloons were of great assistance in securing record climb, and the Chrysler was traction on the rough and dusty pitches.

Knocks Two Minutes Off the Record



Ralph De Palma at the wheel of a stock Chrysler six last week lowered the Mt. Wilson toll road record two minutes and eight-tenths seconds, smashing a mark that had stood over two years. The Chrysler's record run was checked by Los Angeles newspaper men, some of them being seen in the act of catching Bro. De Palma's time as he came whirling up the summit. The Mt. Wilson road is a network of hairpin turns, which De Palma roared around at unbelievable speed. The inset is of the handsome Italian pilot himself.

NEW PLACE FOR A TRAVEL TRIP

your car is inclosed and equipped with corpulent balloon tires, as was the big Paige which J. M. Sterling drove to Coldbrook last week, you will find all discomfort has been extracted from the journey to the farthest and perhaps the most beautiful of the Sierra Madre Mountain resorts.

CUT OUT OF ROCK

For the first eight miles the canyon road could scarcely be improved upon as a mountain highway. Wide enough almost everywhere for two cars to pass, it has been cut from the sheer rocky walls of the canyon at a tremendous expense of time and labor. For the first six miles it follows the east wall of the canyon, and there a bridge, which is yet to be built, will carry it across the stream to the opposite side. A detour is necessary now at the site of the bridge, but good road begins again above the detour and continues almost to the forks of the canyon.

Here at the forks of the San Gabriel is one of the most interesting spots that the motorist can see today in Los Angeles county, for it is here that preliminary work is in progress toward the building of the giant dam that is to conserve the flood waters of the San Gabriel. The outline where its completed structure will meet the canyon sides has been marked with flags, and gives a vivid conception of just how huge its 420-foot bulk will loom in the canyon. Here, on the very site where once rose Eldoradoville, the vanished city of the days when the San Gabriel swarmed with placer miners, will be poured a fortune of $25,000,000, and the last memory of the mining city that a flood destroyed will be drowned under 400 feet of water.

At the forks of the river the left-hand road leads to Coldbrook and Rincon. Both Rincon and Follows Camp in the East Fork will be deeply submerged under the waters of the dam. The good road has been left behind, but it is not a bad sort of road even above the forks. There are crude little bridges across the deeper fords, and the shallow crossings are merely deep enough to cool your tires and wash the dust from your wheels.

The final eight miles from Camp Rincon to Coldbrook is narrow road for the most part, and there are places where it would be rather embarrassing to meet another car. The most difficult place of this sort, however, the Narrows of the North Fork, has been provided with another route for the down travel to use, so there is no longer any congestion there. Manager Frank Headlee of Coldbrook, well known to the automobile fraternity of Southern California, is bending all his efforts on the improvement of the road, and it is his aim to better it as rapidly as possible, and an increasing number of cars are making the Coldbrook trip each week.

As for Coldbrook itself, it is a spot that is well worth becoming better acquainted with. When the long-projected road that is to pierce the heart of the Sierra Madres by way of the San Gabriel and emerge on the desert near Big Rock is completed, Coldbrook will be on the main highway. It is at an elevation of 3500 feet, and it is only eight miles by trail from Coldbrook to the summit of Mt. Islip, one of the highest peaks of the Sierra Madre range. It is only two miles from Coldbrook to the beauties of Pine Flats and of Crystal Lake, the only natural lake in all the southern slopes of the Sierra Madres.

It is not at all difficult to cover the distance from Los Angeles to Coldbrook in three hours' time, except on a Sunday or holiday, when there is heavy travel on the mountain roads. If you have pretty well exhausted your list of places to go, and want to see mountain country that has been hitherto barred to motor travel, by all means make the journey to Coldbrook, for it is the gateway to one of the most beautiful portions of the entire Sierra Madre range, and you will be well repaid for your effort.

CATALINA LAYS CLAIM TO AUTOMOBILE TITLE

Although Catalina has been long famed for its fishing, it apparently has a new clami for the limelight, according to a check made by the Automobile Club of Southern California. It is believed that the town of Avalon, the only municipality on the island, has more motor vehicles per mile of road than any other section of the United States.

This is brought about under rather peculiar circumstances. Most of the roads of the island are privately owned, so that the public highways in Avalon total only one mile and one-half in length. There are 140 motor vehicles, so that should they all turn out at one time on the streets of Avalon, they would represent approximately 100 machines to the mile, which is about twenty times greater than the average throughout the country.

BURBANK IS HIT IN POCKETBOOK

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

BURBANK, July 17.—One of Burbank's leading industries—that of collecting fines from automobile speeders—received a severe jolt this week when City Recorder Crawford remitted the fines that had been assessed against Norman Bell of North Hollywood and Charles A. Babcock of Los Angeles for alleged violation of the law regulating the speed at which automobiles might be operated within certain zones. The contention of the defendants was that they were innocent for the reason that there were no markers in evidence along the street in question to indicate to drivers of machines the speed limit.

During the year speeders contributed to the city approximately $36,000 in fines and forfeitures for violations of the motor vehicle act.

D WORK IN IG FIGURES

Spread Out Over Area of 350 Miles

Bridges Placed der Construction

Record is an provement One

California during the months of 1924 has con- for more than $5,000,000 road work, one-third of been State funds and the two-thirds provided by This money will be ap- construction and im- of more than 350 miles of highway. There were forty-six different projects undertaken.

In addition to this road work there were thirteen bridges placed under construction, totaling nearly 1200 feet in length and involving expenditure of more than $124,000.

These figures are estimated from records of the engineering department of the Automobile Club of Southern California, which organization has always been a strong proponent of good roads and which keeps tab of the highway construction throughout this section.

The State projects approximate $1,750,000 in expenditures and include 11.9 miles of gravel road in Imperial county; 27.5 miles of cement and asphalt concrete and grading in Los Angeles county; 21.2 miles of grading and Portland cement concrete in Orange county; 24.6 miles of grading, cement concrete, widening and seawall in Ventura county. In Orange county, also, the State is building a 522-foot bridge across the Santa Ana River.

County highway construction shows 40 1-8 miles of asphalt concrete in Kern county; approximately 48 miles of road work in Los Angeles county of practically all classes; 13 miles of graveling, asphalt and cement concrete and widening in Orange county; nearly six miles of macadam in Riverside county; 132 miles of repairing and macadam and macadam and oil in San Bernardino county; 5 miles of cement concrete in San Diego county; 25 miles of macadam in Santa Ynez Valley in Santa Barbara county and 3 miles of asphalt macadam in Ventura county.

Among the county bridges included in the first six months of the year are Coyote Creek, Artesia-Buena Park road; Coyote Creek-Centralia avenue; Palmdale-Valyermo road; Clara street over the Los Angeles River; Los Tunas River over Eaton Wash; Olive street over the Los Angeles River; Glendora avenue over Big Dalton Wash; Berkshire avenue-Flintridge, all in Los Angeles county. In Santa Barbara county contracts call for a five-span reinforced concrete bridge over the Sisquoc River, and in Tulare county a 28-foot span across the Tulare irrigation canal at Visalia.

FUMIGATION IS PUT ON SHELF

of the equipment at the Columbia River, which separates Oregon and Washington. This process required about four hours and occasioned sufficient delay to result in various exaggerated rumors up and down the Coast relative to the requirements at the Washington line.

By the order issued by the Department of Agriculture of the State of Washington the 10th inst. these fumigation stations are now closed and there is no inspection or fumigation such as has prevailed for the last ten weeks. The State of Oregon has also abandoned its fumigation station at the Oregon-California line and it is now possible to drive from California clear to Vancouver, B. C. without encountering any of the irksome restrictions which were common when the hoof-and-mouth hysteria was at its height. The train or boat travelers were not affected by the quarantine stations, which were established only for the automobilist who carried camping equipment.

One immediate effect noted in Tacoma, Seattle, Bellingham, Victoria and Vancouver, the principal cities on Puget Sound and in British Columbia, after the abandonment of the fumigation stations, was a large increase in the number of California cars crossing into Washington and British Columbia.

The removal of the quarantine stations will also benefit travel to California, because many motorists, who came into the Pacific Northwest or were from the Pacific Northwest, who wanted to motor into California and return, were opposed to going through the fumigation at the Washington-Oregon line. Immediately upon receipt of notice of the abandonment of all fumigation stations a large number of people began to plan for automobile trips to California, knowing they could come back without the previous delay or fumigation.

Just as there is now no inspection or fumigation at the Washington line, the traveler is free to go into Canada without fumigation, and in going from Washington into British Columbia one does not have to have a passport or to pay any tax or give any bond or make any deposit on his car.

The Pacific highway is paved all the way from San Diego to Vancouver, B. C., a distance of 1814 miles, with the exception of 114 miles in Northern California, which is good, surfaced highway.

YELLOWSTONE PARK DRAWS HUGE CROWD

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

YELLOWSTONE PARK (Wyo.) July 19.—Yellowstone Park's tremendous growth in popular favor as a vacation resort is significantly revealed in statistics showing that for the month of June, just ended, a total of 20,328 visitors crossed the four boundaries of this scenic wonderland. This is an increase of more than 45 per cent over June, 1923, when the whole number of visitors entertained was 14,666.

June's tremendous influx of tourists brought the total for this season to date to 21,452, as against 15,641 up to the same date last season. This is an increase in excess of 36 per cent, and if the same rate is maintained, the park this year will show its wonders to more than 190,000, instead of the 138,352 who saw it in 1923, the banner season up to that time.

Maintenance Jobs Reduced by Simplicity

"Simplicity of design and accompanying accessibility have so reduced maintenance operations on Packard cars that Packard service stations now are faced with a problem," declares Frank Randall of the Earle C. Anthony, Inc. "When complicated motors were the vogue a few years ago in automobiles, service stations were called upon frequently to perform major operations and complete rebuilding jobs were not infrequently done. Comparatively simple operations, too, ran into many labor hours because of the complicated nature of the motors. Service stations had to be equipped accordingly. Packard service stations now find themselves equipped for major operations while they are seldom called upon to perform other than minor work."

The problem confronting the service organization of the company was brought to the fore strongly at a recent meeting of service executives from all over the country at the factory, according to Randall, who represented Earle C. Anthony, Inc., Packard distributors for California.

Packard service representatives from New York reported to the meeting that the New York service station, which takes care of the entire metropolitan area in which there are more Packard cars than in any other district in the country, has yet to receive an order for a general overhauling of a Packard six car. Major service operations have been limited, they reported, to such work as required when a car is in a serious wreck. Other service men in the meeting showed that the condition is general throughout the country. They ascribed as a reason for a big falling off in major service operations the simplicity in design of the car, together with constant betterment of materials.

MOTOR DEALERS TO GOLF A BIT

George is a Battler

It will take more than a motorcycle to put George Bentel out of the running. Several months ago a wild rider connected with George's leg on the home-brewed Ascot track and the underpinning was shattered in some seventeen different places.

But George has come back. I met him ambling up Second street from Broadway to Hill the other day, and he looks the picture of health. The broken leg is now supported by a steel brace and George uses crutches, but in the course of time he expects to heave away the crutches and challenge Charley Paddock to a 100-yard dash just to demonstrate that you can't keep a good man down.

Bentel says his Ascot course will be open for practice for the 250-mile Thanksgiving Day race by November 1, but the course in the rough for tests and trials will be open long before that time.

Encouragement by automobile factories and private individuals leads him to believe that his entry list will be so large that several qualifying trials will have to be staged. Such cars as Marmon, Buick, Chrysler, Packard, he declares, are assured entries—some entered by the factories, others by private owners.

In addition Bentel declares that he has the positive assurance that two Fiats will be entered from abroad, giving a real international aspect to the race.

Hurrah for Chris

We want to take off our hats right here to one automobile editor who is not afraid to show his colors. We refer to Chris Helin of San Francisco who, unlike his Swedish contemporary of the Oakland suburb, Leon J. Pinskon, admits that he comes to Los Angeles because he likes it here.

Helin showed up at the Bozzani banquet at Venice last week, where Ernie Culver and Bro. Kilbourne, Toledo's loudest speaker, were the honored guests. Helin confessed that he knew of no better place in which to spend a vacation, and says he will so report to Pinskon.

A wire from Harry Elliott of San Francisco informs us that Bill Henry, the observation editor of the sporting section, will arrive this week from a vacation jaunt to the Northwest "without the slightest expectation of going to work." One wit of the sporting section said: "Huh! That's nothing new."

A New York firm estimates that American women now spend nearly $70,000,000 a year for cosmetics and perfumes. The money spent for cosmetics has more than tripled since 1910.

THE Big-Six Touring is a seven-passenger car—not merely a seven-passenger body mounted on a five-passenger chassis.

It was designed and built for seven-passenger service—with a motor of ample power and stamina for seven-passenger satisfaction.

Then, too, with the auxiliary seats folded away, the Big-Six becomes the most desirable five-passenger car in which you have ridden, with room enough for all the luggage you will ever need.

Big-Six appearance is attractive, distinctive, and in good taste. Its performance, acceleration, flexibility and dependability are known and respected the world over.

No car, regardless of price, surpasses it in quality or completeness of equipment.

If a smaller manufacturer or assembler were to build the Big-Six—of equal quality and workmanship—his price would be $3,500 — perhaps more.

But Big-Six overhead is distributed over six times as many units as are built by any Big-Six competitor, hence Big-Six cost and selling price are surprisingly low.

Ex-Service Men Join in to Make Victory Boulevard Big Success

BUDDIES GET BEHIND MOVE

Want Best Victory Highway in This State

Proposed Road to be 100 Miles in Length

Will Traverse Center of San Fernando Valley

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

LANKERSHIM, July 19.—So far as reports have been received, every ex-service man in San Fernando Valley is joining with the American Legion posts in their plan to make the proposed Victory Boulevard one of the outstanding memorial highways of the entire State, if not of the nation.

This boulevard, as proposed, will be a major highway—100 feet wide—and will be about forty miles long. It will traverse practically the center of San Fernando Valley.

It will begin at a point on Riverside Drive just west of the municipal golf grounds and the new municipal aviation landing field in Griffith Park, where a beautiful concrete bridge will span the Los Angeles River. Here it connects with what is known at the present time as Crescent avenue, Burbank, and to be renamed Victory Boulevard. It takes a northwesterly course to a junction with Main street and Central avenue, Burbank, then turns west and runs straight as an arrow from Burbank through Lankershim, Van Nuys and Owensmouth to the mountains, which rim the western side of San Fernando Valley. Preliminary survey has been run through this range of mountains, where very easy grades have been found to a connection with the State highway at Camarillo.

REAL MEMORIAL

Victory Boulevard finds its name in a practical memorial to the soldiery of our country.

It will be a magnificent thoroughfare stretching across a broad expanse of marvelous mountain girt country, binding city and country, farm and fireside and factory into one whole. What could be more typical of our Legionnaire?

Victory Boulevard, as planned, should be built in twin bands of concrete highway. These will be separated by an open ground space which may be embellished by the wealth and beauty of our semitropic flora. It can be interspersed by shaft, obelisk and arch memorial to some heroic feat of arms or of some outstanding sacrifice.

Through the twenty miles of its course through this fertile valley there will thus be provided a never-ending source of inspiration as well as opportunity for constant improvement and development until it shall become a most magnificent as well as practical and utilitarian memorial of those whom we delight to honor.

A NEW ARTERY

Victory Boulevard will be an entirely new thoroughfare opening up new territory, connecting Ventura county on the north and west with Los Angeles, and providing more space for the ever-increasing traffice coming to us from the north.

The western outlet over the mountains will be by easier grades than either Ventura Boulevard through Calabasas and the Conejo Grade; the Santa Susanna Pass beyond Chatsworth, or the Castaic out Newhall way; it will bring to our doors a vast new area now without adequate roads, and it will bring the beaches of Hueneme almost as close as those of our beloved Santa Monica. It will traverse an entirely new and beautiful tree-clad hill and mountain region, most wonderful in scenic beauty.

Victory Boulevard will be a practical memorial. The ten-block length of Victory Drive in Minneapolis, Minn., and the nine miles of Victory avenue of semitropic Florida, will pale into insignificance in comparison.

FORD RECORD IS SURPASSED

1,000,000 Ford cars and trucks were sold at retail for the first six months of 1924. The actual retail sales figures—1,036,978—surpasses the total retail sales for the corresponding period in 1923 by 133,095 vehicles, or an average monthly gain in sales of 22,182. Ford sales in June were 170,747. This is approximately 10,000 in excess of June sales for 1923.

These figures do not include sales made by Ford foreign branches and associated companies, the majority of which assemble cars from American-made parts.

The fact that these sales have been spread very evenly throughout the country indicates a general prosperity that is not confined to any particular locality and is considered a most encouraging sign of the times.

Other plants are doing their production bit, with increased sales reported by Moon, Flint, Lincoln, Chrysler, Locomobile and others. Locomobile sales during the first six months of 1924 exceeded by almost 20 per cent the entire year sales in 1923, and approximately three months' production is necessary to fill orders now on the company's books. Both standard and custom-built body types are included in the present record production.

Maxwell-Chrysler is behind on deliveries, though the continued growth in output at the factory is relieving the situation.

With July, August and September the biggest buying months for the farmer manufacturers are planning accordingly.

California continues to lead the country in the number of automobile camps with Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa running a close race for second. There are close to 2000 campsites in the United States, many equipped with every facility for the motor tourists' comfort and convenience.

Action this week of the Dodge Brothers, Inc., stockholders in dropping the position of chairman of the board of directors, an office long held by Howard B. Bloomer, was one of the interesting features of the week in automotive circles. All other present officers were re-elected.

Russell Huff, for about ten years chief engineer of Dodge Brothers was chosen as a new member of the board.

The stockholders felt that the addition of Mr. Huff to the board would strengthen it materially in view of his long experience as an automotive engineer.

The officers chosen were: President and general manager, Frederick Haynes; vice-president, Arthur T. Waterfall; treasurer, John Ballentyne; secretary and assistant treasurer, Harvey V. Popeney; assistant secretary, R. J. Fry.

The last fiscal year was the largest in Dodge Brothers history and the fist six months of 1924 were greater than any corresponding period in point of deliveries to retail purchasers it was announced at the meeting.

Various civic bodies should take some kind of action at once to stop defacement of the highways by large advertising signs, is the belief of W. R. Angell, vice-president of the Continental Motors Corporation.

"These signs not only mar the scenic beauty of the highways but really are a menace to motorists," said Angell. "In many instances accidents are directly traceable to the fact that drivers' views were obstructed by some large sign.

"Conditions such as these should be remedied and they can be if the various automobile clubs and other organizations take the proper stand in the matter."

According to a new law in Canada automobiles may be sold only by legally authorized dealers who can furnish a bond protecting the buyer if the autos should happen to be stolen cars. It is expected that auto stealing will be considerably reduced.

General Motors sales of cars and trucks to consumers in June amounted to 66,146. This compares with 75,952 in June, 1923, and with 84,686 in May, 1924. For the first half of the current year sales totaled 379,590 cars, as against 408,985 for the first six months in 1923, or a decrease of less than 7 per cent.

These preliminary figures of sales to dealers for June cover all sales to dealers of passenger and commercial cars and sales by both American and Canadian divisions of General Motors and export overseas.

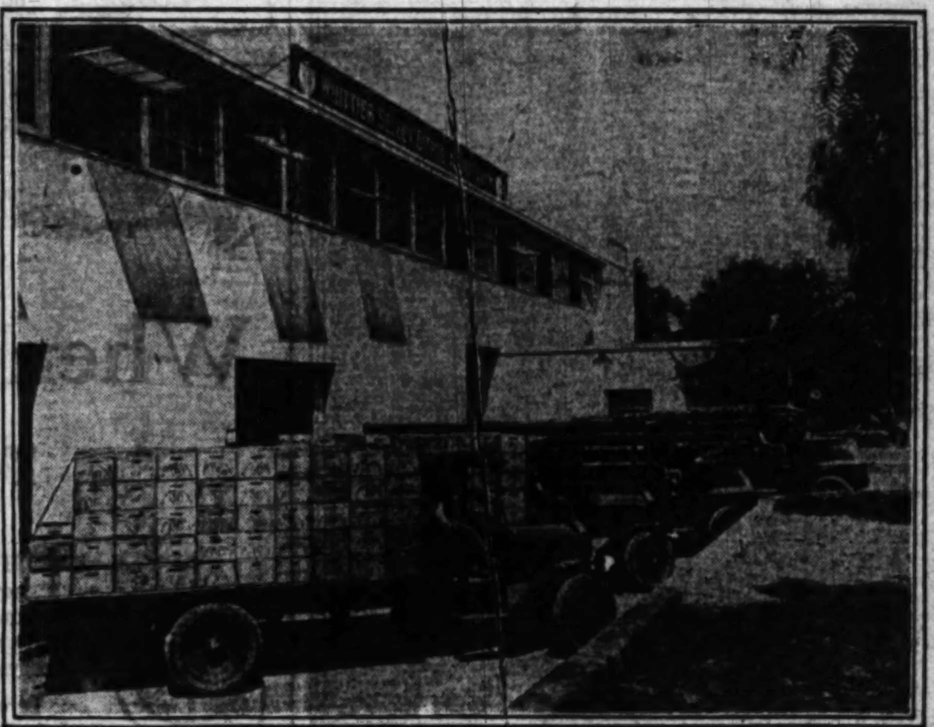
The Flint Six is now in fourteenth place among the list of standard design automobiles manufactured in the United States. The Flint Motor Company was in sixty-seventh place in the fall of 1923 when drawings for positions in the national automobile shows in New York and Chicago were held. The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce bases its preference for choice of space in the automobile show upon the volume of sales.

It is announced that the Flint six had climbed from sixty-seventh to seventeenth place. Now, in scarcely two months, Flint has again forged ahead three points.

Demand for Flint six-55 continues unabated and is keeping the factory constantly increasing production scale to cope with the demand for the new and slightly smaller Flint six-40, according to W. E. Holler, vice-president and general manager.

The barometer was invented about the middle of the seventeenth century.

Helping the Orange Industry Grow



Whittier Select Citrus Association last year transported more than 11,000 tons of oranges and lemons on Mack trucks. Truck shipping to the harbor is declared more advantageous than rail.

Trucks Make the "Golden W" Popular

Every year in British Columbia carloads of oranges, grown in Los Angeles county, are consumed. In the Vancouver-Victoria districts a certain brand of oranges has increased in popularity year by year. This is the Golden W, a product of the Whittier Select Citrus Association. Before a single succulent fruit reaches the ultimate consumer big transportation problems have to be conquered and the motor truck is an important factor in the solution.

According to W. D. Stockdale, general manager of the Whittier Select Citrus Association, were it not for the motor truck Southern California orange production would not occupy the eminent agricultural position it does. There are not enough people in this part of the country to consume all the fruit produced, and were not fast and dependable transportation available, the crops could not be handled as efficiently as they are. The Whittier Select, as the organization is known generally, owns four Mack trucks, which are used exclusively in its service. Two of these are of the bulldog type and two are dual reduction models, equipped with pneumatic tires.

The Whittier Select was one of the first organizations of its kind to make use of its own truck equipment. It began using trucks in 1917 and has had a Mack in service since 1919. Mr. Stockdale states that the Mack trucks have been a material aid to the growth and expansion of the business. He cites as an example the fact that a three and one-half-ton Bulldog has been in use eighteen months, with a repair cost of only 10 cents, the price of an ignition wire.

Mr. Stockdale's figures show that last year the Whittier Select shipped 450 cars of oranges and 200 cars of lemons. The average fruit car carries 462 boxes of oranges, each weighing seventy-eight pounds, or 408 boxes of lemons, weighing eighty-five pounds to the box. Ninety-five per cent of all these oranges and lemons were hauled to the packing-house on motor trucks. This means the trucks hauled for this one organization last year 8108 tons of oranges and 3468 tons of lemons.

SALESMEN GET DEMONSTRATION

Wills St. Claire Boys Are Given a Desert Ride

Cars Are Put Through Their Paces by Sidney Briggs

Mountain Climbing Test is Also Included

Once a year Manager Sidney A. Briggs of the Western Motors Company rounds up his entire sales force, takes a flock of Wills Sainte Claire "gray geese" and spends a strenuous day demonstrating to the salesmen just what sort of an automobile they are selling. Last week was the occasion of the fourth of such annual educational tours, and Briggs brought home a highly enthusistic sales force after a trip of 297 miles that was calculated to show every possible quality a motor car possesses.

Leaving Los Angeles, the Wills Sainte Claire men drove to Saugus, and thence up Mint Canyon to Palmdale. From Palmdale they drove east across the desert roads to Victorville. Though this fifty-two-mile stretch is probably one of the worst remaining roads in Los Angeles county, they covered it in one hour and thirty-seven minutes. After a lunch in Victorville in a cafe where the thermometer showed 97 deg. they continued on to Bear Valley by the Cushenberry grade. With a stop of an hour and a half in Big Bear, they drove on down the new road to City Creek, and thence to San Bernardino for dinner and on home, where they arrived with an average of 32.8 miles per hour covered for the entire time they were on the road.

"We could never have made the time we did over the desert roads if it had not been for our balloon tires," said Briggs last week. "This was the hardest test I have ever given the balloon equipment, and I was more than pleased with the way the tires showed on every sort of going that we encountered.

"It was hotter than a furnace on the desert side of the mountains and yet when we topped Cushenberry grade near Baldwin Lake we made our first stop since leaving Victorville, and I put my face against the radiator of the Wills I was driving. On the mountain grades, the four-wheel brakes certainly showed their worth in great fashion."

Those who made the trip with Manager Briggs were C. Rosenberg, sales manager, and Charles Beretta, Chauncy Bergh, Frank Luqueer, William Moffat, Floyd Manges and S. A. Hudson.

READJUSTMENT IS NECESSARY

United States automobiles were barred from the highways because they tended to frighten horses, and without doubt those who rode behind them. Today we laugh at these old regulations, but to those who passed them the laws appeared reasonable. They were merely attempting to preserve conditions as they existed. They feared to have the highways used in any other manner than their fathers had used them.

Miller McClintock

Opposition to the motor car was futile. Those who attempted to obstruct its widest and freest use were laughed out of court. In all of the history of transportation—and that is to no small extent the history of human progress—there has not been so rapid and phenomenal a transition as from the horse to the motor age. In 1895 there were 300 motor cars in operation in the United States, today there are approximately 17,000,000. It will be recalled that in 1913 the automobile had ceased to be a novelty, and that thousands were to be seen on the highways. Yet the entire production of American factories in that year would no more than equal the number of cars which daily use the streets of Los Angeles.

ADJUSTMENT SLOW

So quickly has the automobile become a part of our everyday life that we have only partially adjusted ourselves to some of the conditions which it has brought with it. The two most critical conditions may be expressed briefly as street hazards, and street congestion. Day by day the death toll from street accidents becomes more and more appalling, and in every great city we may see the spectacle of lines of motor vehicles whose most valuable characteristic is their ability to move with speed, forced to travel at a snail's pace by the mere weight of their own numbers. Unless it is impossible to face the facts fairly and squarely, these conditions will become constantly more critical with each new increase in registration, until finally automotive transportation will become intolerable, dangerous and slow.

The solution depends entirely upon the willingness of the public to adjust itself to the requirements of what may be called supersaturation of the streets.

One of the most basic requirements is for more adequate and more properly designed streets. Although our cities have expanded rapidly, and the demand for street space has increased at an even more rapid pace, traffic must still find its way through the narrow arteries that served past generations. The willingness of the citizens of Los Angeles to adjust themselves to the immediate and future needs of its street transportation problem is to be tested in the near future when the major highway plan is submitted.

The next requirement for readjustment is in connection with principles governing street uses. Cities have been fairly successful in clearing the streets of private obstructions such as the storing and displaying of merchandise, but more must be done. When farmer Jones hitched his horses on Main street in the '80s he was causing but little inconvenience; there was still room for everyone else to use the street freely. Conditions have changed. Today every foot of the roadway is needed for the mighty flood of commerce that seeks to move. Nonessential uses must give way to the essential. The use of the streets for garages must give way to the use of the streets for travel. This readjustment should take place gradually so that it will not cause undue hardship but its ultimate recognition must be accepted if the traffic problem is to be solved. The writer ventures to prophesy that within a decade buildings in the business district that are not provided with garage space will be as antiquated as would be a building today without elevators.

ONLY STARTED

Traffic regulation is yet in its infancy. If it is to have a sound development as a branch of the engineering science a certain amount of experimentation is essential. Realizing that the street problem is now in a period of readjustment, the public should tolerate with as much patience as possible the various experiments that are being tried. The public officials of the city are to be commended for their willingness to give reasonable regulations a trial. The only test of a regulation is whether it works satisfactorily in actual practice. Los Angeles is today a great experimental laboratory for various types of signaling devices. The Los Angeles City and County Traffic Commission is making a careful study of the functioning of these devices and will be in a position to assist the city in the installation of the most effective signals.

Effective regulation cannot be obtained without some cost. Proper regulation makes the existing street area vastly more valuable by increasing its capacity and by reducing accidents. Railways complained bitterly when they were forced to spend millions for the installation and maintenance of block regulation. They adjusted themselves to the inevitable and ultimately found that they were repaid many times over by the greater possible speed and safety. Liberal appropriations are necessary for the support of the police traffic bureau and for the other branches of the government dealing with the problem of regulation.

SECOND CHAPTER

The coming of the motor car opened the first chapter in the story of modern street transportation. The second chapter opens with the almost total saturation of the streets, a condition which threatens the usefulness of the entire system of automotive transportation. A readjustment to new conditions is essential unless we are to find ourselves prototypes of the sincere but foolish legislators who restricted the useful development of the automobile by requiring that each machine be preceded by its footman.

TIRE DEALER IS FULL OF SMILES

C. Fred Thompson, distributor of McClaren tires, is all smiles these days. For the past half-year each succeeding month has shown a nice gain over any preceding month the C. Fred Thompson Tire Company has been in business. During June, for example, this tire concern increased its sales more than 15 per cent over any previous month, Thompson says.

"Already July promises to exceed even the remarkable record established in June," says Mr. Thompson. "Last week I had to take two of my best salesmen, whose territory is outside of Los Angeles, and put them to work helping my three stock men fill the local orders that came into our order department."

New Features on the Franklin

Ralph Hamlin pointing out the features on the carburetor side of the improved Franklin motor to George Sherwood, his sales manager.

POWER BAIT IS MAGNET

Registering power increases as high as 49 per cent over the previous model, the latest Franklins with the improved motor are creating quite a stir among motorists throughout the United States, and particularly here in Southern California, where the average motorist rolls up nearly twice as much mileage in the course of a year as his eastern friends.

The announcement last week of the improved Franklins, and the offer to show what the new car will do, brought numbers of interested folks to Ralph Hamlin's showrooms on South Flower street, and George Sherwood, salesmanager for Hamlin, is beginning to wonder if his job isn't something akin to that of a train dispatcher's, the way the demonstrators have been rolling in and out.

A special ten-mile demonstration route is used to show as many people as possible the power and acceleration of the car, the route taking in some of the toughest high and second gear hills in Los Angeles, with plenty of rough streets thrown in for good measure to show the exceptionally easy riding qualities of the Franklin.

Speaking of the remarkable increase in power, Ralph Hamlin said: "Franklin air-cooling experts have succeeded in causing more than the ordinary amount of air to pass over an increased radiating surface, hence are allowed to admit more than the usual amount of mixture to each cylinder for combustion; also to increase the compression.

"The improved shape steel air housing is one big factor in the movement of this greater volume of air. The increased radiating area has been obtained through the increased size of the cylinder cooling flanges. As a consequence the radiating surface has been increased from 3400 square inches to 4500 square inches per engine and the volume of air passing over the cylinders at 2000 r.p.m. has increased from 2400 cubic feet to 2700 cubic feet per minute at practically no change in fan power. There has been more air pumped, but in proportion less power is required, for the air currents meet less resistance because of the new cylinders."

Transportation Speaks to Fans of Radioland

H. Y. Stebbins, transportation engineer, last week spoke over KHJ on the designing of the six-wheel unit with a four-wheel steer. He was educated in Switzerland and first experimented with six-wheel construction in Europe. During the war he was in charge of America's convoy operations.

H.Y. STEBBINS

"There are too many points of advantage to the six-wheel design for it to be long before every large truck will carry its load equalized over the truck and road on six wheels," said Stebbins. "Every truck will be converted just as the modern trolley car was converted to eight wheels and the Pullman coach to twelve wheels."

The Maxi six-wheeler, which is to be built in Los Angeles and Detroit, is handled by the Stebbins-Roberts-Buquor Company.

ONE NAIL A DAY WAS TOO MANY

PHOENIX, July 19.—For several days Sam Ballsun, a clothing merchant, has found a tire a day flat when he went to a parking place behind his store to get his car. He set a watch and C. L. Wroth was seen to hammer a nail into a tire of the Ballsun car. He was captured after fleeing to the roof of a tall business block and is said to have admitted that he and Ballsun "had had words" in the past. Hence the scheme of revenge.

Nash Factory Issues Quite a Statement on Its Assets, Current and Total

That of the ten largest automobile manufacturers in America Nash has the largest percentage of current assets to total assets, a ratio of 76 per cent as against an average for the ten of 49.8 per cent, including Ford, was one of the outstanding features of a financial report of the Nash factory just received by Robert S. Breyer, vice-president and general manager of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash and LaFayette distributors.

The financial statement was embraced in a general report to distributors exclusively of the Nash factory conditions, but so important did Mr. Breyer reckon it to be that he disclosed the statement for the benefit of Nash owners, prospective owners and bankers and others interested in the financial stability of motor manufacturing corporations.

"The Nash statement shows a total of $39,538,193.69 in resources," the Troy official pointed out, "and of this monster sum, $22,477,737.40 is in cash on hand, in banks and in government securities. There is no bank indebtedness, no bond issue, and not a dollar owed aside from the curent monthly accounts payable."

Mr. Breyer emphasized that in the recapitulation of the ten largest manufacturers, including Ford, already mentioned as checking current assets to total assets, Ford comes second to Nash with a ratio of 64 per cent.

Many of the factories carry good-will on their books, the report showed. This notation from Kenosha follows:

"Nash does not carry good-will at even $1 on its statement. Only two of the others can say the same. Seven carry good-will at figures ranging up to $25,000,000. The total good-will of the seven companies that carry it is the stupendous sum of nearly $100,000,000."

College "Dorm" Is Disappearing From Campus

The college "dorm" is disappearing from the modern campus.

In the generations gone by the most pleasant memories of undergraduate life centered about the old campus dormitories. There heated discussions were held on lessons, athletics or current topics of the times, but through the universal use of the motor car students are abandoning the dormitory for living quarters in private homes off the campus. According to a recent survey made by the Olds Motor Works, college students are the best prospects for used automobiles. Figures obtained from dealers in college towns showed that forty-two students purchased used cars to every twelve that bought new automobiles.

In cases where students live off the campus, the automobile serves them as it serves the great mass of workers who use their cars for transportation to and from work daily.

The Oldsmobile dealer at Ann Arbor, Mich., seat of the University of Michigan, sells an average of seventy-five used cars yearly to students in the university. One used-car dealer in a western college town reported the sale of 500 used cars to students during 1923.

As a supplementary check on this survey, investigations were made in three representative cities to determine the trend among high-school students who were car owners. Here also it was found that the used car was in great demand. Students, either college or high school, were found to be purchasers either of used cars or low-priced new cars. In most cases they preferred a used car of a better make than they could afford if buying a new automobile.

One fact developed by the inquiry was that in most cases the cars were necessary and not purchased merely for joyriding purposes. Another point was that thousands of girls and youths living in rural neighborhoods were enabled by these automobiles to attend high schools and colleges in near-by cities.

Race King in a Motor Demonstration

Here we have Harlan Fengler, the "baby" driver of the speedways and holder of several world rapidity records, demonstrating the power and flexibility of the Maxwell motor. He is starting the car locked in high merely by turning the rear wheel. Roy Powell of Union Motors, Inc., is at the wheel.

New Test Is Staged With a Race Hero

Climbing steep hills in high gear has long been regarded popularly as the supreme test of the pulling power of an automobile. There is scarcely a car owner who has not returned from a trip and announced in great elation that his "old bus" climbed a certain hill in high gear without any time going less than twenty miles an hour.

If you want to test your motor's ability on your favorite hill against other makes, the thing to do is to find out which car will ascend the hill in high gear in the slowest time rather than the fastest, according to Union Motors, Inc., officials.

To test the flexibility of the Maxwell motor, Roy Powell of the Union Motors, Inc., staged a unique test the other day in which Harlan Fengler, youthful speed king and holder of all world's speed records from one to 250 miles in competition, was the central figure.

Besides Powell the Maxwell touring car carried an extra passenger, Jimmy Cunningham, a close follower of the racing sport having ridden as mechanician for Eddie Hearne, Frank Elliott and other famous race drivers.

Throttling the car down to between two and three miles an hour in high gear, Powell sat at the wheel while Fengler stepped out of the machine and walked along beside it, grasping the left front fender. There was so much power in the motor that Harlan slid several yards before he could "kill" it and bring the Maxwell to a stop, an almost impossible task.

Then he went around to the left rear wheel and began to turn it. In less than half a revolution the motor started and the car moved off under its own power.

Perfection of V-Type Motor Seen in Tests

Aviation history is being written in startling fashion these days. Between 'round-the-world flights, dawn-to-dusk cross-continent trips and thirty-six-hour mail service across the continent, man's conquest of the air seems far closer at hand than ever before. Perfection of instruments to aid in navigation in night flying is another recent step that promises to make flights in darkness far safer than ever before.

"It is a matter of considerable pride with us that every one of these recent accomplishments was made with a V-type motor," declares J. E. Brown, Southern California manager for Don Lee. "Motor reliability and efficiency has been the greatest single factor in making possible every one of these recent steps in the advance of aviation.

"The well-known V-type Liberty motor powers the ships of the American 'round-the-world flyers, and also those of the mail planes. Lieut. Russell Maughan had a Curtis V-type racing motor in the plane that drove him from New York to San Francisco without faltering.

"The Cadillac Motor Car Company selected the V-type motor for their car ten years ago. Since then they have built more than 180,000 motors of this type, and the motor of the latest Cadillac represents the latest developments in harmonizing its power, and rendering its performance still more pleasing. The whole progress of the development of motors of the highest type where cost is a secondary factor and efficiency and reliability foremost has confirmed them in their choice."

CURRY TO STAY OPEN UNTIL OCTOBER FIRST

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

CAMP CURRY (Yosemite) July 18.—Camp Curry will remain open until October 1, 1924, announced Mrs. D. A. Curry, president of the Curry Camping Company, today.

"It has been Camp Curry's annual policy to remain open through September, and this custom will be followed in 1924, as in other years," comments Mrs. Curry.

"Yosemite is approaching its most delightful phase—the Indian summer, with its magnificent weather, balmy days and cool nights. From now on Yosemite visitors can enjoy this wonderful valley even more than earlier in the season. While there are still hundreds of guests at Camp Curry, the crowds that characterize the peak of the midsummer season are no longer in evidence and there is plenty of room for all to enjoy Yosemite without the slightest inconvenience, crowding or delay."

NONSTOP CAR IS ROLLING

Four Thousand Miles Per Week Being Averaged by Willys-Knight Car in Novel Test

Latest reports by "Knight-o-Gram" of the performance of the Willys-Knight car being driven through Southern California on a 30,000-mile nonstop test run reveal an economy performance that is considered remarkable by automotive authorities.

Running in three shifts over three distinct routes which combine traffic driving, grades and every other normal touring condition encountered by the average motorist the Willys-Knight nonstop car is averaging nearly 4000 miles per week.

The first 377 miles of continuous running, night and day it consumed 193 gallons of gasoline, nine quarts of oil, only three pints of water and made an average of 19.3 miles per gallon of gasoline.

Pilots Estes, Potts, Purcell and Jordan, report that the car is running smoothly and is standing up under the steady grind in surprising fashion.

E. N. Culver, president of the Willys-Overland-Pacific Company, accompanied Estes on the daylight shift over route No. 1 one day last week. They left the main branch building at 8 o'clock in the morning and stopped the car, but not the motor, at the plant of each Willys-Overland dealer in Los Angeles and Hollywood, Long Beach, Watts, Inglewood, Redondo, Venice, Santa Monica, Burbank, Glendaye, Eagle Rock, Pasadena and Highland Park and checked in again at the branch at 4 p.m.

L. J. McCracken then accompanied Pilot Potts on route No. 2 leaving at 4 o'clock and proceeding to Alhambra, Monrovia, El Monte, Covina, Pomona, San Bernardino, Redlands, Colton, Riverside, Corona, Fullerton, Orange, Santa Ana, Anaheim and Whittier. They stopped at each Willys-Overland dealer and left a "Knight-O-Gram" giving the time each stop was made, the total mileage to date and the average gasoline mileage so that the scoreboards displayed by each dealer could be kept right up to the minute. They checked in again at the branch just at midnight and R. J. Flynn, sales manager, took his place with Drivers Purcell and Jordan for the shift from midnight to morning over route No. 3.

Their course lay out Vermont, over Hollywood Boulevard and Cahuenga Pass to Burbank, over San Fernando Road to Saugus, Santa Paula, Ventura, Santa Barbara, back to Oxnard and then over Santa Susana Pass through Chatsworth, Van Nuys, Burbank and Glendale, to the starting point at the Willys-Overland-Pacific Company once more.

R. B. Starkey, service manager is keeping an accurate record of the nonstop run and is endeavoring to keep his drivers running right on the road under the same conditions encountered by the average car under the hand of the average driver.

PREDICTS NEW TYPE CAR

What the car of the future will be like was graphically illustrated in an inspiring word picture drawn by J. M. "Pete" Sterling and sent to Bridge-Bullock, Inc., last week.

Sterling is responsible for the Sterling Six with Knight sleeve valve engine for which Bridge-Bullock, Inc., are distributors in Arizona and Southern California.

"The car of the future will be a revelation to present day motorists," says Sterling. "The very things I am telling you now will be in general use a few years hence, yet many wise automotive engineers might laugh at me if they should read this prediction.

"The car of the future will be a wondrous piece of mechanism, in which I believe the sleeve-valve motor principle will be incorporated, possibly improved still in some astonishing way not yet conceived.

"It will have crumple proof body and fenders, automatic lubricating throughout, a flasher signal to warn when oil is low or needs changing, and that won't be often for very little oil will be needed. It will probably have leverless gears and brakes operated almost automatically. It will start silently. It will be odorless and practically exhaustless. It will be finished to withstand weather wear and scratches almost indefinitely.

"Fuel will be a minor consideration for it will travel distances unheard-of now on unbelievably small quantities. The secret will be in perfecting combustion to the point where there is nothing left after each explosion.

"The coming car will be light, low, speedy, yet amazingly flexible and the general shape will resemble a torpedo to eliminate windage; but it will not lose its symmetry and beauty of line, and it will not be expensive to buy or to operate."

COMING TO EUROPEAN TYPE

Twenty-five to thirty miles per gallon of gasoline is not an unusual performance for an automobile in Europe where money is scarce, incomes reduced and gasoline sells at a very high price. The foremost continental engineers have refined and perfected the four-cylinder power plant to meet the needs of their countries' physical and economic conditions.

This achievement was born of necessity, according to Ed Mong, salesmanager of A. W. Crossman, Inc., Southern California distributors of the Rollin four, and is reflected in the development and volume production of this new-type car in this country by Rollin H. White.

"Rollin White, one of the foremost engineers in the automotive industry, associated for years with the manufacture of fine custom-built cars, has designed and introduced the Rollin with the first European type principles of greater mileage and gasoline economy incorporated in an American-built car," said Mong.

"By European type motor, Mr. White means a small bore, high-compression motor, which by the most efficient utilization of every ounce of fuel, enables a motor of much smaller size and weight to produce sufficient power, smooth and flexible, to satisfy the great majority and at the same time lower operating cost at least 25 per cent."

LIKE REDLANDS ROADS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

REDLANDS, July 19.—The whole country is a net work of paved highways and automobile drives but there are none better than those of the State of California, according to Redlands travelers who have returned home from abroad. Most of them are particularly interested in highways even though they travel by train because they are anxious to see what other sections are doing to develop beauty spots and open them to the motor traveler.

Philip Harris, well-known business man, has returned from an extensive trip through the United States and Canada. He says that all along the coast there are splendid highways and that Canada is not lagging behind in the development of country for automobile travel. The wonderful new highway that is to be constructed from Vancouver into the heart of the Canadian Rockies, part of it being completed at the present time, is going to be one of the finest and most scenic highways in the world. Eastern Canada also has some fine automobile drives and roads but Mr. Harris says that he saw nothing better than California.

Paul W. Moore, well-known newspaper man of the south, motored through New England and Pennsylvania while on a recent trip through the East. The drives in New England he found to be beautiful and the roads in fine shape.

C. M. Brown has returned from New York and the Atlantic coast and he says that he saw almost as many automobiles back there as we have in California, but that he didn't see any better roads, although he did see some good ones.

SETS NEW MT. WILSON RECORD

A Chrysler Six, strictly stock, driven by Ralph De Palma, sets new Mt. Wilson record, and wins Express trophy cup, Wednesday, July 16. Time, checked by four newspaper observers, 25 minutes, 48.85 seconds, beating former record of 27 minutes, 51.66 seconds by 2 minutes, 2.81 seconds.

This also beats the non-stock record of 26 minutes, 56 seconds.

Distance, 9.5 miles. Elevation at start, 1250 feet, at finish, 5866 feet. Total climb, 4636 feet. Approximate average grade, 10 per cent. Maximum grade, 16 per cent. One hundred and forty-four curves in 9½ miles. Road condition bad, due to dry season and heavy travel.

The General Sherman tree is the biggest in the world. See how its height compares with the terrific climb the Chrysler Six made.

AN amazing speed record a steep and dangerous road yet if you had seen Ralph De Palma break the Mt. Wilson record, you'd have felt you could have done it yourself.

That was the biggest thing about the Chrysler record climb —it looked so easy.

Two things made it look that way. One was the tremendous surge of power that literally swept the Chrysler up those heart breaking grades. The other was the gripping hold of the four wheel hydraulic brakes when the Chrysler took the curves.

No swaying, sliding or skidding on the turns, just in and out and gone like a flash. The tires seemed to cling to the road like a flanged wheel to a steel rail.

De Palma will tell you it wasn't hard to crack the Mt. Wilson record—with a Chrysler.

Seventy horsepower in a compact—low swung—easily handled car. Brakes to match power, and curb it to safety. Cooling to stand the test of miles of full-throttle pulling.

Martin Bekins of the Bekins Van and Storage Company designed the body of this outfit and had it mounted on one of the new Reo six-cylinder bus chasses. Accompanied by Mrs. Bekins and the son of his local manager, Mr. Bekins has just started a tour of the United States, part of Canada and wherever fancy leads them. The Reo camp wagon is completely equipped with every convenience of home, including hot and cold water. The Bekins party will be away for several months.

"Nav Snikeb" Is a Palace for Touring

Motorists throughout the country are coming more and more to the outdoor idea as applied to vacationing. East, west, north and south they are packing up their camp equipment and leaving for the wilds, usually with the family and their fishing or hunting outfits.

While the greater number utilize the family touring car or sedan for such a trip there are many—and the number is growing rapidly—who prefer a special camp wagon instead of the regular passenger car in spite of the additional expense involved. The special job is mounted on a sturdy chassis and the body is equipped with Pullman berths, cooking outfit, ice box and other "comforts of home."

Martin Bekins, head of the Bekins Van and Storage Company since its organization in 1895, had ideas of his own along these lines and recently designed and had built a special camping body fitted with every comfort in which to make a camping tour of the United States and Canada. This special body he mounted upon one of the new Reo six-cylinder bus chassis of 176-inch wheelbase and a few days ago left Los Angeles for a tour that will last for several months.

Mr. Bekins has named his camp outfit the "Nav Snikeb," being the letters of Bekins Van reversed, just as some of the odd names used on railroad Pullmans are made up. The car is equipped with hot and cold water, sleeping accommodations for four and every convenience. Accompanied by Mrs. Bekins and the son of his Los Angeles plant manager, Arthur Johnson, he left recently on his tour, which will take him to all parts of the continent.

The Reo chassis used is similar to those in use by many stage lines and school districts throughout the country and is equipped with a high-powered six-cylinder motor, special electric generator of great power to supply his extra lighting, a frame braced strongly with many powerful cross members, powerful brakes and ample cooling facilities. The camp job steers practically as easily as a touring car and is as easily handled in the mountains or over rough roads as anyone could wish. A speed of as high as forty or forty-five miles an hour is said to be available and there is ample power for heavy grades or rough going.

BURBANK DADS ARE ALIVE

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

BURBANK, July 19.—Burbank is either busy paving or perfecting plans for improving highways that are designed to prove feeders for Riverside Drive, when the dream of that route shall have been materialized into a reality. This much talked-of drive is simply an ambitious development of the country road that runs along the south side of the Los Angeles River under the bluffs of Elysian Park into one of the most beautiful as well as useful boulevards in Southern California. When completed it will supply a river-level route from Los Angeles into the San Fernando Valley with outlets from many city streets between North Broadway and the valley, namely, North Broadway, Figueroa, Alvarado, Silver Lake or as it is to be known—Fletcher Boulevard, Beechwood Drive and the Dark Canyon Road over Pass avenue. It will likewise serve Burbank and Glendale with an almost equal arterial connection with the City and the valley. Its western terminus will be somewhere near Encino on Ventura Boulevard and Sepulveda Boulevard.

It will skirt the bluffs and hills of Elysian and Griffith Parks which supply a wealth of foliage, trees and other plant life to beautify it along the north exposures. It will be so located that wonderful panoramic vistas of valley and mountains are on every hand, and as it winds along the cool and shaded river side it will become at once one of the famous drives of Southern California.

Riverside Drive will, in addition to its scenic beauty, supply one of the most utilitarian arteries of the city. It will be 100 feet wide, water level grade, heavy concrete surface and capable of supplying a rapid, comfortable as well as esthetic highway. It will be about fifteen miles long and without dangerous grade crossings.

At present the old river-side road is usable between Los Feliz Road on the west end, the old wooden bridge across the river where Dayton avenue meets Avenue Twenty, and where San Fernando Boulevard begins.

A beautiful new concrete structure will replace the old wooden bridge. The city is now using prison labor to cut a thirty-foot shelf road around the bluff of Elysian Park to Fremont entrance at the west end of North Broadway viaduct. When the shelf road is completed the 100-foot Riverside Drive will be built around the bluff.

It will be seen that this will enable all traffic on North Broadway destined for Highland Park or Mount Washington over Dayton avenue, or for all North Broadway traffic destined for Glendale, Eagle Rock, Burbank and other San Fernando Boulevard points, to avoid the traffic and get directly to destination without going over North Broadway viaduct and around Avenue Twenty. It will also eliminate two very dangerous grade crossings.

FREE JITNEY SERVICE

A Southern Ohio rural church, according to Farm and Home, is literally going out into the highways and byways and compelling them to come in. This body has mapped out routes going by the homes of present and prospective members, and likewise lists the cars owned by members. Each car owner becomes the chauffeur of a free jitney leading to church and Sunday-school.

A totally new car, of course. Longer, stronger, handsomer, and more powerful—a beauty in every sense of the word!

Takes 2 Seconds

You will never know what convenience means until you see the One-Shot Lubrication System. Think of driving a car on which you never use a grease gun or oil can—on which squeaks and rattles and prematurely worn parts are literally unknown.

A plunger projects through the floor board. When you step on it, 23 vital parts of the car are lubricated simultaneously.

No wonder the 1925 Cleveland Six is taking the nation by storm! It's the easiest car in the world to take care of—and, in addition, it offers qualities of performance, beauty, stamina and economy never before available in any car of moderate price!

Comfort, too! The comfort that only genuine, supersize balloon tires can provide. All models come equipped with them at no extra cost. And if you prefer

4-Wheel Brakes

—these are offered as optional equipment at a slight additional charge.

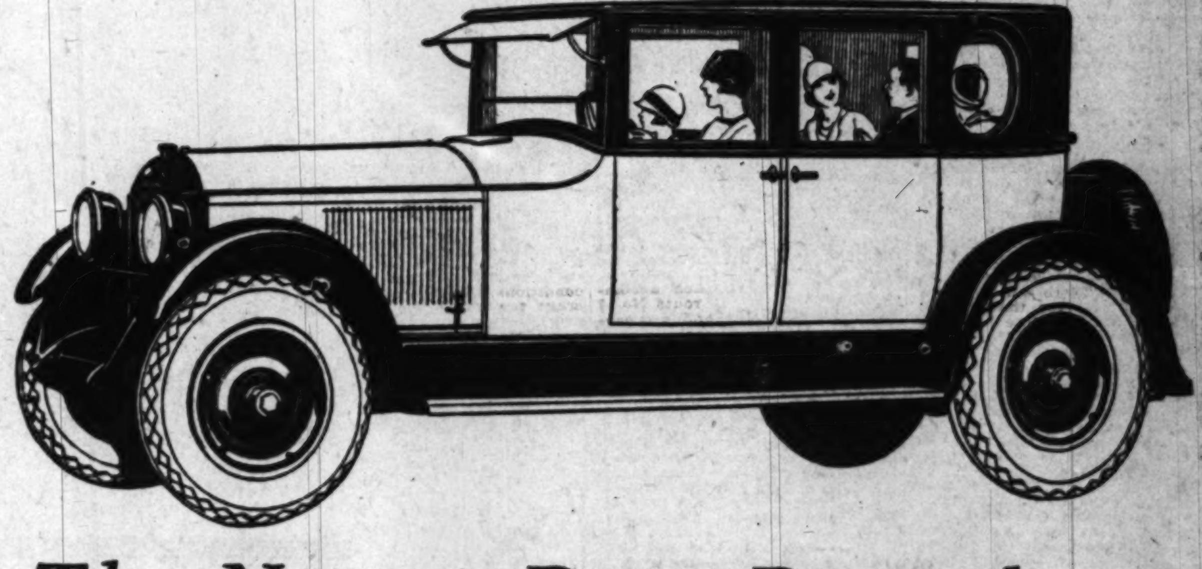
"Easiest Car in the World to Take Care of"

A New Enclosed Paige for only $2520!

[Standard Open Models Now $2210]



The New 4-Door Brougham

THINK! Last year the 4-door enclosed Paige sold for $3495. Here's the New Paige Brougham—smarter in appearance, bettered in performance—for only $2520. Now think what this means:

You can get an enclosed Paige today for the price of an ordinary smaller enclosed car! You may now enjoy fine big car performance, comfort, appearance for $1000 less than it used to cost! Yes—$1000 than it costs today in any other car!

Great Performance

There's a new thrill waiting for you. Just drive the New Paige and the marvelous performance of the big 70 h.p. Paige motor will tell you what a real joy ample power can be! Throttle down to 2 miles an hour in high when traffic thickens—then see the big New Paige pull quietly ahead when you touch the accelerator. Paige is a perfected six. That means perfect balance, smoothness, simplicity. More cylinders would only reduce its efficiency—add useless parts.

Easy to Drive

Easy to drive? None easier than the New Paige! The gentle Paige clutch forbids jerking or stalling. And ball-bearing steering spindles give finger-touch guidance!

Paige riding comfort will open new routes for you—roads you shunned before. For the big New Paige—with 131-inch wheelbase, rear springs more than 5 feet long, snubbers—laughs at bumps.

This New Paige Brougham looks the thoroughbred, too. The rich maroon finish of the body contrasts smartly with the ebony of the radiator and fenders and the black fine-grain leather finish of the top and rear.

Here, indeed, is a record value—a smart enclosed Paige at $2520. You cannot match Paige with any car near its price. For Paige has a longer wheelbase, giving better comfort; more weight, meaning greater strength; and more power, assuring long motor life and amazing performance.

Try to Match Paige Value

To get a 4-door brougham with all these Paige qualities you must pay at least $1810 more than the remarkably low price of this smart Paige Brougham!

Drive this New Paige. Compare it in every point with other fine cars. Call us for a demonstration.

OREGON IS THE TOURING MECCA

Thousands of Californians Pick on Northwest

Vacation There This Summer is Quite the Thing

Studebaker Party Return from Two-Week Trip

Oregon is attracting hundreds of Southern California motorists this summer for road conditions have been so greatly improved to the northern State that touring is a delight either by way of the Redwood highway up the coast or over the Pacific highway through Redding and Medford.

Harry Irvin, wife and their friend, J. O. Preston, have recently returned from a two weeks' vacation trip to Crater Lake and Diamond Lake going north by way of Sacramento and Klamath Falls and returning by way of Medford and then out to the Coast highway by following the Klamath River.

FAST TIME

On the trip north Irvin made excellent time as he traveled the valley boulevard from Los Angeles to Sacramento between noon of one day and one o'clock the next morning, a distance of 416 miles. The 353 miles between Sacramento and Yreka was clipped off in ten hours which gave an excellent average speed across the Sacramento Valley. It was quite hot in the valley and a detour of twenty miles had to be negotiated to get around some paving work being done on the main highway above Redding. This detour is rough and slow but is soon past and is hardly to be considered a deterrent. Turning off the Pacific Highway at Green Springs, without going into Ashland, the party went over the Ashland-Klamath Falls highway which is now in good shape. Last summer over thirty miles of it was literally torn to pieces and four to five miles an hour was as fast as it could be driven.

From Klamath Falls over an excellent road the Studebaker Big Six was driven to Crater Lake and its beauties seen for a few hours. From there the road to Diamond Lake was followed. It is reported as a good mountain road and easy to travel as the elevation is about 1000 feet less than at Crater Lake.

The party camped for several days at Diamond Lake and had fine sport trout fishing. The trout averaged four pounds running up to six but some much larger fish were caught there. According to the officials of the trout hatchery they have trapped rainbow trout during the spawning season that ran as high in weight as twenty pounds. Few of these are ever caught as they snap the line at the first strike.

POPULOUS RESORT

Diamond Lake was crowded over the week-end of the Fourth of July and, according to Irvin, had more persons around its banks on the Fourth than are usually found in the San Bernardino mountain lake resorts on a holiday.

It is a very popular place for the northern motorists for along one shore of the lake there is a strip of green a hundred yards wide that affords ample and delightful camp spots for hundreds of motorists. The lake is five miles long, easy to reach from Medford from which point it is ninety miles and has ample accommodations for campers or tourists as there is a well managed resort there.

Checking up on gasoline mileage Irvin found that he made his best economy record between Redding and Yreka over the Siskiyou Mountains where the Studebaker Big Six averaged eighteen miles per gallon for 182 miles. Up the San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys he averaged better than fifteen miles per gallon.

In the 2130 miles of travel on the vacation trip there was but one occasion for mechanical service and that was to clean the ignition points.

Figuring up the total expense of the trip for the three it was found that $105 covered everything although many meals en route were eaten at numerous cafes and hotels along the highways.

LATINS FALL HARD FOR OUR MOTOR CARS

Yankee ingenuity may be looked on with suspicion in the broad countries of South America, but the distrust does not extend to American motor cars, according to word received by Jack Benell, general manager of the Los Angeles Haynes Company.

"In keeping step with the parade of progress, the 'Gea,' Importadero-Exportadero, Cia., will push the distribution of the Haynes motor cars from headquarters in Buenos Aires, capital of the Argentine.

"According to word received at the Haynes factories in Indiana, the Haynes has met with the full approval of the luxury-loving Latins. Sport models are especially popular with them, offering a wide variance from the ultra-conservative cars of continental manufacture.

"Argentinians, like the remainder of the South Americans, express the greatest interest in the equipment of the Haynes, such as the adjustable visor for sun and rain, front and rear bumpers and the completely equipped instrument board."

BASS LAKE ROAD IN GOOD SHAPE

Motorists traveling to the Yosemite from Fresno and Southern California points may now take advantage of the Bass Lake route, according to J. A. C. Waters, Southern California representative for Camp Curry, noted Yosemite resort. This is a little known scenic road traversing the National Forest timberland for much of its route and is said to be one of the most beautiful of all ways of entering the Yosemite.

"The best route at present is via Fresno, Lane's Bridge, Friant, Auberry, Bass Lake and Wawona," Mr. Waters declares, "and thence to Yosemite and Camp Curry. It is also possible to make the trip by the Sanger-Academy Road, leaving Fresno on Ventura and Belmont avenues. The Clovis-Academy Road is still closed. From Academy to Auberry is in good condition."

CHANGE FIRM'S HANDLE

Stebbins-Roberts-Buquor Company to be Known as Six Wheels, Inc.

The name of Stebbins-Roberts-Buquor Company is changed in another expansion program and will be known as Six Wheels, Inc. The new company will be devoted entirely to the manufacture and distribution of the six-wheel units in California. Dealer organizations are now being appointed to distribute throughout the United States.

Edwin S. Roberts.

In a statement made last night by Mr. Edwin S. Roberts, secretary and treasurer of the Stebbins-Roberts-Buquor Company, Mr. Roberts declared: "The personnel of the company remains the same with the addition of three new members. This is our second expansion program in the last year. Six Wheels, Inc., will be strongly financed to carry on the manufacture and distribution of six-wheel products in the West. Eastern branches will be supplied out of Detroit, Mich."

Together with this announcement comes the announcement that the six-wheel unit will be supplied for any make of truck, new or second hand.

SAFE NIGHT ILLUMINATION

What is safe illumination for night motoring?

This question is answered by W. Graham Cole, Manager of the Washington (D. C.) Safety Council, in a recent publication of the National Safety Council.

"The automobile should have such a light which, when the bright lights are on, will throw a direct beam for some distance along the road in front and both sides; at the same time not rising so as to glare in the face of the driver of an approaching vehicle," Mr. Cole says, "Such a light is available through a few simple adjustments, just as simple as the adjustments you make when tuning in your radio. Such a light is not only legal and safe, but is actually better for the party driving behind it. In other words, from a selfish standpoint, if from no other, a proper headlight is desirable."

Mr. Cole outlines the following test for headlights:

"Place your car on a level road twenty-five feet from a fence or wall. Mark a horizontal line on the wall as high above the ground as the center of your headlight. Mark two vertical lines on your headlights. Now remove the lenses and then by turning the small focusing screw in the rear of the lamp or on its rim, or by moving the lamp in and out—if on a ratchet device—change the ray of light until the smallest possible bright light appears. The spot from each lamp, with the other lamps covered, should be centered on the vertical line opposite it. If this is not the case, twist the headlight itself until it is correct. On some types of cars this may be done by loosening the bolts holding the lamp mounting. On others, it must be done by force. By this means you simply aim each light as you would aim a garden hose and arrange them so that the rays are parallel and directed in the proper place.

"Now replace the lenses—be sure they are in straight—and note the picture of bright light on the wall formed by combined days from both lamps. This picture will in most cases appear as an eclipse, the top which should be directly below the horizontal line marking the height of the center of the headlight. If the bright part is above the horizontal line at all, bend or tilt the frame holding the headlight downward until the light shows below the line, this adjustment will cause the light to shine where it is needed on the road and not in the face of an approaching driver."

Detects Rough Spots on the Trails Highway

Tourists contemplating a trip East by way of the National Old Trails route are warned that many miles of the road are under repairs. This word was brought to Harold L. Arnold by J. Homer Anderson, who drove an Essex six coach through from Denver in eight days.

Mr. Anderson said, "Much needed repairs are being made in several places along the National Old Trails route. I found it impossible to make more than twenty miles per hour at best, and on some of the rougher detours, less than that.

"The distance from Denver to to Los Angeles, according to my speedometer, is 1503 miles. That makes an average of almost 200 miles per day for the Essex. I had some misgivings before starting, for a trip of this kind is not the usual thing for my wife and baby.

"We had not been on the road more than a day or two, before my doubts had disappeared, and I fell to congratulating myself upon having an Essex. The coach was so comfortable and easy riding, that the youngster and Mrs. Anderson felt no fatigue. We could not have had an easier trip if we had driven the highest priced car on the market."

SAFE CARS FOR DRIPPY DRIVING ARE PRAISED

Mindful that there will undoubtedly be a break before long in the unusually long dry spell motorists have been enjoying here, O. R. Fuller, president of the White Auto Company, Southern California Auburn distributors, calls attention to the unique design of the Auburn open models. "Weatherproof cars of the open type that include the safe vision feature for drippy driving are becoming increasingly popular," said Fuller.

Gives Open Car a Back Seat in Motoring World

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

MOLINE (Ill.) July 16.—The time is not far distant when the automobile manufacturer can expect to sell 95 per cent closed cars according to F. E. Bradfield, vice-president in charge of sales, at the Velie Motors Corporation, Moline, Ill. He asserts that the largest manufacturers of passenger cars in the country are reporting an ever increasing ratio of closed car sales as compared with open models.

Reports to the Velie Corporation show, he says, that the public is now really straining a point to buy good closed cars and while a year ago the average manufacturer showed about 30 per cent closed-car sales he is now showing close to 50.

New Type of Truck Cord Is Developed

After continuous experiment over a long period, close research, conscientious development in laboratory and field and actual running tests over all conditions of road in all kinds of weather and under varying load and service conditions, a new truck and bus type cord tire has been built by Miller. It was announced last week by J. O. Ward, special representative of the Miller Rubber Company of California.

Ward says it has all the old-time well-known Miller ear marks inside and out, plus some new distinctive features, new to Miller until now, and new to other makers still.

"It has been the sleepless task of Miller experts to keep ahead of requirements in the world of industrial transport," said Ward.

"In the new truck and bus type Miller cord, 'Miller quality' is not only maintained, but improved. All Miller records, all through the years, records based on supercritical service tests, give mathematical proof by comparison, that Miller heavy duty pneumatic casings and tubes have run better in all service, normal and abnormal, than the bulk of truck tires on the market. These are practical, not hypothetical facts."

EMBLEM PROVIDES ROAD MAP

A map of the Redwood Highway in miniature is furnished on the reverse of a windshield emblem for motorists just issued by the Save the Redwoods League. The gummed side of this emblem consists of a striking design showing a giant redwood and the slogan "save the redwoods on the Redwood Highway." On the side which faces the occupants of the automobile is printed a map showing the distances from point to point on the Redwood Highway. Already there has been great demand for these maps on the part of the numerous tourists who because of the interest in the Redwoods are touring this wonderful route. It is reported that the Redwood Highway was never in better condition, particularly between Sausalito and Eureka, and because of the perpetual green in the Redwood forests motorists are taking particular delight in this trip at a time when much of California is very dry, due to lack of rain.

A wall thirty feet high and thirteen feet broad could be built all round England with the coal annually mined in that country.

DESIGN DEFLECTOR OF WIND FOR CLOSED CAR

An improved type of wind deflector designed especially for the closed car has been developed by the Sunset Specialty Company, makers of the popular Eas-a-just wind deflector. This new device, according to E. C. Learock, manager of the company, embodies both the advantages of the wind deflector and ventilator.

"Many people think that closed-car driving precludes the necessity of shutting out the wind," says Learock, "but the driver invariably drives with the window at his left lowered and the rush of air into the car as it speeds along is very discomforting. It pulls on one's hat and necktie. By the means of our specially designed wind deflector, the wind it shut out in much the same manner as on the finest Pullman railroad cars."

Wills Sainte Claire, Inc., will continue the use of the present eight cylinder "V" type Wills Sainte Claire engine —with overhead cams and valves.

This statement is made officially. No emergency exists in the Wills Sainte Claire sales situation—calling for sensational engineering innovations or fads. Wills Sainte Claire cars are SELLING and STAYING SOLD.

So there is no SALES or FINANCIAL REASON for considering the Straight Eight —much less any ENGINEERING REASON.

The "V" type has long since passed the experimental stage.

As no other engine, it has PROVED its superiority in the motor car, and in aviation, where dependability is a matter of life and death, it has no competition.

Thousands of Wills Sainte Claire owners have road tested the Wills Sainte Claire eight cylinder "V" type engine over thousands upon thousands of miles, and thus in actual usage it has exceeded in goodness the fondest expectations of its designer and makers.

Meanwhile other "V" type fine cars have contributed additional incontrovertible proof of "V" type correctness.

The same policy of engineering consistency will apply throughout the entire car.

To both present and prospective Wills Sainte Claire owners the above statement will be gratifying and reassuring.

The Inside Story of the Great JORDAN Line Eight

[Trade Mark]

THIS is the inside story of The Great Jordan Line Eight.

We might as well tell it.

Every manufacturer—every dealer knows it's true.

Every Jordan owner has realized it for years so here it is frankly—in short paragraphs—simple words—easy to understand.

There are many thousands of Jordan owners throughout the world. Ninety-nine per cent of them buy Jordan after Jordan, some of them buying year after year—others retain their original cars, some of them for six and eight years.

The first Jordan ever built has gone 300,000 miles and is still in the hands of the original owner.

Think of it—ninety-nine per cent of all the people to whom you have rendered satisfactory service remaining loyal to their favored car.

Jordan is the greatest repeat order car in the industry.

This is the great fundamental of Jordan success.

It imposes an obligation.

It means that as the industry progresses Jordan must anticipate the future.

Jordan must constantly build a better car.

Jordan must lead.

Frankly, The Great Line Eight has been produced to give to Jordan owners a better automobile than they ever had before—better looking—more comfortable—better performing—longer lasting—the best job that Jordan engineers or any other engineers in this country ever produced.

Think again what this means.

The success of the great merchants of the country is not based merely upon the acquisition of new buyers each year.

Success is based upon the service rendered to old customers who in turn automatically create new customers.

Jordan cars are built for Jordan owners—successful, sincere people of character, good taste and judgment.

Speed is attractive to them only because it means reserve power.

Economy is attractive only because it means common sense.

Fine mechanical workmanship is attractive because it means long life.

We want every Jordan owner to feel that The Great Line Eight was built for him.

It's the next step in his progress toward ultimate satisfaction in a motor car.

Thousands of these cars will go into the hands of Jordan owners before the end of the year.

Our belief is that these new owners will find in this car an automobile which they can drive year after year with satisfaction, with economy and with perfect confidence that it will command the highest resale value of any car in its class.

This, in short, is the inside story of The Great Line Eight.

Call up the Jordan dealer.

Get your name on the list of those who will be invited to see The Great Jordan Line Eight when it arrives.

Then buy one.

Keep it for one year or ten years.

Then you will realize the meaning of Jordan success.

"More Miles Per Car"

Ray McNamara's Tips for SUMMER Trips

Car Owners Should Thoroughly Acquaint Themselves with the Gauges and Indicators

I wonder how many car owners could answer correctly the question "What should your ammeter and oil gauge show at ten, twenty or forty miles per hour?" and "Should these gauges read the same at these speeds under freezing and summer temperatures?"

Do you know that manufacturers spend tens of thousands of dollars through their engineering departments, experimenting in laboratory and on cross-country runs developing their models and determining correct standards for these instruments and finally a lot of service experts sum up all the data gathered by the engineers and put it into an instruction book that goes with each car to guide the owner?

TROUBLE PERIOD

Ordinarily, the oiling system does not give much trouble in everyday city service because load on motor is usually light and the occasional coasting into traffic blocks and slowing up at street intersections usually provides a flushing of pistons and rings with oil. In some cases, oil pressures are cut down by service mechanics to reduce tendency of exhaust smoking and under these light loads and favorable conditions, low oil pressures are not so harmful. But when you start on a long tour or on a drive through the country, you are going to find things different. The motor that gets a dozen or more rests and several flushings of oil in the course of a few miles of city driving, is now going to be driven a sustained speed perhaps with full quota of passengers. A wider opening of throttle is being used, resulting in higher water temperature. This in turn means greater expansion of pistons, rings and bearings.

Now if the engineers found twenty pounds or more oil pressure necessary to properly lubricate your motor at a speed of thirty to forty miles per hour, they have passed this information along to you in the car-instruction book. Study it carefully and find out just what figure is right, and remember that it does not hurt if the gauge shows a little more than recommended but don't run at high speeds if under specified pressures.

A good example of how motor performance varies when driven with wide-open throttle constantly, as against an occasionally closing of the throttle which tends to flush motor with oil, came to light following the 500-mile race at Indianapolis in 1915.

PERIODIC FLUSHING

The Hoosier speedway required a slackening of pace as the cars entered the turns, there being two turns. It meant that the engines were being rested and flushed with oil twice on the two-and-one-half-mile course. Now up to that time, the Indianapolis track was the fastest in the country and all of the race cars of that date were tuned up for this particular track. However, a few weeks later when the racing crews moved up to Chicago for the opening meet on the Windy City's new boarded speedway with high banks at the turns permitting wide-open throttle all the time, there was something more to be learned.

The spark plugs which performed satisfactorily a short time before on the Hoosier speedway would burn away too fast on the Chicago speedway, because they were not cooled twice every two and one-half miles. Further, bearings were burned out and pistons were sticking for the same reason. It was necessary on several of the cars to alter oil pressures and other points in connection with oil system to provide adequate lubrication.

So it is with the passenger car. They are not built to be driven at maximum speed constantly. Owners should bear this point in mind all the time. If the maximum speed of your car is eighty miles per hour and it is a standard production car, I dare say something serious would happen to it if driven at eighty miles per hour for ten miles or more on a speedway unless a special fit was made of bearings, pistons, etc.

In connection with oil pressure, it is not always necessary to alter adjustments to bring low pressures up. Diluted oil or using too light oil will result in low pressures. Change your oil first to the proper grade. Then read pressures. At any rate, if your oil pressures read low, drive slowly until the cause can be corrected.

Correct readings on ammeter are very important, particularly during warm weather, as mentioned in the spring house cleaning series.

DANGER POINT

In the case of new cars, the charging rate usually builds up to a dangerous point due to brushes wearing in.

In the case where charge rate has been boosted to provide sufficient current for heavy winter loads in battery, this should be corrected in accordance with instruction-book specifications.

You very often see tourists driving with their lights on in the day time to protect the battery from overcharging. This is very good so far as the battery is concerned, but remember the generator output remains the same and if the charging rate is set too high, there is danger of ruining your generator.

Every generator has what might be termed a critical charging rate, that is a rate that will develop a dangerous temperature on the commutator which would melt the soldered connections. Follow your instruction book closely on proper charging rate at ammeter.

The oil pressure gauge and ammeter are important tell-tales. Every car owner should know just what it means when the dials read high or low. We all watch the oil and gasoline gauge because the car would stop very quickly if the supply ran short. Now in the former case, bad results do not always immediately follow, but it is a safe bet that you are going to be inconvenienced terribly and it is going to cost you a pretty penny to get fixed up and this is not always convenient during a tour on a limited vacation.

Round Trip by Jackrabbit Special

EX-AUTO OFFICIAL AND WIFE ENJOY ROUND TRIP TO PORTLAND

A round trip from Los Angeles to Portland even by rail or by water is considered a hard journey but Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Peer, who have just returned from the northern city after an absence of about two weeks, were not at all tired. They used a motor car—an Apperson eight sedan equipped with balloon tires—as their means of travel.

Mr. Peer was formerly secretary-treasurer of one of the largest automotive concerns in the United States before retiring. According to Harris M. Hanshue, manager here for the Apperson Motor Car Company, he is accordingly qualified to judge the worth of a motor car.

"Mr. Peer has been identified with the industry from the very beginning," Hanshue said. "This is his fourth Apperson. He purchased his first machine in 1912, the second in 1914, the third in '19 and the sedan about two months ago. Mr. Peer told me that he and Mrs. Peer had a thoroughly enjoyable time on their trip." They went to Portland to meet their son Edward S. Peer who recently graduated from Babson's School of Business, Babson Park, Mass.

GREASE SERVICE AT GAS STATIONS

As a new feature of their business, many service stations have installed lubricating service since the first of the year, according to C. A. Roesch, president of the Alemite Lubricator Company of California. "Approximately 25 per cent of the large refining companies, in addition to numerous independent stations, have adopted lubricating service. Over 3500 gasoline filling stations have installed complete lubricating equipment since January.

"The time is not far off when practically every gasoline filling station will give chassis lubrication service as well as sell gasoline and oil to motorists. Most owners realize that they may greatly prolong the life of their car if chassis bearings are thoroughly lubricated after every 500 miles the motor is driven. Drivers who follow this custom state that many repair bills are thus avoided."

Tickled Over Rumor Result in This City

Chevrolet dealers in Los Angeles are congratulating themselves on the outcome of a well-laid campaign of rumors that swept Los Angeles during the past several weeks in regard to the future activities of the Chevrolet Motor Company.

Many apparently well-founded rumors were launched to the effect that Chevrolet was going to do everything from stopping production on their well-known four-cylinder model in favor of the future manufacture of a six-cylinder car to going out of business altogether.

As far as could be ascertained through close investigation the rumors were purely of local origin. Inquiries made in other Pacific Coast cities showed no evidence that the same rumors were abounding outside of Los Angeles.

The rumors, while they did cause no little speculation as to the future of Chevrolet in the minds of people who did not stop to think just what it would mean for the world's largest manufacturer of fully equipped, low-priced cars to cease production, did no great harm in a general way.

The announcement of a new model coming at a time when everyone was talking and thinking Chevrolet added much impetus to their sales and advertising efforts and the new model has become thoroughly popularized over night. On the Sunday following Independence Day, a Sunday that would ordinarily be very quiet on account of the close proximity of a national holiday, the showrooms of the Chevrolet dealers were crowded with prospective purchasers who had dropped in to take a look at the new model.

40% VOTED IN FAVOR

Guaranteed 100% PURE PENNSYLVANIA OIL

Official insignia of the Pennsylvania Grade Crude Oil Association Permit No. 2

Managers for Service Departments of Motor-Car Dealers voted by secret ballot on the Motor-Oil question

In order to secure the unbiased opinions of the men who know most about the actual lubricating value of motor-oils, unidentified question sheets were mailed to the Service Managers of all of the motor-car sales agencies of California.

These men were asked to indicate the types and brands of motor-oils they used in servicing new and used cars—and why. They were requested to return the question sheets by mail without signing them.

Here is the convincing result:

90% of these Service Managers are using Pennsylvania oil

40% are using PENNZOIL the Supreme Pennsylvania Quality Oil

While four out of every ten Service Managers are using Pennzoil in the scores of automobiles serviced daily, the others scattered their votes among 25 different brands of oil.

"Best by actual experience," was the outstanding reason given for preferring Pennzoil. A few of the many other reasons were: "Keeps its body and lubricating value under heat"—"Lasts longer"—"Freedom from carbon"—"Good film on cylinder walls without excessive use of oil."

Why did we particularly want the experiences and opinions of Service Managers? Because these men know. They must know. Their job is to "keep cars on the road and out of the shop." Proper lubrication is an important problem to them, for they keenly realize how seriously lubrication affects the behavior and life of the cars sold.

Don't experiment with motor-oils. Profit by the experience of these critical experts. Use Pennzoil in your own automobile.

WHAT THE STATE IS DOING IN THE SOUTH

Improvement of Desert Highways is Interesting the Highway Commission

BY HARVEY M. TOY

[Note: This is the fourth of a series of articles on State highway construction in Southern California by the chairman of the board.]

For years, apparently, the interstate connections on the California highway system across the deserts of the Southeastern part of the State have remained unimproved. Aside from a few surveys, no effort on the part of the State, it would seem, has been made to better traffic conditions on routes traveled by thousands annually on their way to the Southland.

The present highway commission announced a policy of completing interstate trunk lines, and, in accordance with this declaration, we are pushing forward construction of the main line connection with Yuma, Ariz., as a first consideration.

STUDYING DESERT ROADS

But we have not stopped there. We are making a serious effort to better conditions on all the desert roads and, to this end, have taken over for maintenance the Barstow-Needles road. The first work to be done by the State on this highway is now underway.

Improvements made by the new San Bernardino division on the Barstow-Needles route speak for themselves. The work is being praised throughout Southern California by those who have had occasion to make the trip. Paving, at present, is out of the question, but with a moderate expenditure of maintenance funds we have been able to make a remarkable showing by simply grading and dragging the road. It is reported the running time, between Barstow and Needles has been reduced several hours.

For months, studies have been underway on the Mecca-Blythe connection, Gov. Richardson and members of the commission have been over the road, if indeed, it can be called a road. Commissioner N. T. Edwards, State Highway Engineer R. M. Morton, with the division engineer, have covered every possible route across this section of the desert so that when the decision on location is made it will be supported by complete information.

CONSTRUCTION UNDERWAY

On the Yuma road, construction for a graded and graveled highway is underway, east of the Sand Hills, in Imperial county, and studies are being made for the improvement of the present plank road across the dunes in this vicinity.

North of Mojave, the new Division IX, is undertaking considerable improvement of sections of the road east of Sierras, where there has been an increased amount of traffic during the recent open winter.

Lack of snow, has made it possible for Division VIII to keep the Crest Route to Big Bear Lake open practically all winter. Grading work done on this road has been widely commended throughout the south.

STATE HAS OBLIGATION

On all these roads—the mountain roads because they are used by thousands of pleasure seekers and the desert connections because they are the routes over which many transcontinental tourists come—the State owes an obligation to traffic. They have been designated State highways and the counties no longer maintain them. The State can no longer shirk its duty, and the present commission is not seeking to do so.

Set Date of Pike's Peak Hill Contest

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

COLORADO SPRINGS (Colo.) July 15.—The famous hill-climb races over the automobile road to the summit of Pikes' Peak at Colorado Springs will held again this year on September 1.

This year's contest will be looked forward to with unusual interest by both manufacturers and the public, as it will decide the permanent possession of the big Penrose trophy, a cup forty-three inches high of Colorado silver and gold, given by Spencer Pearose of Colorado Springs and which has been contested for since these races were inaugurated in 1916. The course is to the tip-top point of America's most famous mountain and the distance is twelve miles plus 2200 feet. The races are divided into three events:

Event No. 1. Open to A.A.A. Classification class "E" cars, with a piston displacement of 183 cubic inches or less. Prizes, cash: First $500, second $200.

Event No. 2. Open to A.A.A. Classification class "C" cars, with a piston displacement of 183 to 300 cubic inches. Prizes, cash: First $500, second $200.

Event No. 3. Open to A.A.A. Classification class "E" cars, with a piston displacement over 300 cubic inches. Prizes, cash: First $500, second, $200.

BIKE RIDERS WITHOUT LIGHTS ARE DANGEROUS

Bicycle riders not equipped with lights when riding after dark are jeopardizing their own and other lives and violating a State law, according to an investigation following the recent tragic death of a babe and the serious injury of five other persons caused by a lightless bicyclist.

This occurrence is not unusual, according to the accident record of the Automobile Club of Southern California. There have been other deplorable and preventable casualties due directly to failure of persons riding along the highway in the dark on bicycles.

Many accidents have been narrowly averted when motorists have come unexpectedly upon these careless night riders. Every effort will be made to enforce full compliance with the law in the future.

KEEP FLEET OF BUICKS ON THE RUN

Standard Six Demonstrators Set New Record for Passengers Carried

Thousands of persons have already testified to the motoring comfort, the performance at low and high speeds demanded by exacting drivers, the mechanical perfection and ease of handling of the new 1925 Standard six Buick models since they were introduced to Los Angeles on the morning of July 1.

A fleet of seven touring model demonstrators, aided and abetted by a fleet of drivers mounted on other models have been kept busy from morning till night, and an average of nearly 300 persons per day have been given an opportunity to see for themselves the many outstanding features that contribute to the responsiveness at the wheel and the work on the road of the new 1925 Buick, according to officials of the Howard Automobile Company.

"Large tires of low pressure type, adopted after severe tests on Buick cars of 1,500,000 tire miles, have made an instant hit with the motoring public," said Assistant General Manager G. W. Tuttle last week. These, with the Buick spring suspension and the deep, stuffed upholstery, over specially designed springs, provide extra riding comfort.

"The same four-wheel brakes which won instant success are retained on the new Standard six models without even a change in a single cotter pin. This is the best proof of the correctness of the Buick engineers' design that I know of.

"A feature that will appeal to the followers of the inclosed car is the new one-piece windshield, adjustable from the inside used in Buick inclosed models. Raising the windshield opens a vent the entire width of the car at the bottom of the windshield. Air is deflected down into the front compartment across its full width. Raising the windshield further permits a direct current of air to enter the car.

"Extreme ease of comfort is provided for by the use of the Jacox steering gear, a new design employing the split bronze nut and steel worm type. It has a combination radial and thrust ball bearing which rigidly supports the upper end of the worm. It is both positive and free in action and is designed to prevent the transmission of road shocks to the steering wheel."

Yosemite to Sequoia Road is Splendid

CAMP CURRY, YOSEMITE, July 15.—Roads between Yosemite and Sequoia National Parks are in first-class shape and motorists can travel from Sequoia to Yosemite or vice versa in a single day, reported Robert T. Williams, Camp Curry manager, on his return to Yosemite yesterday from a tour of the Sequoia Park with Francis P. Farquhar, special field accountant of the National Park Service. "Sequoia has charms as distinctive in their way as those of Yosemite or of the Grand Canyon," commented Williams. "Forests of huge redwoods surround amazingly green meadows in Sequoia as contrasted with walls of sheer granite and meadows of dogwood and azalea in the Yosemite.

"Sequoia is gaining in popularity, thanks to its natural assets and the publicity being given them as a result of the unflagging efforts of John R. White, superintendent of Sequoia National Park.

"A new highway will be opened to Sequoia Park about the middle of next season. This will be in every respect the equal of the new all-year paved highway from Merced to Yosemite, which will be opened about the same time or shortly thereafter."

ENOUGH COLORS TO SUIT ALL TASTES

CUSTOM-BUILT CARS HAVE A WIDE RANGE OF HUES FOR CUSTOMERS

There are the primary colors—the rainbow hues; and then, of course, there are the multitudinous shades ranging from warm cream on up through the whole pastelian scale to jet black. And a variety sufficient to delight the soul of a technical student of color—or the heart of a man or woman desiring something especially colorful in the way of a personal motor vehicle—has been put on display at the H. J. Wurzburger, Inc., Kissel headquarters here.

Lemon yellow, biege brown, horizon blue, carmine, jet-black, tomato red—these and a large variety of other individualistic hues are to be seen in the new Kissel enclosed roadsters, it is pointed out by D. Gerard Chessman, general manager for Wurzburger.

"We have these custom-built cars right on the show room floor or in the warehouse here ready for immediate delivery," Mr. Chessman stated. "The offering of so wide a range of choice in body colors is but another indication of the truly custom character of the new Kissel models. They are manufactured so that the buyers—themselves mostly persons of individual tastes and strong personalities—may select just the type of car to express their special fancy."

Resort Notes

"Jesse James" Misnomer

The famous bear, "Jesse James," in the Yellowstone National Park, who, according to Gelston C. Judah, local manager of the Peck-Judah Travel Bureau, has many times held up parties of Peck-Judah Yellowstone tourists and insisted on obtaining candy or dainty morsels, recently became the proud mother of two cubs. The name of Jesse James immediately becomes a misnomer and should be changed.

The mother and her cubs now do the hold-up act together, and it takes three times as much candy or sweets to get by the hold-up artists.

The Urban Military School of Los Angeles has established a big camp near Camp Curry in the Yosemite Valley. This is the second season the Urban School has selected the Yosemite for a summer excursion.

Glenn Resort Stunts

T. L. Tally, owner of Glenn Ranch Resort, made his first serious start in life as a Texas cowboy and can still sit a saddle with the best of them. He developed into an expert trick rider and was particularly adaptable to tournament riding, a sort of modernized stunt of "ye knights of olde."

Small rings are hung on poles at convenient distances along a half-mile or so of level road and the horseman dashes past endeavoring to spear as many as possible on his lance. If he is not crowned in passing by a low-hanging branch the winner receives a wreath of garlands, placed on his perspiring brow by "ye ladye fair."

Glenn ranchers are practicing for the first tournament, which is planned for today.

Bicycles at Rincon Camp

That the new auto road into Camp Rincon is a success, was proven last Sunday morning, when Fred Wheeler, 15 years of age, and Everett Humphreys, 15, of Baldwin Park, rode into that camp on bicycles. Both boys are employed in a Baldwin Park department store.

Earl V. Thompson, manager of Camp Rincon, has built three miles of private road to permit automobiles to come into camp instead of stopping at the auto camp as has been done until this year.

Lodge Opens School

A special feature at Oakglen Lodge in the mountains back of Redlands, in effect until about August 15, is the recent installation of an instructor in grade work and high school work, according to word just received from Miss A. M. Woodford, proprietor of the lodge.

Overlook Hotel Opens

The completion and opening of the Overlook Apartments and Hotel at 1605 Ocean Front in Santa Monica overlooking the ocean at the new amusement pier, is just announced by Miss B. Russell, proprietor.

The Overlook Apartments and Hotel are centrally located, in close proximity to the new bath house and dance hall.

Walter P. Chrysler Says Maxwell Now Excels Among Fours

In the four-cylinder field, the good Maxwell is now duplicating the revolutionary results which the Chrysler Six has already registered among the sixes.

That in brief is the story of the recent developments accomplished in the Maxwell and the Chrysler engineering staff—which, in my opinion, now stamp the Maxwell a most remarkable four-cylinder car.

These new results are so vital and so valuable that they put the good Maxwell far beyond your previous conception of four-cylinder possibilities.

Have you ever driven a four-cylinder car in which the last noticeable trace of vibration is gone?

Well, that's what you'll find in the good Maxwell of today, with its floating platform spring suspension of the motor.

The first four-cylinder car, we believe, in which vibration is practically eliminated, giving greater comfort to those in the car and far longer life to the car itself.

I don't know that you can appreciate how much this means in new steering and handling and riding ease unless you experience it in the good Maxwell yourself. And if you ride in a closed Maxwell, you'll be glad to miss the annoying rumble you've always found in closed cars.

These, of course, are the differences you would notice first. But they are not all.

As you go along, you will find the Maxwell riding the way you thought only far heavier cars could ride, and displaying a nimbleness that makes you wonder why anyone wants more than Maxwell gives.

Now turn to the other side—costs and upkeep and so on, which are materially reduced by the unusually high proportion of costly alloy steels.

You may not know that Maxwell owners are now averaging 24 miles per gallon of gasoline.

There are a dozen other things I could tell about, but do you know of any four that matches up to Maxwell in these respects?

You see now why I term the Maxwell a revolutionary car among fours. You will understand completely before you've driven a Maxwell five miles.

I can say to you with all assurance that you are going to find in the good Maxwell we are building today far more than you ever hoped for from any four-cvlinder car

SAFETY FACTOR IS BIG CONSIDERATION

"In view of congested traffic conditions in the city and on every important highway, it becomes more and more evident that it is the plain duty of every automobile manufacturer to so build his product that it will perform perfectly in every reasonable emergency," declares an official of the Greer-Robbins Company, State Hupmobile distributors.

"Building an automobile that is safe generally presupposes that the car will naturally have a long life and be more than usually free from repair. For instance; drop forgings are used instead of castings or stampings; that steering knuckles are oversize; that brakes are adequate in size and will work the instant that pressure is applied without too frequent adjusting; in fact, all important parts, large or small, that are essential to high grade performance and safety, are of the very best material, carefully machined and as carefully assembled.

"Strength and safety mean quality—in design, materials and manufacture of the car—which sharply distinguishes the automobiles providing them from others the minute they may be in a real tight pinch."

BOND MAN BACK FROM GREAT TRIP

Says Balloon Tires Big Aid in Desert Driving; Praises New Six's Performance

It's a shame the city of Los Angeles cannot in some way avail it- flowing in Big Pine Creek, accord- self of the abundance of water ing to H. C. Johnson, prominent local bond and insurance broker, who has just returned from a trip in his Peerless six phaeton to Big Pine Lodge. Mr. Johnson reports that the water is higher there this year than it has been in several seasons, and that although the stream is termed a creek, Southern Californians would call it a good-sized river.

The stretch from Los Angeles to Big Pine was covered in the exceptional elapsed time of nine hours, with more than 100 miles of the going beyond Mojave over typical desert roads. Mr. Johnson dropped a tip yesterday at the showrooms of Stanley W. Smith, Inc., Southern California Peerless distributors, with regard to balloon tires as a boon to desert traveling. He says he found that by inflating his front balloons to full thirty-five pounds, and by using thirty pounds pressure in his rear tires he was able to easily stay in the sand ruts, and also when meeting other cars to pass without coming to a stop. This hunch, he remarked, aided materially in making the fast run to Big Pine possible.

The jaunt from Big Pine to Big Pine Lodge, up 4000 feet in elevation, more than 3000 feet of which is surmounted in the last six miles, over a twelve-mile stretch of new road was the toughest of the trip, according to Mr. Johnson. Many cars, he says, have been unable to traverse this bit of going, even in low gear, and others have been able to surmount the many steep portions only by taking a run at them in low gear. No car to his knowledge has ever pulled up at the lodge without boiling. Although lots of the trip was second and low-gear work on this stretch, he says, his Peerless six nosed over all of the "pinches" without difficulty, and that his motor did not overheat. He credits part of the "nonheating" performance to his balloons, which made possible his making most of the first five miles up from Big Pine through decomposed granite and sand in high gear, while other cars were in second.

MECHANICAL BOSS OF MAUGHAN FLIGHT HERE

SUPERVISED PREPARATIONS FOR COAST-TO-COAST ACHIEVEMENT

In the sensational coast-to-coast daylight flight of Lieut. Russell Maughan men never mentioned in connection with the achievement did much to make possible this new feat in aviation.

The arrival of O. E. Stutsman, in charge of the mechanical details of the flight, on the Pacific Coast and his visit to Sales Manager Norman M. Day and Assistant Sales Manager Jack Ott of the Pennzoil Company here this week has aroused great interest in the man who supervised preparations for the epochal event.

Stutsman is chief aero designer of the engineering division of the United States Air Service at McCook Field. In connection with Lieut. Maughan's flight, Stutsman went to the Curtis factory and inspected and supervised the equipment for this flight.

Stutsman on leaving California will tour east, stopping at Colorado Springs, the Garden of the Gods in Dakota, and will make his return trip a semivacation and rest, preliminary to preparation for the airplane racing which will be held at Dayton early in October.

For these races Stutsman will supervise the mechanical preparations and designing of the three army entries for the Pulitzer trophy. The United States Army Air Service will enter these three contestants.

INVENTS SIGNAL TO FRIGHTEN THIEVES

A new departure in theft signals was put on the market last week in the shape of the Collins Autemat, a device intended to frighten away gentlemen with designs on other persons' cars and summon the police. The device fits under the driver's seat. When it is locked a person who sits down on the cushion or attempts to raise it will cause a gong to ring loudly. The device, the invention of Thomas P. Collins, 624 Bixel street, consists of a section of pressed steel which fits under the seat and a concealed switch.

CALLED SCENIC PARADISE

A veritable scenic and sportsmen's paradise, the region around Mammoth, in the High Sierras, contains all that could be asked or demanded for an ideal vacation spot in the opinion of the scouting party from the Albertson Motor Company, Dodge Brothers dealers for Los Angeles and vicinity, who made the trip some time ago in the famous Dodge Brothers veteran road scout, old 300,000.

With hundreds of emerald-hued lakes within easy walking distance of each other, and each one stocked with the gamiest kind of trout, it is little wonder that fishermen returning from the region acclaim it enthusiastically as the best fishing region to be had in the entire Southland, especially this year, when low water has played havoc with near-by streams; but fishing is only one of the delights of this comparatively virgin country.

Hikes in the pine-timbered woods, or to such famous natural wonders as the Devil's Post Pile, a huge canyon of spired and cathedral-like rocks, the seemingly bottomless earthquake fault, or to the growling geysers of a miniature Yellowstone Park, with its paint pots, bubbling hot springs and steaming fumeroles, all these may be visited by the nonfishing members of the family.

Two miles from Mammoth proper the city of Los Angeles maintains one of its summer vacation camps, similar to those in op- Mountains. Under the capable di- eration in the San Bernardino rection of Camp Director J. D. Kellogg, the High Sierras' Recreation Camp, as it is known, affords splendid accommodations at extremely reasonable rates. Bedding only need be brought by motorists as all other accommodations are maintained by the camp. The Owens Valley, through which the motorist passes on his way to the Mammoth Lakes region, is historic ground, having been the scene of many wild Indian fights, as well as many gun fights between the settlers and white renegades. This region was also the scene of several gold strikes, one camp near Mammoth containing, it is said, some 10,000 people before the vein was lost and the camp abandoned as quickly as it was settled.

No Bandwagon Rush With New Motor Models

The Oakland Motor Car Company will not join the wild rush to get aboard the new model "bandwagon," according to a letter from C. J. Nephler, general salesmanager of the Oakland Motor Car Company, to Reeve Gartzmann, president of the California Oakland Motor Company, distributors in this territory.

Quoting from the letter, Gartzmann says: "The Oakland 6-54 which was announced a year ago will be continued on through 1925 without changes in line of body, radiator, cowl, hood or top. Only such minor improvements in the chassis as have been made right along will be included in the future cars.

"The Oakland was recognized as the year-ahead car and many of its advanced principles are still in advance of the procession and are gradually being adopted by other makers of light sixes.

"The Oakland 6-54 as it stands today has made good. It has carried the Oakland from relative obscurity in seventeenth place among all makes of cars, up to ninth place among the topnotchers in the industry, and it is still forging ahead. When a car can do this there is little necessity of resorting to new models in order to stimulate sales."

HOW TO KEEP A CAR OUT OF BANKRUPTCY

If most motorists ran their businesses or their employers' businesses as inefficiently as they do their automobiles, they'd go bankrupt in a year. Such is the claim made by D. R. McBryde of the McBryde Lubricating Service here.

"Few motorists keep track of how much they pay out for oil and grease, labor on lubrication and repairs," he says. "They let the months mount into a year and even longer and never figure it up. They are a little bit afraid to.

"A little oil and grease every so often," he continued, "crank case drained maybe every thousand miles—a little oil and grease every so often again—a repair bill or two because some place received improper lubrication, or none at all. That's the story. But not all of it. The last chapter is in the used car market or the junk pile. And then they buy a new car and begin all over again."

According to McBryde, the only remedy for such a sad state of affairs is through regularity. "Regular and frequent crankcase draining periods should be established and rigidly adhered to," he says. "Bolts and nuts all over the car should be tightened at stated intervals. Every moving part should receive its share of the proper weight and kind of oil and grease."

HOW ABOUT YOUR CROCUS CLOTHS?

Does the shelf of your garage boast a supply of crocus cloth, shellac and olive oil? Necessary adjuncts these to every motorist's equipment, according to H. W. Curtis, vice-president and general manager for Clippinger-Kincaid, Inc., "downtown" Chevrolet dealers here.

"These things properly applied," he says, "will hide those unsightly scratches in the body finish, which unfortunately are practically inevitable in the life of a motor car and do so much to hurt the motorist's pride in its appearance."

Curtis tells how to apply his remedy: "Apply several coats of shellac until the scratch is entirely filled," he says. "When the last coat has dried, it is rubbed with crocus cloth and a little olive oil, just enough to rub the ridges where the new and old coats join. Crocus cloth, used extensively by jewelers, is a polishing cloth of much finer grade than the finest emery cloth and will rub down a surface without the semblance of a cratch. After no signs remain of where the two coats join, a rubdown with a good body polish will render the touch-up inconspicuous and restore the surface to its original appearance."

"Hell'n Maria" Year Predicted by Go-Getters

It's going to be a "Hell'n Maria" year.

Not only is this picturesque classic, coined by a certain aspirant for the Presidential kite tail, to be the battle cry throughout the political campaign, but it has been chosen as title and slogan by a nation-wide band of business go-getters organized among the crack salesmen of the Nordyke & Marmon Company, who have already gone over the top in a mighty charge for sales supremacy.

At the conclusion of two whirlwind sales competitions waged by Marmon salesmen throughout the country H. H. Brooks, general salesmanager of the Nordyke & Marmon Company, has wired the Pelton Motor Company, Marmon distributors for Southern California, that results have been so great in increasing Marmon sales everywhere that the crack salesmen responsible for the notable record will be formed into a battalion of victory, to be known by the expressive title of "The Hell'n Marias."

Membership in this organization will be limited to Marmon salesmen making a certain high score of salesmanship, based not alone on number of cars sold, but upon the clean, creditable methods employed in making the sales.

AMONG THE FANS

It was in the semifinal round in the English tourney that Cohen beat Teschelelt 1 to 0 and 15 draws. In the final round Cohen disposed of Dufficy 2 to 0 and 4 draws.

Mr. Cohen is only 18 years of age, according to a statement in the Glasgow Herald. Negotiations are under way for a match between Cohen and O'Connor, winner of the last Scottish tourney.

Mr. J. Redfield of Kansas City, Mo., was a visitor at the clubrooms last week.

LOS ANGELES TIMES GAME NO. 1672.

10-14, 23-18.

This game is taken from the Glasgow Herald and was played in the last English tourney between Teschelelt and Cohen.

Black—Teschelelt. White—Cohen.

10-14	30-26	5-14	18-9	4-8

26-23	9-14	22-18	10-17
6-10	18-9	1-5	19-15

Now Teschelelt played 8-11 and eventually lost. Some of the spectators thought 17-22 would have drawn, but Teschelelt shows it also a loss by:

17-22	9-6	30-25	18-15	etc.

b—Improves the Encyclopedia which gives play on 18-15.

Mack TRUCKS

You'll Never Know Until You Own Mack Trucks

—the value of standardization

You cannot afford to content yourself with the performance of a fleet of motor trucks that does not include the MACK.

You never will be able to determine what is best for your needs until you put MACKS to the test.

True, MACK Trucks are higher-priced but they will prove that the first difference in cost is offset by their performance. They'll prove lower-priced in the end.

Mr. Fleetowner: Give us the opportunity to discuss your transportation problems with you. Our experience should enable us to be a real help. We'll not advise you to buy a MACK Truck unless it will save you money. Permit us to discuss with you the subject of standardization in an intelligent manner.

ESTIONS NSWERS

By James W. Marsh.

JAMES W. MARSH: I have a 1918, Model [illegible] with a Northway motor. [illegible] spins after the clutch [illegible] fully depressed, making [illegible] difficult. The leather [illegible] in good condition and a [illegible] bearing has been put in [illegible] bearing. Can you suggest [illegible] of this persistent spinning? E. W., El Monte.

A.: Your trouble will be [illegible] the bearing which carries [illegible] clutch spring supporting [illegible] the internal bearing of [illegible] shaft. Remove the [illegible] the bearings to which [illegible] be found at the hub of [illegible]. Either of these bearings [illegible] persistent spinning of [illegible].

Q.: My Gardner 20 is a [illegible]. I cannot get compression [illegible] on the third cylinder. I [illegible] valves, a set of compression [illegible] cylinders are smooth, [illegible] pistons fit all right [illegible] are no breaks, cracks [illegible] to be found anywhere. [illegible] I do? George K., Los [illegible]

A.: The question reminds me [illegible] asked in a certain U. S. [illegible] examination: A circulating pump on the [illegible] was described as being [illegible] mechanical condition, [illegible] outboard connections [illegible] the sea cock open, the [illegible] was what would prevent [illegible] from throwing water. A [illegible] candidate for his first [illegible] answered "I would look [illegible] side and see if there was [illegible] left in the ocean." The [illegible] I can see, from the de[illegible] why there is no compression [illegible] that cylinder is there [illegible] gasoline getting into [illegible].

Q.: [illegible] having a lot of trouble [illegible] around the spark plugs [illegible] Gardner 20. I have put on [illegible] and even used gasket [illegible] them. Still they leak. [illegible] you can tell me in next [illegible] what is the matter [illegible] heavy oil should I use [illegible] S. L., Biltmore, Los [illegible]

A.: I am impressed with [illegible] that you expect too much [illegible] common piece of machinery [illegible] not believe the leak over [illegible] are worrying amounts [illegible]. If the plugs in most [illegible] are tested while run[illegible] cylinder oil around the [illegible] foam will form and [illegible] passage of air. This [illegible] is of no importance. [illegible] gasket cement on a [illegible] it will almost invari[illegible] after its first removal. [illegible] ruined. The threads [illegible] are badly worn and [illegible] plugs are old. If the [illegible] been sufficiently great [illegible] importance the gasket [illegible] the engine is pitted and [illegible] have the seat reamed [illegible]. This will deepen the entry [illegible] and probably new, clean gaskets will cure the trouble. Use any first class oil of medium thickness.

Q.: What are the maximum speeds of a 1923 Cleveland, an Olds '24, a Dodge '24 and a Jewett '24. My Cleveland '24 boils the water in the radiator in two miles. The engine seems to be o.k. and the car rolls easily. Timing, carburetion and ignition are all right. Can you suggest the cause and cure? John G., Barstow.

A.: There is only one way by which I could answer your questions with confidence and being a law abiding citizen and recognising the constitutionality of the State Motor Vehicle Act I must decline securing first-hand data in this matter. Any of the cars mentioned can be driven at a speed greater than the law allows. You certainly have what may be judiciously spoken of as a "hot car." Any engine that boils in two miles must start at almost boiling point. But I note your address is Barstow. Without doubt the circulating system is in very bad condition. The radiator is probably filled with alkaline deposit and mineral salts. If so there is little to be done except a new radiator, but you might try muriatic acid. It is too severe for common use but as a last resort it may do some good. Drain the radiator and put in a quart or so of commercial muriatic acid. After half an hour wash out with a strong stream of water. Put on new hose, have the pump put in first class mechanical condition, run the fan with a snug belt at high speed, possibly it may help to have the pitch of the fan blades increased, use only the best high flash point cylinder oil, do not flush the crankcase with either kerosene or flushing oil, drain the oil every 750 miles, be careful not to use the necessary, use the best gasoline you can get, and run with the ignition moderately advanced at all times.

Q.: I am inclosing a pamphlet of a fuel ingredient which is said to remove carbon. What do you think of it? W.A.P., South Spring street.

A.: I am giving the said "ingredient" a careful test. Up to the present moment I find it of no value.

Q.: The choker of my car was left open over night. Is my oil badly diluted? Could a contrivance be made so this could not happen? R.H.W.

A.: The choker has no effect upon the flow of gasoline while the engine is standing idle. Such a device would be worthless and troublesome because the operator must judge how much choking is needed to meet conditions.

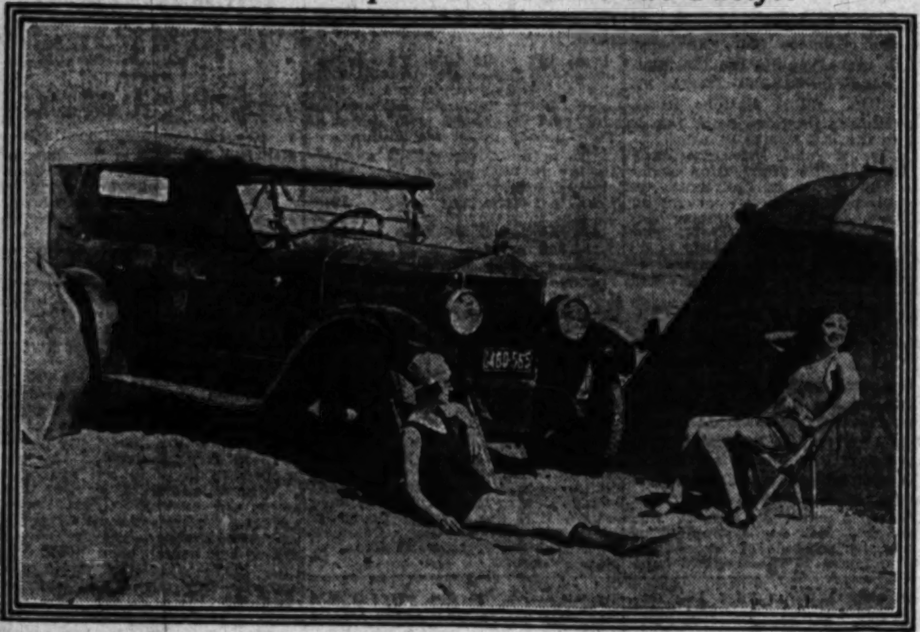
Q.: I have a Franklin which overheats and lacks power to an annoying degree. I had new rings installed at the end of 27,000 miles, but they have not helped much. It is too sluggish in traffic. Can anything be done to increase the power and getaway? M. J. F., Echo street.

A.: There is little that can be done in your case. Of course, you could have the cylinders reground, new pistons and rings fitted, new valves and reamed guides put in, but even so I doubt if you would increase your power to the extent you desire. The distance your car has traveled is not great and the engine should run as good as new if properly overhauled, but I am sure your heart is set on a more highly powered car. If so it will not pay you to put much money into the car you now have.

Q.: Which is the best brand of cylinder oil on the market, also gasoline? Also what grade of oil is the best to use in my new Dodge? C. W. T., Glendale.

A.: The oil you mention in the grade known as "extra medium" is one of the best oils I have ever put through the laboratory and it is well adapted to the new Dodge car. So far as gasoline is concerned the different brands are all very much alike within the city limits of Los Angeles, as the quality is specified by ordinance. Personally I have my preference, which is founded upon the results of actual tests made under careful observation and controlled conditions. I would recommend each individual to make tests for himself.

Sunburn Headquarters Beside the Pacific



Wana Ricketts and Marcella Arnold flirting with the sun on a sandy stretch below Topanga Canyon, on the new Coast Highway. Downie Brothers' beach bags and a Moon touring car from the Don P. Smith company furnished comfort and enjoyment for this outing.

EQUIPMENT TELLS THE TALE

"Where shall we go over the week-end?"

That question in varying form is asked every week as many times as there are motor cars in Los Angeles and vicinity.

Don Smith, the Moon man, and Bob Downie, the tent man, collaborate on the reply that it all depends on how the askers are equipped.

They also collaborated last week on a demonstration of how completely delightful a week-end at the beach can be, providing the week-enders have a good, dependable car, and a handy kit of beach camping equipment.

The week-enders in this demonstration were Wana Ricketts of Fox studios; Marcella Arnold, popular Hollywood debutante; the man in the Moon; the tentmaker from Downie's, and Art Streib, the cameraman.

The stretch of beach selected lies between the Santa Monica Palisades and the mouth of Topanga Canyon. A year ago when the new Coast Boulevard was paved only as far as Topanga, this beach was barren. Today it is thickly decorated with quaint beach bungalows.

Just above the bridge where Inceville stood before flames razed it, a hard stretch of ground runs out toward the water. Here the Moon was headed for the breakers until the front wheels were well-mushed down in the sand.

The tentmaker then got out his handy Downie beach bag, which contained a sportsman's tent with umbrella top and khaki sides, two large umbrellas with spiked handles, two folding stools, an easy folding chair and an adjustable beach back. The tent was quickly assembled despite the whipping of a brisk breeze and camp was made snug and comfortable.

Factory Has No Breadline on the Staff

"Since the introduction of the new 1925 Cleveland six featuring the 'one shot' automatic chassis lubrication system and the mileage motor, an entirely new 'L' head power plant, the Cleveland factory has been obliged to work overtime in an endeavor to keep up with the constant stream of orders for new cars," state officials of the W. P. Herbert Company, local Cleveland distributors.

"This increased production of the 1925 Cleveland six is reflected in our sales of the 1925 Cleveland here in Los Angeles and throughout Southern California. Since the announcement made on June 15, our establishment has been the scene of constant interest on the part of the motoring public to see and drive this new Cleveland creation, with the result that sales of the new automobile have been tremendous and bid fair to steadily increase during the months to come.

"Advice from the Cleveland factory is to the effect that production has been increased approximately 50 per cent within the last few days. Closed models continue to hold their popularity with the buying public, but the new and attractive open models of the Cleveland line are winning many admirers if present orders are any indication."

A NATION'S INSTITUTION PLEDGED TO THE NATION'S SERVICE

There is a relationship between the American public and the Ford organization far closer than any that has grown up previously between a people and an industry.

Millions throughout the country take a proprietary interest and pride in the achievement of this institution. And this feeling is cherished by the Ford Motor Company as its most priceless asset.

It is the easily traceable result of the broad idea of service on which the Ford Motor Company has consistently builded. Concerned with the welfare of the masses of men, fostered by their good will, and pledged to greater effort in their behalf, it has entered into a sphere of wide influence and usefulness that imposes heavy responsibilities.

One purpose alone has led the Ford organization to the acquisition and control of timber lands, coal and iron mines, transportation routes and distributing channels; to the building of giant factories, mills, foundries, furnaces, warehouses, docks and power plants.

That purpose is to insure, not only for the present but for years to come, that more and more people may benefit in greater prosperity, happiness and leisure through low-cost transportation.

OIL ON MOUNTAIN ROAD LAYS DUST

Experts Find it Cheaper Than Sprinkling

Big Improvement Noted in Mountain Home District

Fund of $1000, Raised by Subscription, Does It

REDLANDS, July 19.—The greatest improvement that has been made in any of the main traveled roads into the San Bernardino Mountains since the Mill Creek road was paved from the mouth of the canyon to the control, has been made this summer on a part of that road in the Mountain Home Canyon district.

Early in the year there was a report made that the dust was bad and Supervisor George S. Biggin made an investigation. He found that the worst places were the turns where the automobile tires scooped out the dirt and made the dust bad. He reported this and a number of public-spirited citizens joined in raising a fund of about $1000 to do some oiling.

This money has been expended well, so wisely that the dust has been largely eliminated from the road. The cost was only a small percentage of what it would have cost to sprinkle the road as was first planned.

The oil was placed on all the turns and other places where the dust was bad with the result that the trip through the control, which many people dreaded because of the dust, has been most comfortable all the year. The rains have come at most opportune times to keep the remainder of the road in good shape and the dust problem has been the least of the troubles on that road this year.

The road has never been traveled as heavily as so far this season and there is no indication that there will be any let-up in the heavy travel.

MAINTENANCE IS A LEADING POINT

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

DETROIT (Mich.) July 15.—That no automobile is ever out of the makers' hands until it is off the dealers' floor; and that the maker who would stay in business must follow each car he builds and see that it is serviced as long as it is in use, are contentions of B. F. Everitt, president and general manager, Rickenbacker Motor Company.

"The old theory that it is in the interest of the maker to have his product wear out and be scrapped in the shortest possible time has been thoroughly discredited," says Mr. Everitt.

"It isn't a question whether a man can afford to buy a certain car—but can he afford to maintain it?

"Look them over and you will see that the makers who have come right along and registered the greatest successes, have been those few who, from the first, realized that long life and low upkeep sold more cars than all the glib-tongued salesmen."

"From the first we have kept in mind, even more than sales of new cars, the idea that our product must maintain a high resale value.

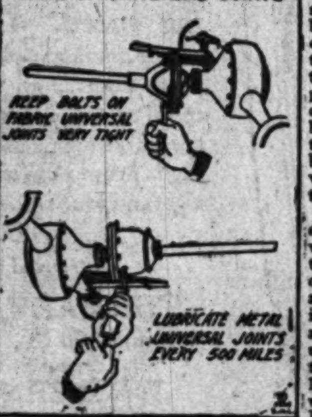
Noises in Universal Joints Usually the Result of Lack of Lubrication

The other day an owner brought his car into the service station and complained bitterly about a clattering jolt his car had developed when the clutch was let in, and noisy uneven running at low speeds. I got into the car and drove a few yards then asked the owner, "How long is it since you greased the Universal joints?" He turned to me, "Universal Joints, what are they." This is not an unusual answer to this question for thousands of owners never know there is such a thing as a universal joint on their car until it is brought to their attention in the manner described above.

This ignorance, however, will cost you money in repair bills. If these joints are lubricated about every 500 or 600 miles they will not require to be touched until the engine requires overhauling. Neglect them and before you have driven 5,000 miles they may have to be replaced. Few owners of an automobile believe it, but it is a fact that if you would attend to the lubrication of the various moving parts at REGULAR intervals, they could easily reduce their repair bills from 50% to 60%. It is neglect to give a car regular attention that provides most of the work for the repair shops.

Few owners enjoy getting on their backs and crawling under the car, and that is what is generally necessary when you wish to attend to the Universal Joints. Most owners lubricate all parts that are easily accessible, but where parts are difficult or awkward to get at, they are tempted to say—I think I will do that tomorrow, and and as you know, tomorrow never comes.

CARE OF UNIVERSAL JOINTS



KEEP BOLTS ON FABRIC UNIVERSAL JOINTS VERY TIGHT
LUBRICATE METAL UNIVERSAL JOINTS EVERY 500 MILES

Now where are the Universal Joints? There are generally two of them, one at either end of the shaft which connects the gear box to the back axle. They are of two types, the metal type and the fabric or leather type. With the fabric type there is no noise possible, but this joint requires careful watching to see that the bolts holding the fabric rings to the shaft are kept tight. If these become loose, trouble quickly develops and the fabric rings have to be replaced.

If you notice a distinct jar, jolt or click, or as if a connection were loose every time you let in the clutch, or if when you are driving slowly the car runs with a jerky motion, yet the engine is firing regularly, you can be almost certain you have a worn universal joint. To find out if this is so, move gear lever to 1st speed, jack up one of the rear wheels and move it to and fro. If the joints are worn badly you will hear a click coming from them every time you move the wheel. Of course, there is always a certain amount of play between the teeth in the crown wheel and drive shaft pinion, but this will not allow the wheel to move more than 2 inches either way. If the movement is more than this, either the universals are worn or there is too much play between crown wheel and pinion. The play between these two gears can be taken up by an adjustment provided for this purpose, but the adjusting should always be done by a good mechanic. If the gears are meshed too deep, a loud hum will come from the back side, while if they are not meshed deeply enough, there will be a lot of backlash and noise.

If you drive your car with worn universals, it puts a severe strain on every part of the transmission every time you let in the clutch. The way to avoid all trouble of this kind, is to take your grease gun about every 500 miles and crawl underneath the chassis and force some light cup grease into each universal joint, at the same time testing the bolts holding the joints to the shaft to see that they are tight. If you do this, you will find that your car will run smoother and better and that replacements will rarely be necessary until the car has been driven 20,000 miles or over.

Enlarge and Alter Brown Motor Home

Enlargements and alterations to care for Durant service work occupied the attention of the Walter M. Brown organization last week. In order to give the necessary room at the Washington and Figueroa street headquarters, the work of preparing new cars was transferred to the East Seventh street branch, and the space thus released was turned over to Durant service. The stock room was practically doubled in size to care for thousands of dollars worth of Durant parts just received from the factory.

Ed Blodgett, head of the factory service department, came from the Durant plant at Oakland to help organize the local service. No expense will be spared to make it as completely efficient as possible, according to Walter Brown.

"We were delighted with the response to the announcement last week that he had taken over the Durant distributorship," said Brown. "Scores of Durant owners came in to get acquainted with our organization and sales of the new model Durants were more than satisfactory.

"We are anxious, however, to meet all of the Durant owners in Los Angeles and vicinity. Most of them we know already, but we are anxious to get in touch with them all. Within a very short time we will have completed our service arrangements to care for Durant owners throughout Los Angeles and vicinity.

"Our new model Durant demonstrators have been kept busy all week, showing the new car to prospective buyers, and the performance of the new motor on various well-known test hills in Los Angeles has borne out every claim that the factory has made for its ability."

ADD TO SERVICE STATIONS

Splendid business is experienced by the Gilmore Oil Company, which makes public the fact that it has increased the number of independent filling stations which sell Gilmore products from 140 to 257 in the last twelve months.

"After a most intensive study of the gasoline distributing situation in Southern California, we formulated the policy of selling Gilmore gasoline and motor oils through independent service stations instead of building and operating our own stations," says Clarence Besemeyer, secretary and treasurer of the Gilmore Oil Company.

"At the same time we adopted policies which were protective to the independent owner and encouraged better business methods on the part of those who invested their money in service stations.

"In spite of rumors of a slowing up in business we have experienced a very gratifying sales volume, increasing our sales in June of 1924 to 1,370,000 gallons of gasoline. In July of 1923 we sold 1,000,000 gallons. A 37 per cent increase means that the public approves of Gilmore products."

DEEDS GROVE TO THE STATE

The deed to 118 acres of giant redwoods has just been sent by the Save the Redwoods League to State Forester M. B. Pratt. This grove, formerly known as "Stockel Flats" which is located on the California State Highway about fifty miles south of Eureka, was purchased with funds supplied by a wealthy resident of Massachusetts and cost in the neighborhood of $25,000. A provision in the deed is that it be held perpetually for park purposes for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the State of California. This is one of a number of tracts on the California State Highway for the preservation of which the Save the Redwoods League is working. The deed was sent to the Forestry Board by the chairman of the League's Board of Directors, J. D. Grant of San Francisco.

Popularity of Closed Models Brings Paradox

"A paradox in the automobile industry," declare officials of the W. P. Herbert Company, local Chandler distributors, "is the fact that the greatly increased popularity of the closed car has brought about marked improvements in the open models. However, this condition can be easily explained.

"In the days when closed cars were the exception and open cars the rule, the open models were designed as all-purpose cars. They were intended for use the year round, throughout all seasons, for city and for country use in both business and pleasure.

"Today, with the development of the closed car to its great popularity, so great, in fact, that closed cars form about 50 per cent of the total production, motor-car designers are free to develop the open models to meet special purposes.

"The Chandler Motor Car Company, for example, now manufactures three different types of sedans to meet the requirements of closed-car users. And in addition they have developed four open models—two touring and two sport models."

There are obvious benefits to the purchaser in Dodge Brothers policy of making constant, gradual refinements in their product instead of changing from one design to another year after year.

Chief among these is the fact that the car may be operated throughout the full limit of its usefulness without the extra depreciation loss which results from a rapid succession of radically different models.

Science Wins

—citrus pests completely conquered

The battle against scale and other citrus pests has been a discouraging one. Results, particularly of late, have been very unsatisfactory. Scale seems to have become more and more resistant to the prevailing methods of control. Even under the most favorable conditions the percentage of kill is often very low. And in the effort to control the pest much damage has been done to fruit and foliage. These are facts well known to every grower.

During the past five years, while this battle against citrus pest has waged at its height, Mr. Wm. H. Volck, head of our Research Department, has been working night and day in the laboratory and in the field to perfect a means of control that would really control, and which could be used with safety.

These years of intensive effort have resulted in complete success. In VOLCK, offered commercially for the first time last year, the citrus industry has a sure, safe, absolutely dependable means of pest control—proven by extensive use last season with uniformly good results.

At La Habra, Rivera, Villa Park, Tustin, Fullerton, San Ysidro, Glendora, Charter Oak, Covina, Carpinteria, Walnut, Anaheim, Azusa, San Dimas, Santa Paula, Corona, Riverside, Redlands, and in the Porterville section in Santa Barbara county, and in practically all citrus sections in the State, VOLCK has been given a thorough try-out and enthusiastic reports have come from every section. We will gladly furnish you the names of growers who have used VOLCK in any of these sections so that you may call on them or write to them direct.

Moreover, VOLCK is not only sure but safe. It not only gives a high percentage of kill, but is safe to use at any and all times under any and all conditions. It does not injure either fruit or foliage—no burning, pitting, red spider, wind damage, or injury of any kind. Also, one application kills all varieties of pests. Once over your trees with VOLCK and you are through for the year.

Now is the time to arrange for a clean-up of your trees. Treat them with VOLCK this season and watch the results. If you do not own a good spraying outfit, we can recommend a reliable commercial sprayer who will do good work.

The Garden Beautiful in Southern California

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON

EASTERN florists and nurserymen deal in tub or pot plants of Ponderosa lemons, Otaheite oranges and other citrous plants. In California trees of this tribe are so common that we scarcely consider them as ornamentals. Yet nothing else so strongly appeals to our first-time visitors. They wish to first pick an orange and then see a large palm. Bearing all this in mind, it would seem that we overlook what should be a marked characteristic of our ornamental grounds. We do grow a few citrous plants of flower value such as Choisya ternata but we should employ plants of the genus citrus, the more ornamental of our oranges, for example. Then every front yard may contain one or more trees of the better and budded class of avocados, a group or two of guava bushes, feijoas, carissas, and other standard evergreen fruit shrubs of acknowledged value as ornamentals. As we live in California, why not have our gardens Californian in tone and color? Why in such a climate, should we plant cone-bearing trees or deciduous trees, both classes smacking of ice and snow and being in general effect inhospitable rather than inviting? Let us put on, figuratively at least, a friendly, welcoming front as though we fully realized and appreciated that we live in the land of golden opportunities and that we wish the world to know it and also to share our pleasures.

Swat the Ant

In the issue of June 28, under the title, "Swat the Ant." appeared an article on distillate treatment of ant nests. It was sent in by a reader, whose name was attached but the printer left off the name in setting it up. The Garden Beautiful Editor knows nothing of the distillate treatment and does not recommend the use of distillate in gardens. The idea presented, or rather it was intended to present it, entirely as the idea of another.

Plant More Hibiscus

Where frosts are not severe we cannot grow any flowering shrub with greater attractions than the Chinese hibiscus. No one will deny their claims to beauty, for the flowers are large and showy, yet not coarse, and the colors are superb. The plants are easily grown, of good foliage and habit, clean and attractive in color. They are particular as to soil or general condition. But frosts injure them and unless the district is considered fairly free from chilly Jack, it is better not to plant hibiscus.

A Volsteadian Stimulant

That ether, injected into the roots of backward or unthrifty plants, will bring about a measurable improvement or revival in a short time has been demonstrated in experiments conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture. Announcement was recently made by the department that a bulletin covering observations made along this line, and prepared by O. D. Lumsden of the Federal Horticultural Board, would soon be issued. William Hopple, 2026 Sacramento street, Los Angeles, reports some interesting results in similar experimentation work conducted in his spare time. Rose bushes especially, he says, can be made to thrive by the smallest applications of ether. Mr. Hopple says he adds a grain of potassium permanganate to one ounce of ether and ordinarily injects only two or three drops of the mixture into the plant. He punches a hole in the main root with an awl and merely drops in the revivifying fluid, covering the hole over with wax and replacing the earth. Improvement, he says, will be noted in about two days. He sometimes makes two or three other injections at intervals of two or three weeks, he declares. He urges those wishing to try the experiment to be careful about having fire around the ether, as the fluid is extremely inflammable.

New Chinese Fir

Explorations during 1923 in the high mountains of Yunnan, China, by the United States Department of Agriculture, have brought to light a large balsam fir (Abies forrestii,) together with several other as yet unnamed large forms of what experts of the United States Forest Service feel may well be fir, useful in the southeastern forest region of the United States. Small supplies of the seed of Abies forrestii and of the unnamed firs have been obtained by the Forest Service and will be tried out at the Appalachian Forest Experiment Station and at Letchworth Park Nursery, N. Y. The wood of these trees, if successful here, should be valuable for pulp, as the balsam fir of the eastern United States is highly prized for this purpose.

A wall of bloom around a Pasadena residence.

Bead Seeds

Visitors to bead stores have noticed strings of beads composed of brilliant red seeds with black spots on them. These are seeds of Abrus precatorius, the "Crab's-eye Vine or Weather Vine. This plant is sparingly grown in Southern California and nearly all the seeds come from Hawaii. Other and closely similar seeds from Hawaii are those of Rhyncosia phaseoloides, a climbing bean native to the American tropics. These seeds are also scarlet with a black spot on each.

Sophora secundiflora, native to Texas, New Mexico and Arizona, furnishes a larger red seed but equally attractive. Adnanthera pavonia, the red sandalwood tree of Asia has lens-shaped scarlet seeds, known as Circassian beads. This tree may be grown in California. Ornosia momsperma is the necklace tree of the tropics and bears a large scarlet seed with a large angular patch of black. All these are used for rosaries, necklaces etc., by natives of tropical countries.

Country Roads

Every farmer should insist on having good neighborhood and market roads. Neighbors should feel an interest in one another. All will feel in a better, more congenial spirit if they can unite in a collective effort to properly plant their highways. Roads through the neighborhood and to the market should be made the very best the country can afford. By doing so, the farmer may be brought nearer to his neighbor's house, to his postoffice and to market, and thus in closer contact and communication with the rest of the world, but none should expect to have such roads nicely shaded except he does his level best to bring it about.

River-side beauty

The State of Maine has a law entitled: "An act to preserve trees abutting public highways and other places," which gives authority to cities and towns to procure, through regular condemnation proceedings, strips of land not exceeding five rods in width which are situated along highways and public waterways. This enactment furnishes a glorious opportunity to park streets and river banks, and would prove a great blessing to every State in the Union. Did we have such a law in California we could park both sides of the Los Angeles River throughout the city and transform what is now an eyesore and a reproach into a thing of unquestioned beauty.

Poultry Manure

On the farm the housewife is generally boss of the garden, also of the poultry yard. Under these conditions it should prove an easy matter to secure the poultry manure for the garden. It is worth three times as much per pound as that from the larger farm animals and is therefore worthy of care. Let it dry and keep it dry until used. It is rich in nitrogen and poor in phosphorous. It is also in a very concentrated form and if diluted and reinforced a little, becomes ideal for garden use. An acknowledged authority advises adding to every ten pounds of the manure ten pounds of other matter, four pounds of which should be acid phosphate. The remaining six pounds should be sawdust or some other dry material. This gives a good balance of the three most necessary elements. Do not mix lime with it at any time.

In money value the head lettuce crop ranks third in the list of California vegetables.

Trapnesting for Eggs of Standard Size

VIEWS OF AN ANCONA CHAMPION. By ROBERT T. LYANS

Anconas on the Rose Lawn Ancona Ranch, San Gabriel.

Six-weeks-old chicks, Broadmoor White Leghorn Pullet Farm, Van Nuys.

IN THE quest for high egg production many poultrymen are prone to overlook one very important factor, namely standard size of egg. It almost goes without saying that the heavy laying hen, as far as actual number of eggs produced is concerned, is worth very little if her eggs will not grade up as extras. Such is the opinion of W. L. Tabb, who during the last three years has bred up a very creditable flock of 2000 White Leghorns in the Rosemead section lying between San Gabriel and El Monte. Heavy production of standard weight eggs is only to be obtained by the consistent use of the trapnest, says Mr. Tabb, and following out such belief, he has installed 600 trapnests, enough for 3000 layers, the size of the flock which he eventually intends to carry.

The poultryman should have a type in his mind to go with egg production, and then with the aid of the trapnest, he can weed out all birds that do not lay a standard egg. By such a method of reasoning, Mr. Tabb has been compelled to eliminate many hens that some poultrymen might allow to remain in the flock, but he believes that the best are none too good, and is willing to take more time in accumulating the required number of desirable hens rather than to fill his houses up in short order with less desirable birds.

While he has been at considerable expense in securing male birds to head up many of his pens, Mr. Tabb is convinced that he will be rewarded by an increased production of his flock. By constant culling out of the ones that do not lay a standard-sized egg, he is confident that he will eventually have a flock of heavy layers of extra eggs. Such a plan should well merit the attention of other poultrymen who are now sending a large number of pullet and pewee eggs to the market, and consequently receiving a less price for their product.

Club Shows Good Production

A meeting of the East San Fernando Valley egg-production club was held recently at the Hansen Heights school. Each member of the club figured out his percentage production for the month of May. The average production for the club was 67.1 per cent. Charles Evans, Vinedale, had the highest production for the month, 89.9 per cent. His fourteen birds for the 31 days laid 390 eggs. The twelve birds belonging to Weir Jones, Hansen Heights, are also doing good work. They laid 303 eggs during May. In order to study methods of feeding and handling, the club is following the practice of making occasional visits to commercial poultry farms.

Concerning Whitewash

According to a bulletin by E. J. Stirniman of the division of agricultural engineering, college of agriculture, Davis, a weather-proof whitewash for exterior application can be made of (1) 62 pounds (1 bushel) of quicklime; slake with 12 gallons of hot water. (2) Two pounds common table salt; 1 pound sulphate of zinc; dissolve in 2 gallons of boiling water. (3) Two gallons skim milk. Pour (2) into (1); then add the milk and mix thoroughly. The bulletin says "Alum added to a lime whitewash increases its adhesive quality. An ounce to the gallon is sufficient. Flour paste answers the same purpose, but a preservative, such as zinc, sulphate, should be added. Molasses renders the lime more soluble and causes it to more freely penetrate the wood or plaster. A pint of molasses to 5 gallons of whitewash is sufficient. Silicate of soda solution (about 25 degrees Baume) in the proportion of 1 to 10 of whitewash produces a fire-resistive cement. A pound of cheap bar soap dissolved in a gallon of boiling water and added to about five gallons of thich whitewash will impart a gloss like that of oil paint. The introduction of a small quantity of crude carbolic acid adds to the whitewash a certain value as a disinfectant."

Pins Faith on Anconas

F. M. Frost, owner of the Rose Lawn Ancona Ranch at East San Gabriel, is one Southern California poultryman who has gone quite extensively into the breeding of Anconas. His flock of speckled beauties now numbers 1000 and he says he intends to increase this number to 2000 birds, which, in his estimation, is about all one man can handle to advantage in a breeding establishment. Last fall Mr. Frost imported fifty hens from Canada, these birds having been trapnested previous to his buying them, and being said to carry yearly records of from 202 to 276 eggs per bird. From this small flock he hatched 2000 chicks, retaining 1000 of them for his own flock. In defense of the Ancona, Mr. Frost maintains that in addition to their being a very hardy fowl, a well bred flock of Anconas will lay more eggs on less feed than Leghorns, which he says makes for greater economy of production. He gives the daily ration of his hens as follows: One ounce each of grain, mash and greens, making a total of tree ounces of feed per hen per day, the mash containing only 3 1-2 per cent of fiber. In speaking of his plans for the future, Mr. Frost says he intends to pay more attention to the breeding end of the business, producing large numbers of baby chicks, his experience being that the commercial egg business does not pay so well. In his breeding operations Mr. Frost lays particular emphasis on high egg production as one of the factors for success. It costs no more to feed a 200-egg hen, he says, than to keep one that lays only 100 eggs in a year. "Why be satisfied with the low producer?" he asks.

The Demand for Pullets

To meet the demands which are constantly coming from some poultrymen for young stock with which to replenish their flocks, there have in recent years sprung up here and there what are known as pullet farms, where the poultryman can buy his layers instead of raising them. The troubles which generally accompany the poultryman during the hatching and brooding season are many and varied. By the elimination of this work, a poultryman can devote all his time to feeding and flock management.

The Broadmoor White Leghorn Pullet Farm, Van Nuys, was established to fill just such a need. In the two years that this modern plant has been in operation by the owner, Mrs. A. J. Schafer, a thriving business has been built up in the production of 10 and 12 weeks old pullets. Beginning in a small way with limited capital, Mrs. Schafer now has a plant at which are maintained at all times from 5000 to 10,000 chicks, ranging in age from 1 day to 12 weeks.

Each week a new lot of chicks replaces the ones sold off. The cockerels are segregated from the pullets at six weeks, and at eight weeks are started on laying mash, attaining a weight of one and one-fourth pounds and up at the age of 10 weeks, when they are sold on the market as broilers. Those sent to market during June sold at 25 cents per pound, bringing approximately 40 cents each, and making a fair profit for the owner.

The chicks are brooded in large airy houses which are bedded with deep sand on dirt floors. They are fed often and sparingly at first and grow at an astonishingly rapid rate. Mrs. Schafer has evidently made quite a study of baby chicks as the mortality is kept at a minimum and very few culls are to be found in her sanitary and well-ventilated houses.

In addition to the baby chick business, Mrs. Schafer also maintains a flock of 700 hens. All of the houses on the ranch are of the open-air half-monitor type, and with sand-covered floors. This type of house admits sunshine to all parts of the house. No dropping boards are used; the roosts are thrown back in the daytime and the houses are cleaned daily, leaving small chance of vermin finding a lodging-place. Many poultrymen are doing away with the dropping board in the poultry house, a practise which seems to grow in favor wherever it is tried out.

Young Poultrymen Win Medals

At a special assembly of boys at the Van Nuys Grammar School on June 26, the Van Nuys Chamber of Commerce medal for the winner of the agricultural club egg-production contest was awarded to Chester Alexander. The contest started March [illegible] and was conducted for a period of three months. Young Alexander had a flock of seventy-nine birds and they laid 3651 eggs. His total expenses were $179.20; his receipts, $196.15, his project permitting him to make a labor income of $26.25. The second place medal went to Dwight Landon. The other members in the club competing were Ole Orlansky, George Lavec, Morris Goostein, Albert Serjanian, Glenn Gardner and Robert Inglis. The contest was supervised by J. J. Lynch, in co-operation with the Agricultural Extension Service.

The Van Nuys Chamber of Commerce medals offered to winners of the Mission Acres egg-production club went to Harold Merriman and Amelio Piani, as winners of first and second awards, respectively. The merits of club work were discussed by R. L. Stewart, agricultural department, Van Nuys High School, and the medals were presented by K. W. Koch, Los Angeles County Club Leader. The contest started March 18 and closed June 18. The 389 birds in competition laid 1341 dozen eggs. The total expenses were $738.45; total receipts, $818.92, a labor income of 30 cents per bird being earned for the three months' period. The members beside the two winners completing their projects were, Frederick Lienhard, Austin Daly, Albert Schultz, Albert Icardo, and John Yurosek.

War Declared on Thieves

HEMET.—Visiting hen roosts without invitation seems to be a practice of such irresistible appeal to some persons hereabouts that law-abiding people have put their heads together in order to find a means of preventing these depredations and also of capturing the guilty ones. It has long since been agreed that there is a band of chicken thieves who operate systematically and who are as well organized as the automobile thieves, for instance. This valley had unpleasant experiences along this line a few years ago, and, although some of the gang were caught and jailed, the thievery is again going on.

Now a large award has been offered for the capture of chicken thieves. "One thousand dollars reward" placards are being placed in conspicuous points, describing terms on which awards for the apprehension of the marauders will be made. There are some ranchers, however, who declare their firm belief in the old-fashioned shotgun method and who declare themselves ready to protect their property in an old-fashioned and thoroughly reliable manner.

The Water Situation

CALIFORNIA agriculture is experiencing this season one of the worst drouth periods ever known. And, unlike most such periods, that of this year is being experienced from one end of the State to the other. From all parts of California reports are coming in that streams are low, or dry. Quite large creeks and rivers, which have always been considered permanent streams, are flowing but little water today. Springs which have never before been known to be dry have entirely ceased functioning. Irrigation ditches and canals in some parts of the State have had no water in them for weeks.

The effects of the drouth are felt most in those districts that are dependent upon water supply from gravity flow or from stored water. Those farmers who have access to well water are much better off. It seems that those underground water supplies that have not become depleted are not showing the deficiency that might have been anticipated. It generally takes some years for the effect of drouth to become apparent in the pumping areas, as water moves very slowly in soils. The underground sources that were low to start with, of course, are experiencing a continued lowering of the water table. The excessive demands for irrigation water this year over a long period of time will be instrumental in reducing this water storage rapidly.

The effect of the drouth on field crops is serious. Grain and hay yields generally in the State have been poor. In some sections these crops have made such little growth that they have not been harvested, being left to pasture for sheep and cattle. Most of the field crops, in fact, will be light, especially in those areas that are dependent upon water from gravity supply.

The districts irrigated from wells will not feel the water shortage so much, and crops in many such areas will be practically normal. This, however, is dependent upon the power available for pumping purposes, the shortage of water throughout the State having naturally resulted in the cutting down of power resources.

Orchardists who have an inadequate amount of irrigation water this year are forced to the most careful use of the existing supply. The present drouth, following, as it does, a year of inadequate moisture, finds soils dry to an alarming depth in many areas. This is bound to work injury to the trees, as it dries out the roots, resulting in a general weakening. Horticultural experts emphasize the necessity of supplying moisture so as to provide the right environmental conditions for root development and maintenance, and this must be done with an intelligent understanding of existing conditions.

In the face of such critical conditions, the public as a whole should realise that no feasible precautions and regulations making for added security to California agriculture are too drastic. Continued destruction of watersheds by forest and brush fires would leave the State in a truly precarious condition, as there is no telling what the coming fall and winter may or may not bring in the way of rainfall and snow. Better that all campers be temporarily kept out of the dry-as-tinder danger zones than that the few reckless idiots that start fires be given an opportunity to do their hideous work. If it is necessary to ration water and power to make both hold out, everyone affected should comply with the rules without complaint. And every constructive plan for water storage and development against future trouble should have general and whole-hearted support.

BOOM SURVIVED, LESSON LEARNED, VINEYARDISTS OPTIMISTIC AGAIN

By GEORGE LAW

THESE early years of the prohibition experiment are witnessing the emergence of California's first and, in point of acreage, greatest fruit industry, formerly dependent upon the commercial manufacture of wines, with new credentials, new faith, greater production, and hearty optimism. The tremendous grape industry, aggregating, according to statistics, over 600,000 acres, and growing healthily, has slipped out of bondage to the wineries, faced prohibition out of countenance, and emerged from threatened disruption and ruination stronger than ever before.

That part of the industry which formerly supplied the wineries, it is interesting to note, is the greatest gainer; but as all California grapes belong to the high-toned European family of Vitis vinifera, carefully bred from the days of Bacchus to the present for qualities most prized by man, grapes raised in California for raisin and table purposes enjoy the advantage of the new outlet also.

The important new factor in the industry is the nation-wide demand for juice grapes. This has kept up remarkably well since it started five years ago. There has been no oversupply, unless possibly of eastern juice grapes. Marketing difficulties have resulted from shortages of cars, lack of attention to grade and quality of fruit, and unorganized distribution. All these are factors within the control of the grape growers; and they are being smoothed out.

It is true that there is a precarious plank in the juice-grape basis. That is the question of consistency with the Eighteenth Amendment. But so long as the consumers of juice grapes keep, to all appearances at least, within the regulations of the law, interference apparently wil' not occur. Moreover, the business has been going on for five years and therefore is not likely to be halted now.

California's grape industry is a tremendous economic fact, a mighty asset, of national as well as State importance. It must be permitted to live and to grow upon some basis or other; and the marketing of wine grapes for the making of fruit juice in the home is pretty sure to continue.

Modification of the Prohibition Act to provide an outlet through the reinstating of light wines would doubtless affect it.

The annual vintage of California is worth nearly $50,000,000, recent estimates show. In times such as the present, when all sorts of foodstuffs and commodities produced and manufactured in other parts of our country are badly in need of more buyers, the purchasing power of that amount of money in the hands of Californians, who have always been good customers for the East, is an important item in a national sense. The East will be called on to absorb from 50,000 to 60,000 carloads of grapes which California is now beginning to ship; and as a contribution to general prosperity, it is to be hoped the government will help to facilitate the absorption of those grapes by whatever means are within its power. Fortunately, the people far and near appreciate California grapes, whether for eating, for the grape-cure as practiced in Europe, or for "home brewing."

PROHIBITION DID IT

Very few carloads of wine grapes were shipped out of California previous to 1918. The business in table grapes was, of course, considerable, though the number of carloads of all kinds of fresh grapes shipped out of California in the years immediately preceding prohibition did not exceed 16,000.

The passage of the Eighteenth Amendment, followed by the enforcement act, appeared at first to deal a knockout to the growers of wine grapes. From the harvest of 1917 to that of 1919, the air was surcharged with uncertainty. Some of the growers began to make their vineyards over into orchards of tree-fruits and into walnut groves.

Then, experimenters in home wine-making in all parts of the United States began to wonder if California wine grapes could not be procured. The commission houses felt sure that they could, and orders began to find their way to the grape districts. The autumn of 1919 was a time of revelation, when the vineyardists began to find out that instead of having no market at all, they had the American nation to sell to. And then when the business began to flow in they discovered, to their almost frantic delight, that instead of getting $15 per ton for their grapes, as they had from the wineries, there was practically no limit to the prices they could command.

Thus the grape boom was launched. Since 1919, people have been planting grapes everywhere. The boom has swept beyond the borders of California into Nevada and Arizona, and even to the valley of the Rio Grande in New Mexico and Texas. But the territory within which Vitis vinifera thrive to perfection is quite limited.

The carloads rose by tens of thousands, reaching to more than 40,000 in 1922 and more than 50,000 in 1923. The price also rose, reaching its plus tide in 1922 at $175 per ton for certain kinds of grapes. The growers that year took in $100 per ton on the average, and there were not enough cars in which to ship out the grapes.

THEN THE SLUMP

Overeagerness for profits and the car shortage in 1922 resulted in the shipping of grapes in box cars, even cattle cars, with the disastrous result that the grapes spoiled on the way, the purchasers were dissatisfied and the prices tumbled down.

Against such odds the grape season opened a year ago. To make matters worse, the producers of early table grapes began to ship the fruit too green. The people in the East did not like sour grapes any better than spoiled grapes.

In fact, the 1923 grape deal was a near-disaster to the growers. Such was the declaration of N. D. Hopper, president of the Pacific Fruit Exchange, who visited New York toward the close of the season. Mr. Hopper added: "The crop was late and on account of mildew and other things that went to make up the trouble, the quality was poor. Prices started out low and never recovered. Many of the growers are discouraged. One of the bankers who has a great deal of money out among grape growers told me that of the vineyardists, who in other years had been able to liquidate their loans for expenses at 100 per cent, most will be able to pay only about 25 per cent this year."

The hard experience of 1923 was really fortunate in that it stopped the grape boom and brought the growers to a business-like consideration of ways and means to place their industry upon a stable basis.

QUALITY ESSENTIAL

The fact has been brought home to the grape growers that the maintenance of certain high standards of quality is as essential to the success of their deal as to any of the other California fruit industries. Quality is affected by two considerations: the actual condition of the fruit, and the conditions under which it is shipped. Box and cattle cars for shipping cattle are not likely to be in vogue this year. Even ventilator cars are risky. Fortunately, the outlook promises enough refrigerator cars to move the crop as it ripens, provided the cars are returned within a reasonable time.

Last year an attempt was made to promote better quality by the adoption of standards under the California commercial

OVER-SUPPLY OF FARM LABOR CALIFORNIA'S NEWEST PROBLEM

THIS seen today in the farm labor market, is seen today in the farm labor mar- according to reports gathered by R. L. Adams, Professor of Farm Management in the University of California College of Agriculture. Prof. Adams lately attended a conference of social workers at Long Beach, before which he was invited to give expert opinion on the present situation as affecting migratory and seasonal farm labor. His conclusions point emphatically to a harvest season only too readily handled by the normal labor supply. His hearers drew the inference that it would be economically and socially unwise to encourage an influx of harvest labor from outside the State, or of the inexperienced from the cities.

Prof. Adams gave some estimates of labor requirements in different counties as follows:

Alameda—Labor demand 75 to 80 per cent normal, crops below normal and retrenchment policy of manufacturers resulting in making harvest labor abundant. Butte—Needs less than normal labor and supply ample, with lower wages, $3 to $3.25 per day, without found. Fresno—Present supply more than sufficient, although possibly some difficulty at September-October peak of raisin harvest. Imperial—A surplus of men and something of an unemployment problem developing. Kings—Need less; supply abundant. Los Angeles—Demand light, with plenty of help on hand for below-normal deciduous crops. Napa—Crops light, prices low; more labor than can be placed. Orange—Supply greater than demand. Placer—Needs normal; wages 30 to 35 cents an hour. Riverside—Demand normal; supply ample. Santa Barbara—Crop outlook normal; practically no problem as to labor supply. Santa Clara—Labor demand normal; probably less than normal need of outside migratory help at peak of season. Santa Cruz—Needs normal; supply ample. Solano—Ample labor; $2.50 a day, without found, indicated as standard wage for ordinary run of labor. Sonoma—Demand normal; some increase for hop season, some decrease in other harvests. Ventura—Crops below normal; labor ample, with indications of coming distress from unemployment.

Prof. Adams is known as an authority on labor as a factor in agriculture. During the World War he served as State Farm Labor Agent in behalf of the State Council of Defense and the United States Department of Agriculture. He regards the labor factor, both economically and socially, as making perhaps the most baffling and pressing of California's agricultural problems. He points out the aggravation of the problem due to the change from extensive crops calling for little hand labor to intensive crops requiring great quantities of hand labor and for which thus far no machine substitutes have been devised. One man-day per acre per year, he says, will produce one ton of grain hay or a half-ton of threshed barley. A ton of raisins per acre requires thirteen times as many day's labor of one man, or "man-days." Six man-days per acre per year will produce five tons of alfalfa hay, or 2500 pounds of threshed rice; twenty-two to thirty-two man-days are required by each acre of certain

BIG MELON ACREAGE BEING HARVESTED

DELANO.—The first carload of ripe watermelons to be shipped from Delano this year was consigned to Seattle through the Leahy-Hanna Company and was from the Walter Wallace ranch. The melons, grown under the supervision of Norman P. Schultz, were of the Florida Favorite variety. Melon acreage on the Wallace fruit farm consists of forty acres of watermelons and forty acres of cantaloupes. A carload of cantaloupes was recently shipped from this place. Some 800 lugs of Santa Rosa plums were also recently trucked from the Wallace ranch to the Los Angeles market and brought top prices.

Melon shipping from Delano is now in earnest, fields having developed fruit rapidly with the warm weather. Eighty acres of watermelons and cantaloupes on the Bromley ranch will contribute heavily to [illegible] total of shipments. Melons from twenty-five acres on the Frank Schlitz ranch, north of town, are going by truck to Fresno. Musick and Shields are shipping heavily and this firm has also done well with cucumbers, which find sale in the oil fields of Kern county and in San Francisco. Rale Lange is getting good returns from cucumbers in Bakersfield, Tulare and other near-by towns.

record crops of valencia oranges. Then came the burning down in the Rialto hotel, owned by Mr. Buxton, and the distribution of the redwood ashes from the fire over the seven-acre grove as fertilizer. After that no crops of account came for a number of years and, seeking the cause, experts decided that the redwood ashes had poisoned the soil and that while ultimate recovery was probable, yet with the very best of fertilization and care, it would take long years to restore the grove. The grove after a lapse of ten to fifteen years has been restored to its record crop bearing and its history has taught Rialto growers to keep redwood ashes off their orange groves.

VALENCIAS STILL MOVING

LINDSAY.—Packing of Valencias is still in progress in the orange belt of Tulare county, and, in opinion of Frank R. Brann, County Horticultural Commissioner, will continue until about the middle of the summer, as no haste is needed in shipping the last straggling ends of fruit. About 40 cars will probably go to eastern markets, it is believed. Shipments this year have been considerably lighter than for several seasons because of the frost damage in the winter. The fruit is undamaged by allowing it to remain on the trees and later in the season picking expense is decreased.

TESTING POSTPONED

SAN BERNARDINO.—As a safeguard against possible further outbreaks of the foot-and-mouth disease, no cow-testing will be given in San Bernardino county until January 1. Dr. John R. Mohler, chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Washington, D. C. recently conferred with Farm Bureau officials and gave it as his opinion that it would be highly inadvisable to test cows at this time. Dr. Mohler stated that although the epidemic is undoubtedly on the wane, every precaution should be taken to prevent further outbreaks, and that cow-testing might prove a means of spreading the disease germs.

HAY FARMERS PROFIT

MCFARLAND.—Hay farmers of this district are reaping the results of the excessive dry year and short hay crop in the rest of the State. With an ample underground water supply, they are harvesting a bumper crop and selling at excellent prices. Alfalfa is now selling for $15 in the field in many cases and has brought as high as $19 baled. Barley has reched top price of $23, with many farmers holding out for $35. Predictions are to the effect that alfalfa prices will exceed $20 per ton before the month is out and these seem well founded because dairymen who are buying hay realize the situation ahead and are getting in a supply, at as low a price as possible, but getting it nevertheless, regardless of price.

"AIR IN THE SOIL"

The following letter, self-explanatory, has just been received by The Times:

Editor Farm and Tractor Magazine:

It has come to my attention that an article of mine appearing in a recent issue of the Farm and Tractor Magazine, on "The Absorption of Food by Plants," has been quoted as evidence substantiating claims made for a device designed, according to those handling it, to pump compressed air into the soil through a pipe driven into the ground at each tree in a orchard. A careful reading of the article in question will show that the statement I made as to possible lack of air in the soil applied to only two types of soil, one, an impercious or heavy, adobe soil, the other, a water-logged soil. It will be obvious that it would be impossible to "blow" air into either one of these two types of soil by any such method. A sub-soiler in the one case and drainage in the other would, in my opinion, be the only practical remedies to recommend for the types of soil I referred to.—[H. R. grade. The standards were not enforced and even mildewed grapes could be shipped provided they were labeled "For Manufacturing Purposes." Moreover, according to G. H. Hecke, director State Department of Agriculture, less than 15 per cent of last year's crop of juice grapes measured up to the standards, so that the grade was of little value.

Last April, upon the recommendation of the State and Federal departments, indorsed by a number of the largest fruit shippers of the State, new standards, called United States grape grades, were adopted. These, the result of the joint State-Federal standardization and inspection service during last season's work, are as follows:

THE NEW STANDARD

U. S. No. 1 shall consist of grapes of one variety which are fairly well colored, well matured, firmly attached to cap-stems, not split, crushed, wet, soft, or badly wilted; which are free from immature shot-berries, raisined berries, sunburned or dried berries, waterberry, redberry, mold or decay, and from damage caused by mildew, disease, insects or other means.

In order to allow for variations incident to proper grading and handling, not more than 10 per cent, by weight, of any lot may consist of raisined berries; and in addition not more than 10 per cent, by weght, of the lot may be below the remaining requirements of this grade, except that not more than a total of 5 per cent by weight of the lot may be seriously damaged, and not more than two-fifths of this amount, or 2 per cent of the lot, may be affected by live mildew, mold or decay.

Crop Insurance.
The last irrigation before harvest in a San Joaquin Valley vineyard.

U. S. No. 2 shall consist of grapes of one variety which are mature, which are not detached from the cap-stems, split, crushed or wet; which are free from raisined, sunburned or dried berries, waterberry, redberry, mold or decay, and from other serious damage. In order to allow for variations incident to proper grading and handling, not more than 15 per cent, by weight, of any lot may consist of raisined berries, and in addition, not more than 10 per cent by weight of the lot may be below the remaining requirements of this grade, except that not more than a total of 5 per cent, by weight, of the lot may be affected by live mildew, mold or decay.

U. S. No. 3 shall consist of grapes of mixed varieties which meet the remaining requirements of U. S. No. 2.

While these grades are purely optional, it is believed that they will be used extensively during the present season and that they will exercise a definite influence toward better and uniform quality of shipments.

These grades are upheld by the action of the California Grape Growers' Exchange in fixing the prices of juice grapes in accordance with the United States specifications, an act which will tend to lead shippers to try to bring their grapes within the grades at the specified prices.

PRICES BY CLASSES

The prices, which are for naked juice grapes delivered in purchasers' boxes at the shipping station nearest the grower's vineyard, are as follows, in eight classes:

Class 1. Alicante Bouschet and Petit Bouschet U. S. No. 1, $90 per ton; U. S. No. 2, $80 per ton.

PLAN WORTH TRYING

Last spring an attempt was made under the leadership of Ralph P. Merritt, who is guiding the destiny of the Sun Maid raisin deal, to establish a clearinghouse for the shipment of fresh grapes, the plan being to establish a governing board which should keep in close touch with distribution and decide to what points fruit should be sent. The chief object was to avoid glutting certain markets and to secure better distribution.

Probably it will take another year to put this plan in operation. Its value is demonstrated by the single fact that at one time last year 3000 cars of grapes were piled up on the Erie Wharf, New York, a result of blind distribution, or rather careless concentration, which resulted in a big loss to the growers.

New York is said to absorb about 40 per cent of the fresh grapes shipped from California. A big improvement in marketing arrangements is being made this year by shipping all juice grapes intended for New York to the New Jersey water front, where they will be sold directly out of the cars on samples. Careful distinctions are drawn between table grapes and juice grapes, the former to be sold in New York, but the latter to be confined entirely to the New Jersey side.

It is expected that this arrangement will enable sales to be completed much sooner, allowing earlier clean-up of the dock and the yards. While intended chiefly to facilitate trading in New York, it will help the grape growers by moving their crop to the consumer more quickly.

WORDS OF WARNING

From Michigan comes a warning that wine making is on the decline and that less grapes are being consumed there now than two, three and four years ago. In 1920, Michigan shipped 4607 cars of grapes, which sold at $105 a ton; in 1923, only 4000 cars were shipped and the grapes brought only $50 a ton.

D. L. Runnells, in the Grand Rapids Press, declares that the vineyardists must expand outlets. He writes:

"A little foresight now can forestall disaster if it lies in the pathway of the grape growers. To blindly continue to plant more vineyards without giving some consideration to the prospective outlet for more grapes is almost certain to bring grief. Growers should give more consideration to stimulating the demand for table grapes and encourage the drinking of health-giving unfermented juices. Grape sales for the past few years indicate that America has had her fill of home wine but has hardly touched the fresh fruit."

STUDENTS STUDYING THE FRUIT INDUSTRY

In order to study fruit growing and handling at first-hand, a class of University of California students is spending a week in Southern California fruit districts, having started the work of investigation on Saturday, July 19. Stops are scheduled for points in Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside and San Bernardino counties.

While the party is in Los Angeles county, the Sylmar olive ranch, San Fernando, will be inspected.

The method of handling produce at the big Los Angeles Wholesale Terminal will be studied during the early morning hours, in co-operation with the State Supervising Inspector of Markets. Walnut and citrus orchards and methods of operation will be studied throughout the county, in co-operation with the agricultural extension service, and a number of packing-houses will be visited. Stops in other parts of Southern California will include a visit to the Citrus Experiment Station, Riverside; the Date Exepriment Station, Indio; the Chaffey Junior College experimental plots at Ontario; the avocado planting of the San Joaquin Fruit Company in Orange county; the Orange County Insectary at Anaheim, and the Association Soil and Fertilizer Laboratory at the same city.

Farm News of the Great Southwest

DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS

TUCSON (Ariz.)—Belief is expressed locally that the heat of an Arizona summer sun in the cotton-growing areas serves to kill the mountain weevil of which fear is expressed. A demonstration lately made confirms the theory. Dean J. J. Thornber of the agricultural department of the University of Arizona had a number of the weevils gathered in the highlands of the cool Catalinas, from the wild cotton plants, and placed on domestic cotton plants in a screened enclosure on the university grounds. The insects are reported to have been killed at once by the heat or by the rays of the sun. An experiment on a much larger scale is to be tried on an acre of university cotton at Agua Caliente, which is to be well infested with wild weevil from the thurberia plants of the mountains. Experiments also are being made with a number of arsenical germicides, but with the handicap that no weevil can be found to work on in the local fields.

POTATO HARVEST ON

BRYN MAWR.—Potato harvesting is well under way in this district. It is expected that there will be a yield of more than a hundred cars all told. A. Gregory, the premier potato grower of the section, has more than sixty cars, which he has sold to an Arizona firm. He raised them at his Marigold Farm west of the city.

DRYING YARDS BUSY

REDLANDS.—Apricots have recently been occupying the attention of the growers of the Redlands section. Some 2500 or 3000 tons of fruit are being handled here, probably 200 going to the canneries and the rest being dried in the drying yards of the region. L. O. Yount, "apricot king" of the Redlands section, expects to dry 1800 tons of fruit. The growers are rather expecting to get around 10 or 11 cents a pound for their fruit this year.

CANNERIES ARE BUSY

RIVERSIDE.—Canneries of this district are in operation, and the apricot pack has been under way for some time. The local cannery of the California Co-operative Growers' Association, employing 200, has been averaging 50 tons of fruit a day. The fruit has been shipped into Riverside from Elsinore, Nuevo and Ontario, and has been running "clean" and is of good quality. The peach pack, next on the schedule, will have a run of more than 60 days, it is expected. The Charles Sterns & Sons cannery at Wineville is running in full force, as is the La Sierra Heights cannery at Arlington.

A Grower's Roadside Stand.

It is owned by G. C. Perry, Lincoln Boulevard, Venice, and at it is sold much of the produce from Mr. Perry's 51 acres of truck crops in the Venice district.

COT TONNAGE LARGE

COLTON.—Three hundred and fifty persons are employed in the Colton Cannery on West I street, where a large tonnage of apricots is being handled every day. Fruit has been coming in rapidly and is reported to be of good quality, somewhat better, in fact, than that of last season. It is expected that more apricots will be handled this year than last. The peach crop is short and cannery officials are unable to ascertain as yet what the run will be. With warm weather continuing there will probably be some peaches before the end of July, although how long they will continue to come in is hard to estimate.

W. B. Culross, lessee of the local plant and head of the green fruit department for the California Fruit Growers' Association, is in and out of the city almost every day on his tours of inspection through this and other sections.

BUREAU EMPLOYS ATTORNEY

RIVERSIDE.—Directors of the Riverside County Farm Bureau, in their July meeting, voted to employ an attorney to act as counsel in the solution of the power situation. It is understood that the directors will instruct the attorney to represent them at the hearing on increased power rates to be conducted by the Railroad Commission in Riverside on July 28.

COTTON ROGUEING STARTED

SHAFTER.—Rogueing of pure seed cotton is being carried on over Kern county by experienced workers from the government experiment farm here. Every plant that is off type is pulled out. This work is going on in Shafter, Weed Patch, Arvin, Wasco and other districts. There are eight men engaged in the work, the results of which are expected to be of great benefit to cotton growers in Kern county.

PUMPS SAVE THE DAY

VISALIA.—The crop situation in this territory has not been seriously affected by the decision of the State Railroad Commission to refuse new power connections, due to the serious impairment of the electrical supply by shortage of water. The water table in this district, while seriously affected, is not as low as it is to the south and west and existing pumps are managing to raise water more regularly here than in some other localities. Ditch water is not available, but the territory around Visalia, fortunately, is pretty well supplied with pumps. There is little hope for relief, according to the Edison Company, until after the first of November. Farmers are urged to use gasoline and other power for the operation of pumps already connected with electricity, whenever this is possible.

'COTS OF GOOD QUALITY

CARPINTERIA.—Apricot growers of this section recently plunged into the thick of the harvest. The fruit has ripened later in Carpinteria Valley than in Ventura county orchards, and the local growers were able to get all the help needed, the harvesters coming in from the orchards to the south. The Carpinteria Valley fruit is reported to be above the average in quality, the fruit carrying much more sugar than usual and coloring well. Growers all practiced thinning in taking off all the young fruit that set on the limbs that did not leaf out. This, they say, resulted in giving the remaining crop all the strength of the tree in developing, and the fruit has been running to large sizes. Independent growers are said to be receiving good offers for the crop and all are anticipating the best market returns in some years.

PROGRESS IS NOTABLE

TUCSON (Ariz.)—Nearly 50,000 acres of land now is under cultivation in the Santa Cruz and Rillito Valleys, near Tucson, an increase from 5000 acres in 1910. Land under irrigation totals 16,568 acres. There is expectation of a large increase in the acreage of deciduous fruits, for which the soil and climate are declared ideal, while a considerable acreage has been planted in grapes. Water is to be had in large quantity by pumping in any of the valley sections. With a lift of fifty feet, the average cost per acre foot for irrigation water is set at $3. The annual cost of water per annum on the Tucson Farms Company's area is $5.75, while smaller farmers pay about $8. With power, expected to be secured soon from hydroelectric works, the cost would be much less. It is considered probable that the lines from the Roosevelt project will be extended here from Casa Grande.

SEED PRODUCTION HEAVY

CHANDLER (Ariz.)—With 18 cents offered by wholesale buyers, Chandler farmers this season have gone heavily into the production of alfalfa seed. Alfalfa this year has been unusually healthy, though some fields have had visitations of grasshoppers, which also have attacked young cotton. The Chalcis fly, the worst pest of the seed grower, appears to be absent this summer, and the product therefore is expected to be of unusual quality.

WATER SUIT POSTPONED

HEMET.—It is expected that the water suit of E. O. Eggen and other valley ranchers against the Lake Hemet Water Company will be prolonged until next fall, the case having been continued in the Riverside Superior Court to July 22. Since Superior Court vacations are in order during August and September and the hearings will no doubt consume more time than the week allotted them, it is thought that it may be many weeks before a decision is reached. The case has already taken up more than two weeks.

ÇITRUS DEMONSTRATION HEID

RIALTO.—Prof. Schoonover, of the State University, assisted by H. J. Wilder, San Bernardino County Farm Adviser, recently gave a demonstration of the treatment for gum disease in the citrus grove of Hugh Ware at Date and First streets. Practical teaching was given through requiring the growers present to do the actual work under the eyes of the demonstrators. This is one of many interesting demonstrations along various lines of citrus grove care, protection and work which have been given in this district since the organization of the local Farm Center, of which Ramond Carroll is now director. The Ware grove has a history which gave to Tuesday's demonstration added interest. For many years in the early days of Rialto, when it was owned by the Buxton family, the grove was known far and wide as a regular bearer of

NEW COMERS SUCCEED IN EGG PRODUCTION

BY ELIZABETH BOSWELL

SAN FERNANDO.—It has been said by men who are in a position to know that poultry is one of the best paying "crops" in San Fernando Valley, and quite a number of men in the valley are proving that the hen deserves an industrial crown.

Hidden from view from the main thoroughfare by tall eucalyptus trees, Ike Dickey's ranch lies directly to the right of the Southern Pacific tracks on Hubbard avenue, in San Fernando. This ranch is a part of what was once the great Maclay Rancho.

The Dickey place now consists of twenty-seven acres, ten of which are in bearing orange trees. There are also thirty avocado trees on the place, a number of lemon trees and a family orchard of various other fruits, berries and grapes, but the most profitable crop of all since they purchased the ranch in the latter part of 1922, Mr. and Mrs. Dickey say, has been the fruit of the hen.

The Dickeys came to San Fernando from Tennessee and the only experience they had ever had in raising chickens was in 1915-19, when Mrs. Dickey, with a small incubator, within four years, raised a thrifty flock of Barred Plymouth Rocks, from which she earned spending money and started a neat bank account. When they purchased their ranch in San Fernando they bought with it 1400 White Leghorn hens. The ranch was equipped with the most modern brooder-house in this section, one built by a previous owner and accommodating about 5000 chicks.

In December, 1923, Mr. Dickey put in his first brood of 4500 baby chicks. Before the shipment was received the brooder [illegible] habitation, clean water was put in the containers, and the heat in the brooders was regulated. The floor was covered with sand.

Although this was the year of high mortality among baby chicks, Mr. Dickey had splendid luck with that December order, raising therefrom 2000 pullets. There are now 3600 hens and 1900 pullets on the ranch, making a total of 5500 birds. The December pullets laid their first eggs on May 8, being four and one-half months old at that time.

During the month of June, the 3600 hens and the pullets that had started to lay, averaged $50 per day, it is stated. The average cost of feeding the entire flock was about $25 per day, which left a net income of $25. Mr. Dickey says that the pullets alone will pay the feed bill during the summer.

Mr. Dickey and C. L. Clark, his only employee except during the brooding season, are now culling the flock. They expect to take out about 500 culls, leaving 5000 birds, which is as many as they care to keep. The culling on this ranch is done at night with a flash light. If a hen has yellow ear lobes she is put with the discards. They have also learned to judge fairly well by the general build of a hen whether she is doing her part toward filling the egg cases.

R. P. Stephen, Inglewood poultryman, and one of his high-record trapnested White Leghorns. Mr. Stephen's pen in the Pomona egg-laying contest stood in first place for May production, with an average of 24.86 eggs per hen.

Mrs. Dickey does much of the weighing and packing of the eggs, which are sold to Los Angeles markets, and to local cafes.

The increase in the yield of the citrus trees due to the use of the fertilizer from the chicken pens has been well worth while, Mr. Dickey says.

Mr. and Mrs. Dickey both contend that the commercial egg industry is a paying business, even for the inexperienced, if modern methods are studied and applied, and if common sense is used in the disposition of the non-producers, the keeping down of overhead expense, and in marketing.

In Mr. Clark, the Dickeys have a most efficient and reliable helper. Realizing that the work would be too much for them to attempt alone, they wrote for Mr. Clark and his family to leave their home in Arkansas and come to California. The Clarks are now happily domiciled in a comfortable tenant house on the Dickey ranch. Together, they have gleaned much valuable poultry information, and have fallen readily into western methods of ranching.

Dairymen—DANGER!

Don't Depend on Hay and Pasturage Alone

Cows need Orange Brand Dairy Feed as well as hay and silage. This grain concentrate has been perfected by experts during the past 27 years and it contains all the additional body-building and milk-making material that cows need.

Get More Milk Now!

There's no waste in Nicholls Orange Brand Dairy Feed. Every element is scientifically selected and blended in just the right proportion. It keeps cows in prime condition and actually increases milk production. It costs nothing to use Orange Brand Dairy Feed—for the extra profits from more milk pay for the feed and then some.

QUALITY OF POTATO CROP IS EXCELLENT

SAN JACINTO.—The Lakeview district has won considerable attention as an onion-production center, and is now coming into notice as a producer of potatoes. Twelve ranches of the district have gone in for spuds and it is expected that the crop will make between twenty-five and thirty cars.

Shipments have already begun in this part of Riverside county, when about 500 acres were planted. Deputy Horticultural Commissioner E. G. Tuthill, who has been in the district in order to place the necessary certification on the potato shipments going out of the State, declares the potatoes are of an unusually even and fine grade this year. It is understood that the first carload shipped, which went to Wyoming, will be used for seed. The potatoes are all of the White Rose variety, smooth, even in size and free from bruises.

The output of the Lakeview district itself is expected to be 5000 sacks and it is understood that the crop has been bought by the California Vegetable Union.

It pays to grow vegetables for home use in these days of high prices.

WATERMELON GROWERS FORM ASSOCIATION

WASCO.—The watermelon growers of the Wasco district have organized an association through which they will market this year's big crop. The association comes as a culmination of three weeks of effort on the part of a number of the larger growers of the district. It is composed of more than sixty local growers, who own 85 per cent of the acreage planted to melons. Members bind themselves to sell all their melons through the association and agree to pay a maximum cost of two dollars per ton for handling services rendered by the association. A system of one-day pools is being used, the melons being received f. o. b. the cars, Wasco.

The first melons handled by the association have sold for $25 to $30 per ton. About ten cars per day are being shipped at the present time. Advantages claimed for the association are an assurance that all melons will be sold at the same price and the relieving of the growers from the bother and worry of marketing their crop. R. C. Anni, a local rancher was appointed salesmanager and N. P. Cormack, secretary-treasurer of the organization. The board of directors consists of R. C. Anni, H. C. Rambo, S. V. Dement, H. H. Fowler and B. C. Unruh.

SHAFTER POTATOES ARE "CLEANED UP"

SHAFTER.—The local potato crop, which started rolling into markets of the Northwest, Nevada, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona as well as many California points on May 29, was cleaned up early in July, with a total movement of over 300 cars. According to those interested in the deal, many growers did not make money, though there were individual instances where ranchers "cleaned up."

The first fields dug were of good quality and received good grades from the shipping point inspection service officials stationed here for the deal. Later, the "spuds" sent out were too poor to grade.

Weather conditions, which necessitated overirrigation, with a resultant second growth injury, was responsible for many of the growers' losses.

PEAR TRACT SHOWS RESULT OF CARE

TEHACHAPI.—Among the many well-kept pear orchards in this valley from which owners net handsome returns, one of the most attractive is that of Lon Denison, less than a mile from Tehachapi. Mr. Denison has forty acres of Bartlett pears—five acres 12 years old and thirty-five acres 9 years old. The trees are carefully pruned each year and thoroughly fumigated at the proper seasons.

A feature of the orchard is the irrigating system, a modern pumping plant and a complete cement pipe line extending through the tract and permitting of an efficient irrigation of trees with a minimum amount of water. Tractor, plows, cultivators and other implements required in the care of an orchard by modern methods are there in full array.

Mr. Denison is the original owner of the developed property having personally planted the entire acreage. The trees are uniformly developed and show results of exceptional care. The yield at harvest time fully compensates the owner for the extra attention given the orchard.

While the Denison orchard is a beauty spot in itself, its attractiveness is further enhanced by the surrounding properties, all of which have received the best of care. Each successive year, as the production from young trees increases, orcharding becomes more important in this district.

SUBSTANTIAL GAIN IN COTTON ACREAGE

PHOENIX.—The area devoted to the production of cotton, in Arizona, June 25, 1924, was 49,400 acres in excess of the acreage reported on the corresponding date last year, according to the United States Crop Reporting Board. Last year, cotton was growing on 130,000 acres of land in Arizona on the date in question; this year 179,400 acres was the amount reported.

The condition of Arizona's growing cotton, on June 25, was reported at 92 per cent of normal; two points higher than one month before. A condition of 92 per cent, considering 179,400 acres, forecasts a total production of approximately 108,932 bales of 500 pounds net. Such a production, if realized, will represent the peak of Arizona's annual production to date.

Last year 2000 acres of the 130,000 acres standing June 25, were abandoned before time of harvest. From the 128,000 acres harvested, approximately 77,500 bales, of 500 pounds gross, were produced. The fol[illegible]

POWER CONSERVATION PLAN IN OPERATION

The first order put into effect by H. G. Butler, power supervisor for the Railroad Commission, has directed that district managers of the Southern California Edison Company shall be governed by recommendations of local Farm Bureau committees in the distribution or allocation of the energy assigned to each district. Order No. 2 of the power supervisor directs that all sign display lighting shall be entirely discontinued except on Sundays; window and similar lighting be reduced as far as possible consistent with public safety; interior business lighting to be sufficient only for the conducting of the consumer's business. These regulations on lighting are to apply in the City of Los Angeles and in territory served directly or indirectly by the Southern California Edison Company. Following is a copy of Order No. 1 to the Southern California Edison Company dealing with irrigation:

1. It is hereby ordered, effective at once, that in making the reduction in power consumption of agricultural users, district managers of your company shall be governed by the recommendations of the local committee of the County Farm Bureau in the distribution or allocation of the energy determined to be available for the use of such class of consumers. Agricultural users, in this connection, shall include packing plants, canneries, milk-handling plants and similar industries.

2. While this order applies entirely to agricultural consumers the County Farm Bureau committees are requested promptly to call the attention of the district managers to any unnecessary or wasteful use of energy among other classes of consumers.

3. The personnel of the committees for each district will be furnished you by J. J. Deuel.

4. This order has been determined in conference with J. J. Deuel, of the California Farm Bureau Federation and Fred B. Lewis, of the Southern California Edison Company.

The plan is in operation in secured districts and Farm Bureau committees are now being appointed to work with the electric company officials in solving power problems in others.

WALNUT CROP ALMOST UP TO LAST YEAR'S

Notwithstanding the serious shortage of rainfall during the winter and spring, and the fact that growing conditions in many districts have been somewhat unsatisfactory, it appears from the midsummer crop estimate just completed by the California Walnut Growers' Association that this year's production of walnuts will be only 2.7 per cent less than that of the 1923 harvest.

According to Carlyle Thorpe, manager of the association, the associated growers will this year harvest about 47,492,000 pounds, compared to 48,810,000 pounds for last year's crop. It is the belief of the Association that the new crop estimate will prove far more reliable than that of the previous year, based, as it is, upon the new system of estimating, worked out by Prof. L. D. Batchelor, of the Division of Orchard Management, University of California.

The association this year offered a group of trophies and cash prizes to local growers' associations for the sake of getting quicker action and greater accuracy in the compiling of the crop report. This resulted in keener grower interest, it is asserted, and the central organization was able to get prompt, and, it is believed, accurate results.

Locals representing more than 90 per cent of the association's entire yearly output of walnuts reported promptly, and the probable harvest was based upon percentages secured from those estimates. The Central Association obtains a midsummer estimate each year in order to ascertain approximately how many thousand tons of walnuts it will have to dispose of, because the trade in general places its orders for future shipments, during the summer months, and it is necessary for the sales department to have a fairly good idea of the crop's size in order to make the allotments on an equitable basis.

A cash prize of $125 goes to the local association whose crop estimate proves to be the nearest to the correct tonnage shown at the end of the harvest. There is a second prize of $100 and a third prize of $50. Secretaries or managers of the winning local associations will receive personal prizes ranging from $15 to $50. Individual grower prizes, for the most careful and accurate estimates of orchard yield, will range from $5 to $25. The local associations showing the best general record will receive trophies.

Association officials report that the quality of this year's walnuts will compare favorably with that of last year's harvest.

NEBRASKAN SELLS GROVE

BAKERSFIELD.—A twenty-acre orange grove owned by J. P. Hendry of Lincoln, Nebraska, and located near Richgrove in the Aksarben colony has been sold to E. F. East. This was the first orange grove planted in the district. The Hendry brothers, Charles and James, started the Aksarben colony, laid out the 160-acre tract, and had full charge of developing it for a number of smaller landholders who purchased land in ten, twenty and forty-acre tracts. The tract was brought to a high state of development and has been in bearing for several years. Mr. East's new acquisition is improved with a five-room modern dwelling, large barn, garage and other outbuildings and carries a water right in a deep well with an electrically operated turbine pump. Until recently the place was occupied by Frank J. Coddington, who has charge of the major portion of the Aksarben tract.

Over-Supply of Labor

of the commonest fruits. In general, a thousand acres in barley, wheat or grain hay uses at most a thousand man-days of labor, while the same acreage in fruit requires 24,00 man-days.

Set off against these contrasted figures, he says, is the fact that in the past thirty years California's individual fruit trees, deciduous and tropical, have multiplied from less than 11,000,000 to more than 46,000,000; or, in terms of acreage, a quadruplication, "and then some." On the other hand, the cereal acreage has fallen off about one-third.

The result is an increased supply of labor. But this labor, as Prof. Adams reminded his audience at Long Beach, is not greatly wanted except in the rush of the harvest months, notably from July through October, and must take care of itself the rest of the year.

In an off-year for farming like 1924, with city industries not taking up the slack, the State of necessity fails to provide adequately for its hands. The situation is accentuated by the sheer inability of farmers to hire more than a minimum of workers at more than the lowest wage that will hold them in a year when hands are too many for the jobs. Most sections report crop prices so low as to drive farmers to tax their own families with more than their customary share of harvesting.

Prof. Adams offers no cut-and-dried remedy, though he implies that California is in the midst of an agricultural and social experiment requiring many years to work out. He says it's a case of "hands off" for the doctrinaires. It doesn't help, for instance, he says, to stand on the side lines and coach the farmer with sage advice about rotation, or diversification, or direct selling, or co-operation, or getting Congress to "do something," or any other of the cure-alls of the arm-chair agriculturist. The California farmer, he declares, knows far more about all these remedies than the "man in the bleachers" does. The questions at issue in these post-war days of transition will be solved only by the patience and determination of intelligent, practical men, Prof. Adams believes.

The Livestock Bulletin

By ROBERT T. EVANS

The directors of the dairymen's department of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau and the Extension Service are making plans to resume cow-testing in Los Angeles county as soon as this seems expedient. Obviously, such work cannot be started while the foot-and-mouth disease continues to exist in the county. Approximately 1800 cows in the association have been lost through the epidemic, so the work will be resumed with a smaller number of cows than have been regularly tested in the past. It is expected, however, that the number will be increased very rapidly during the coming year, as it will be particularly desirable to secure cow-testing association records on the new cows which are brought into the county, since their producing ability will be an unknown quantity. Indications are that the cow-testing work will be more popular than ever as soon as the foot-and-mouth ban is lifted and new cows are allowed to be brought into the county. Every dairyman in the county will have an opportunity to take advantage of this cow-testing work if he so desires. Announcements will be made as soon as the time of starting can be determined.

Efficiency as a butter-fat producer is clearly shown in the records of the performance of Biddy's Glory, a young Jersey owned by the Waterloo Jersey Farm of California, Clements, California. This Jersey cow started out as a producer when 2 years 3 months of age and in 362 days produced, with calf, 508.32 pounds of butter fat. On this performance she qualified for a silver medal. Within twenty days of completing this first Register-of-Merit test, or at 3 years, 4 months of age, she freshened and started on her second test. This second official test has just been completed, and her production record shows that in 305 days she yielded 562.14 pounds of butter fat and 10,398 pounds of milk, on two milkings a day. She freshened within fourteen months of previous calving and again qualified for a silver medal, awarded by the American Jersey Cattle Club. Biddy's Glory has maintained a high rate of production from the beginning of her first test, calving regularly, and requiring no special treatment while on test. This type of producer may rightly be looked upon as being particularly economical and efficient, and well adapted to the needs of the dairy industry. A silver medal has also been awarded to Biddy of Mossdale, a Jersey heifer owned by J. E. Thorpe, Lockeford, California. This heifer, starting test at 2 years of age, produced 447.47 pounds of butter fat in 305 days, carrying a calf 240 days of the test. Another California Jersey to win a silver medal is Oakland's Prince's Ella, owned by T. B. Purvine, Petaluma. This cow started her test at three years, and in 305 days produced, with calf, 542.07 pounds of butter fat.

Dr. John R. Mohler, chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, who recently came to Southern California to complete arrangements for the share of compensation to be paid by the Federal government to live-stock owners whose herds have been destroyed in the foot-and-mouth outbreak, is convinced that science will eventually conquer this dreaded live-stock scourge. While this disease presents one of the most baffling problems with which the department has had to contend, Dr. Mohler states that considerable progress has been made recently, in spite of the minuteness of the foot-and-mouth germ, which made efforts at isolation most difficult. One scientist, he pointed out, has been enabled to show a photographic enlargement of the organism by means of microphotography, and it is believed that with the knowledge gained by this development, it will, in time, be possible to devise a series of experiments that will lead to the production of a serum which will render animals immune from disease.

Thirty-nine herds, representing a total of 1036 cows in the Maricopa county, Arizona, cow-testing association, produced an average of 731 pounds of milk containing twenty-eight pounds of fat during the month of June. There were 1040 cows tested during the month of May, with an average production of 802 pounds of milk and 29.7 pounds of fat. The Holstein herd of B. Coman was first for June, with an average production of 1254 pounds of milk containing 37.9 pounds of fat, while the grade Guernsey herd of W. F. Carney was second, with an average production of 888 pounds of milk containing 37.7 pounds of fat. The registered Guernsey herd of Frank Reed Sanders and the grade Holstein herd of E. E. Ward were first and second, respectively, among the herds of under fifteen cows, with an average production of 35.4 and 26.9 pounds of fat respectively. Emaline, a grade Holstein in the herd of the Orme Cattle Company, was first for the month, with a production of 1503 pounds of milk containing 76.6 pounds of fat while the registered Jersey cow Baby, in the herd of F. L. Chesney and the grade Jersey Nubbin in the herd of A. J. Karlson came second and third, with productions of 67.3 and 64.3 pounds of fat, respectively. The average fat production for the different herds for the month ran from 37.9 to 17.6. The total fat production for the cows in the association for the month was [illegible] pounds as compared to [illegible] pounds of fat for May.

The writer recently had the pleasure of visiting the Sierra Ayrshire Farm near Bishop in the Owens River Valley. The owners, A. L. Wells and Son, have assembled a herd of thirty-five head of Ayrshires which from a practical standpoint has met the requirements of the locality. While the owners have not gone in for exhibition on a large scale, limiting their activities along this line to the local fair at Bishop, they have demonstrated in no small way the practicability of carrying good live stock on the farm. The whole milk from this herd is delivered direct to the consumer in Bishop each day, thereby giving a steady income from the place. The farm name, "Sierra," has been registered with the Ayshire Breeders Association, that the owners may have exclusive use of the name in registering the young stock, and is a positive method of identifying the breeding of animals that go out from the herd. Such a practice is being followed on many pure-bred live-stock farms, and has come to be a popular method of advertising such farms, showing the genuine pride that the owners of leading herds have in their stock. Farm trade names should be more frequently adopted by breeders who are striving to market a high-class product.

Official testing causes only a small amount of extra work and involves only a reasonable expense, and yet many breeders and dairymen who should be carrying on official testing neglect to do so. Many breeders undoubtedly have individuals in their herd which, if officially tested, would make a good showing, and in some instances might even put up a remarkable performance. A case of this sort in California will be of interest to all breeders and dairymen. The Alta Cresta herd, owned by A. W. Nolan of Forrestville, had been in the course of development for twenty years, but no official testing had been done. In 1922, Mr. Astroth, field man of the American Jersey Cattle Club, persuaded Mr. Nolan to put some of his Jersey cows on Register of Merit test. None of these cows had ever been tested before. The result is most interesting. During the past year two State class records have been broken in the herd and one gold and one silver medal have been won. Two more cows now on test are said to be reasonably sure to win gold medals. Onward Girlie Bertha, owned and bred by Mr. Nolan, has just finished a test in which she produced 710.33 pounds of butter-fat in 365 days. She is expected to calve shortly and on this record should qualify for a gold medal and for the State junior 3-year-old Jersey championship. Jewel Princess of A. C. recently completed a test in which she produced, with calf, 672 pounds of butter-fat in 365 days. This record won for her the Jersey senior 3-year-old championship of California as well as a silver medal awarded by the American Jersey Cattle Club. She is again on test and in April produced ninety-one pounds of butter-fat. This cow before she was tested is said to have been offered to a neighbor of Mr. Nolan's for $150 as a family cow.

Profitable use for the surplus Bermuda onion crop of the onion-growing section around Laredo, Texas, has been found by the famers there, according to news reports. The big and small white onions lert on hand after the markets had been supplied are being fed to dairy cows, reports say. It is stated that the animals prefer the onions to all other feed-stuff and that they thrive upon the diet. As a milk producer, the bulbs are said to have been found to be highly valuable. Neither the milk nor butter from the onion-fed cows contains any flavor of the bulbs, it is explained in the news statements. Attention of farmers of the region to the possibilities of using Bermuda onions as feed for their dairy herds is said to have been attracted when it was discovered that in fields where harvesting of onions was in progress milk cows often followed along the rows and ate great quantities of the bulbs with apparent relish and no harmful effects. There is each season more or less waste of onions after the crop has been harvested and reports say Laredo farmers are now carefully keeping all left-over onions. All of which is interesting, to say the least.

COW-TESTING WORK HAS BEEN RESUMED

RIVERSIDE.—Cow-testing of Riverside county herds was officially resumed here in July, after a three-months' suspension on account of the foot-and-mouth epidemic. The testing is done under the auspices of the Riverside County Cow-testing Association, for which Mark Butterfield is official tester. More than 1500 cows will be tested this month, and prospects are for an increase over the 2000 mark in the near future.

At a recent meeting of the directors of the association, it was decided that no cups will be awarded in the cow-testing competition this year because of the suspension of testing. It is planned, however, that prize ribbons will be given for the high-record herds and the high-record cows in each class for the last six months in 1924.

An ordinance forcing a tuberculosis test for all cattle entering Riverside county has recently been endorsed by the Riverside County Cow-testing Association, the local unit of the California Milk Producers Association, and other organizations. The matter is to be placed before the county board of supervisors in the near future.

RECORDS BROKEN AT BIG DRYING PLANT

HEMET.—William Wilson, local rancher and nurseryman, is this year breaking all records for quantity of fruit dried at a single plant in the Hemet Valley. He intends to dry more than 1000 tons of apricots for the season at his modern plant on East Florida avenue. He dried 670 tons last year and recently disposed of them at a price that is said to have netted him a good profit. This, in spite of the fact that the business has been considered by many to be exceptionally hazardous.

Mexican help is being used almost exclusively in this district this season. From all sections of Southern California workers and their families have come here and the community they have established, adjacent to the Wilson drying plant in particular, is a sight to draw attention. It is estimated that more than 800 persons are making their temporary home in this camp. Of these, about 450 are on the Wilson payroll, more than 100 pickers and over 300 fruit cutters being employed. Others are engaged in trucking and other work incidental to the orchard and to the drying-plant operations. Aside from saving his own fruit, Mr. Wilson has been purchasing apricots in all parts of the valley.

Mr. Wilson, as well as others who are in touch with the situation generally, predicts a fair price for fruit this year. Not only is this immense drying plant running full capacity, but every plant in the valley is in operation, creating plenty of work for both the local help and the outsiders who have come in.

Both local canneries have been enjoying a good run. The crop has shown up much better than was at one time anticipated and the quality described as more than fair.

POISON FOR COYOTES

CLAVICLE.—Local ranchers have renewed coyote control work, by the system of poisoning put into practice here by State pest-cotrol representatives. Many young flocks of poultry and turkeys will be greatly benefited by the barley stubble and pasture range, in addition to feeding upon grasshoppers which are numerous this season, if they can be permitted to forage. A number of coyotes have already been killed this season.

WATER EXPECTED TO SUFFICE FOR CROPS

RIVERSIDE.—Despite the spring drouth and a prevailing power shortage, the supply of irrigation water in the Riverside district is holding up to the average, and officials of the water companies here predict a sufficiency of water throughout the summer months. Although a slight curtailment in irrigation water usage has been asked because of the necessity of cutting power consumption, the announcement of local water companies that gasoline engines are being substituted for power motors indicates that this will not create a serious situation.

The Gage Canal Company here recently cut its demand for current 25 per cent when the 100-horse power electric motor at Highgrove was stopped and gasoline engines took up the work of pumping for the canal, which supplies a large part of the citrus district here. Other water companies are understood to be taking similar steps to curtail power usage, at the same time insuring the growers a good supply of water. Crops depending on irrigation are expected to produce well this year, experts declare.

SHIP A CAR A DAY

SHAFTER.—The Richland Fruit Company is packing Thompson seedless grapes and figures on a car a day for some time. The early Thompsons are bringing around $4 a lug box.

EXCELLENT PROSPECT FOR CITRUS CROP

SAN BERNARDINO.—Excellent prospects for the 1925 citrus crop from all parts of San Bernardino county is reported by J. P. Coy, county horticultural commissioner. Thedreaded June drop, which is always feared by the orange growers, has practicall ystopped by the middle of July, despite the continued warm weather. Oranges were still dropping but the main drop has passed and the small oranges were assuming sufficient size to develop heat-resistant qualities.

The high temperatures of the last two weeks of June and the first week of July seemed to have less effect on the citrus crop than was fared by experienced growers. At present the indications point to a crop better than 80 or 85 per cent. It is still too early to judge accurately the new crop, but growers are decidedly encouraged over the prospects.

Because of the relatively small amount of fumigation required in the Redlands and Highland districts this year, the making of tests began around July 15. At that time the oranges were hardly far enough advanced to stand fumigation, although the warm weather has aided the hatching of scale. In Rialto, Fontana and Bloomington the groves are somewhat spotted, with considerable fumigation to be done within limited sectors.

With a more hardy form of scale to combat, the West End growers will be required to fumigate more generally than those in the eastern districts. Fumigation in the West End is conducted later in the summer after similar pest control work has been practically finished in the San Bernardino Valley.

GAS ENGINES GIVE DEPENDABLE POWER

LOMPOC.—Three thousand acres of sugar beets in Lompoc Valley, the largest area to this crop ever known in the valley, are coming along wonderfully, the growers report. When the water in Santa Ynez River, from which the valley's irrigation supply was being drawn, began to fall growers hurriedly put down wells, and today the full 3000 acres are under irrigation and the crop is promising a heavy return. The Union Sugar Company of Betteravia has contracted for 2000 acres and the American Beet Sugar Company of Oxnard for 1000 acres. All the wells are pouring out good quantities of water, as is seen from reports from the Lunberg ranch, where 250 acres are being irrigated from a well that is irrigating 150 acres on the George Horn ranch. Others are equally as good, it is stated.

The power shortage is hardly felt over the valley for the reason that the growers are using large "Caterpillar" engines for their pumping plants, and these are proving equal to the needs, it is stated. Wherever gasoline motors can be substituted for electrical energy the ranchers are making the change, and all report that the plan will not reduce the crop output, as they can pump equally as well with the modern gasoline engine as with electric motive power.

The way in which the wells are holding out is said to justify the opinion that there is ample water below the surface of the valley to meet all the demands that may be made upon the supply, even though the rainy season holds off for months.

POWER COMMITTEES MEET ONCE A WEEK

SAN BERNARDINO.—Following a heated discussion as to the best means of distributing agricultural power, the committees representing power-using districts in San Bernardino county passed a resolution at a recent meeting to have the committee chairman meet one a week in the local Farm Bureau office to consider individual power problems that may arise. If necessary, the chairmen will then confer individually or collectively in Los Angeles with J. J. Duel, chairman of the utilities committee of the State Farm Bureau Federation, to make any recommendations that may have been approved at the meeting.

This decision followed the agreement of the committees that each power-using district has its own peculiar power problems to solve and that, except for the weekly conference, they should act independently of each other.

J. S. Edwards of Redlands, chairman of the utilities committee of the San Bernardino County Farm Bureau, was appointed to act as head chairman of the district committee. The personnel of the committees of the four power-using districts is as follows: Pomona—China district—A. W. La Forge, chairman; W. W. Coke, A. H. Decraft. Ontario district F. A. Lucas, chairman; R. V. ard, G. A. Hanson. Redlands district—J. J. Prendergast, chairman; George S. Hinkley, G. A. Atwood S. C. Edwards. San Bernardino district—W. M. Taylor, chairman; J. P. Young, C. W. Yates. These committees, according to an order issued recently by the State Railroad Commission, have the privilege of allocating agricultural power during the present emergency.

To finance the utilities committee of the State Farm Bureau Federation, a resolution was passed to seek a contribution of 25 cents per horsepower from every power user in the county. This resolution annuls a former resolution to collect only 15 cents per horsepower.

Prices for food crops are still far too low by comparison with prices for farm labor and everything the farmer himself is compelled to buy.

WEATHER AND CROP CONDITION REPORT

Crop and weather conditions in California for the week ending July 8th are reported as follows by the United States Departmentment of Agriculture Weather Bureau:

"Temperatures were high in the first part of the week, but in the latter part they were noticeably lower, the average being somewhat above normal. There was not much cloudiness except along the coast. A few light showers occured in the Sierra Nevada Mountains and at widely separated points in Central and Southern California, but these were of little consequence. Relative humidity was higher than usual at this time of the year, especially in the southern end of the State. Sunshine was about normal and there were no damaging winds. The water supply became further depleted, and the use of water and electric power was restricted in some localities.

"Haying continued in some sections, and [illegible] cases they were better than had been expected. Corn and alfalfa grew well where they had sufficient water, and much alfalfa was cut and cured. Pastures and ranges remain poor. Many cattlemen have been forced to move their herds back from the mountains to the valley stubble fields, which is a very unusual condition caused by lack of drinking water on the mountain ranges. Livestock generally was fair, but the outlook for feed in August and September is not encouraging.

"Rice was benefited by the warm weather, in the Sacramento Valley; it is ahead of the season. Sugar beets were good to excellent. Due to the heat in the Imperial Valley, cotton tended to over-growth and failure of squares to set. In the San Joaquin Valley, cotton was in bloom and making satisfactory progress. Beans grew well except on light soils where the water supply was deficient. Irrigated truck grew well and cabbages, onions, carrots, beets, radishes, summer squash and early tomatoes were plentiful in the markets. Hops bloomed freely and seemed to be doing well. Shipping of watermelons began in Tulare county.

"Ripening of deciduous fruits was hastened by the warm weather. Apricots, peaches, pears, plums, figs, apples and berries were picked. Apricots moved to the canneries in the Santa Clara Valley. There are many small apricots this year on account of the drought, which has also caused considerable dropping of prunes. Red spider, which has been favored by the warm weather and drought, was very active in some orchards. Vineyards declined further where water was not available, and some grapes were sunburned early in the week. Shipping of Thompson Seedless grapes was expected shortly in Kern county. Citrus fruits were generally good, and dropping was light except in groves that were too dry."

COTTON ACREAGE IN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

SHAFTER.—Recent estimates on the San Joaquin Valley cotton acreage by counties, made by W. B. Camp, in charge of the United States Department of Agriculture experiment station here, are as follows: Kern, 15,000 acres; Tulare, 5000 acres; King, 8000 acres; Fresno, 8000 acres; Madera, 2000 acres; and Merced, 500 acres. There has been a water shortage generally in Kern county, but the crop is expected to "come through" well. For this year's planting, there will be one gin each at Arvin, Magundun, Wasco, Delano, McFarland, Pixley, Fresno and here, while two gins will be operated at both Weed Patch and Corcoran.

Acala cotton is being planted exclusively in the San Joaquin Valley and growers are improving the strain with the assistance of the local experiment station, which is conducting valuable work with the crop.

NEW GRAPEFRUIT IS NOW IN BEARING

RIVERSIDE.—Prospects for an 85 per cent crop are reported from all parts of the citrus district surrounding Riverside. The June drop had practically stopped before the middle of July and the severely warm weather of June and early July had no serious effect on the crop. While it is a little early to predict the Valencia crop it is reported that the fruit is a little smaller this year, which may result in a smaller yield. Fumigation of groves in the Riverside district is now under way.

The first fruit of the Foster pink-fleshed grapefruit was recently picked from budded trees at the citrus experiment station here. This variety of fruit was originated in Florida a few years ago as a bud sport. Buds were immediately secured by the experiment station for experimental purposes. Unlike other grapefruit the new variety has a pink skin and the meat is of a pinkish hue. It is of good quality, but has many seeds and a thick skin, and for this reason, according to Dr. R. W. Hodgson of the station, Brownsville probably not become popular unless it is further developed. According to Prof. R. W. Hodgson of the station, Brownsville, Tex., citrus growers are attempting to make the pink-fleshed grapefruit a feature of their citrus products and advertising.

The packing-house of the Riverside Walnut Growers' Association, on the Union Pacific tracks here, is practically complete and will be ready for handling this year's walnut crop. The plant was put up at a cost of $6500. The walnut crop in this district is expected to be about normal this year, with perhaps a slight slump in Eurekas. Newly planted groves are beginning to produce, and it is believed that more walnuts will be shipped from this district than ever before.

The wise housekeeper buys early her supply of canning rubbers and throws away the old ones. The cost of a rubber ring is a lot less than the value of a jar of spoiled fruit.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS OF HEMET VALLEY

HEMET.—A meeting was held in Los Angeles recently to determine whether it would be advisable to merge the California Growers' Association with the California Co-operative Canners. Directors and representatives of both corporations were present at the meeting, but it was understood that the attorneys had not as yet made thorough investigation of the legal phases, and definite action was postponed until a future meeting, to be called within a few weeks. For the present year the two associations will work together, it is understood, and the expenses and profits will be pooled. Hemet members of the California Growers' Association are divided on the question of amalgamation, but the general impression seems to be that other sections are largely in favor of the merger.

Lestikow and Bettingen, recent purchasers of the 600-acre Visel, Lutz and Meyer ranch southwest of Hemet, have completed the work of erecting a complete apricot drying system, with 7000 trays. The new owners expect to dry 400 tons of fruit from their trees this season. The owners are enthusiastic over the possibilities and will probably begin intensive development of the property immediately following the apricot harvest this year. Mr. Lestikow is a Los Angeles capitalist and his partner, Mr. Bettingen, is head of a lumber company having fourteen yards in Southern California and many in Canada. Four hundred cres of the ranch are now under cultivation. About 110 acres are in apricots. The crop is said to be large in spite of the fact that the trees are not full grown.

Pumping more water than any other well in the Hemet-San Jacinto Valley, the sec- [illegible] hard ranch. This one goes down [illegible] feet deep. Bringing in of this new well will permit the Burkhard Investment Company to extend and expand its development program. The property owned by the company consists of 4600 acres and was formerly known as the Byrne tract. The company has 280 acres in alfalfa and 70 acres in pears. An additional 80 acres will be set to pears the coming winter. The remainder of the tract is farmed by the Searl brothers and Grant Morse. Intensive development of the property was started four years ago by J. F. Burkhard.

DATE PACKING TO START NEXT MONTH

MONROVIA.—The date packing plant of the Valley Packing Association will st[illegible] packing this season's crop at its plant here the first week of August. R. H. Postlewaite, manager for the Association, says that 100 tons of dates will be packed this season, which is an increase of 50 per cent over the output of last season. This will mean a total value of about $70,000 for the crop for the growers, it is declared.

The packing company has sent out a call for workers to handle the season's crop. W. A. Chamness, secretary of the company, in now in the East in the interests of the product and reports good business prospects.

All of the dates put up are grown in Coachella Valley and are shipped to Monrovia.

Great Future Promised for Guadalupe Vegetable Area

BY ARTHUR [illegible]

A big field of lettuce in the Guadalupe district, showing barns and bunk houses used on ranch.

SANTA MARIA.—Although the vegetable industry was only opened in the Guadalupe district on a commercial scale two years ago, shipments of lettuce alone during the spring and early summer seasons this year have totaled well over 600 carloads.

To R. J. Richards of the W. M. Watson Company, perhaps, is to be given the most credit for the "discovery" of the Guadalupe section as being especially adapted to the growing of lettuce and other vegetables in commercial quantity. The first season nearly 300 acres were planted to lettuce and the increase this year to approximately 3000 acres clearly shows the success of the venture. Plans are now well under way for the planting of a much larger acreage in this valley next spring.

With the closing of the season, a few days ago, preparation of the ground for the fall crop began. The acreage for the fall crop, however, will not total over 1500. This crop is expected to be ready for market about October 1.

It is the spring crop, which will be given the most attention by the local growers. This crop, coming on the market directly after the Imperial Valley's winter and early spring lettuce, has been given a good reception in the East. This year a constant demand has been noticed for the Guadalupe brand on the Chicago and other markets of the East.

Various estimates are being made on the acreage for next spring. Some produce men are predicting at least 6000 acres and others even more. Still another firm has signed for acreage in the district and will erect a packing plant in Guadalupe this winter to be ready to handle next spring's yield.

At present five commission companies are operating in the district, with packing plants and offices at Guadalupe. The W. M. Watson Company shipped 175 cars this spring; Tracy-Waldron went well over the 100 mark; the Saudy-Hunt Company shipped over 100 cars and the Guadalupe Produce Company and the Guadalupe Fruit Growers' Association sent out the remainder. With the coming of more packing firms and with the increased acreage, the shipments are expected to show a very substantial increase next spring.

The Puritan Ice Company, with headquarters in Santa Barbara, erected a plant at Guadalupe two years ago and the firm is now building an addition to care for increased business. Additional spurs have been laid by the Southern Pacific and all shipments for next season will be handled in rapid time. Practically all the shipments made by the local firms were to the markets in the East.

Climatic conditions are said to be ideal for the growing of vegetables in this district. The heavy fogs near the coast, together with the excellent condition of the soil, assure heavy crops.

Wells furnish water for irrigation, a bountiful supply being found at less than 150 feet. The supply is ample and the pumping plants dot the entire district within a radius of several miles of Guadalupe. The town of Guadalupe, on the main line of the Southern Pacific, lies nine miles west of Santa Maria, which is the principal town of the Santa Maria Valley, and is situated on the State highway midway between Los Angeles and San Francisco.

A small acreage of garden peas, garden beans and tomatoes has been planted this season. The ranchers are showing excellent judgment and are careful not to wear out the soil with the constant growing of lettuce alone, but are following with beans and other crops.

Plans are under way for the planting of tomatoes here in large quantities for the commercial market. Tomatoes have not been grown here to any great extent, in the past, but to judge from various trials, it is thought they would prove a successful crop.

The dairy industry has been developed to a large extent in this section within the past twelve months. As a result, one creamery plant has been erected in Santa Maria by the Knudsen Company of Los Angeles and the contract has been let for the building of a $60,000 plant at Guadalupe by the Golden State Company.

A number of dairy herds have been developed in the Santa Maria Valley in the past few years and stockmen are constantly adding to their present holdings. Stockmen in this community have been fortunate in that they have escaped the foot-and-mouth epidemic. With the addition of scores of private pumping plants in the valley a large acreage of alfalfa has been planted within the past year. The two new creameries are expected to furnish a much better market for dairy products here than has existed in the past and other ranchers are expected to turn their attention from the growing of beans and barley to the dairy industry.

A survey is under way at the present time by engineers secured by the Santa Maria Valley Chamber of Commerce to ascertain the feasibility of forming an irrigation district in this section. Inspections of various damsites have been made by the engineers and the committee in charge, but the final report will not be ready until September or October.

A gravity system of irrigation, furnishing an abundant supply of water to the thousands of acres in the valley, would result in a wonderful development along agricultural lines, proponents of the plan declare.

Novel Southland Motor Trips

Conducted by Charles Owens

Griffith Park is our terra incognito, our darkest Africa. Except for the far-faring small boy, the ubiquitous maid in khaki, and the heated golfers on the fringe of this great reserve, Griffith Park might as well be in fartherest China, so far as the generality of Angelenos is concerned.

Therefore, when The Times rotogravure pilot and artist invites you on a tour of the park, he is by way of making you an adventurer into the dark. He asks you to see Los Angeles first.

Yet, within the bounds of this many-thousand-acre park are things of interest, a zoo for the little ones, camp grounds for all, tennis courts, to say nothing of the municipal golf course, an old Spanish lime kiln, an adobe or two, far vistas, beautiful trees, purling brooks, wild life, and Bee Rock.

Now Bee Rock, if a hundred miles from the city, would be notable. It is a great lift of rock, honeycombed in past times by the elements, from which long views of the San Fernando and other valleys may be obtained. It is called Bee Rock for the reason that years ago the thousand holes of this rock were filled with hives. A few remain, but not many.

This rock is but a twenty-minute walk from the automobile road which winds for fourteen miles through the park from the Western-avenue to the river entrance, or vice versa. It is a trip every Angeleno should take, and for tourists it is recommended as showing them much of the Southland in little.

Tuberous Rooted Begonias

For creating a show in shady places throughout the summer and fall months, tuberous rooted begonias are by far the finest flowers in existence. They should in no way be confused with the common fibrous rooted or border begonias. The tuberous rooted begonias that we are offering produce giant flowers, averaging from three to five inches in diameter and rival the finest camellias in texture and form. These flowers are produced in wondrous profusion and are very striking in their brilliancy of color.

Single Frilled Type

The flowers in this class are quite novel in form. The inflorescence at the base of the petals seems to give the flower a winged appearance like some giant butterfly of the most brilliant hue. In this type we can supply the following colors: Brilliant scarlet, salmon pink, rich crimson, deep orange, canary yellow and pure white.—Price $3.00 per dozen.

Double or Camellia Flowered Type

The flowers in this particular type are beautifully formed, full petaled and wax-like in appearance and look for all the world like a giant camellia. In this class we have the following colors: Rose, canary yellow, salmon, rich scarlet and pure white.—Price $2.50 per dozen.

Giant Single Type

The largest of all begonias, quite distinct from the double or frilled types. In this type we have white, yellow, scarlet, pink, crimson and orange. —Price $2.50 per dozen.

The above begonias are strong plants in three-inch pots and will make a splendid display this summer.

Cultural notes: All of these begonias should be planted in a shady or semi-shaded location in a well drained soil and given enough water to keep the ground moist at all times. After the growth is well started, a mulch of fertilizer should be placed on the surface of the ground, being careful not to have this come in direct contact with the plants.

(When ordering by mail, 15c extra per dozen is required for postage.)

FOUND RICHES IN "FOOL NOTION" OF IMMIGRANT; LAUGHED-AT ENTHUSIAST BACKED BY FARMER

WHEN August Pagan of Highland, Ill., drove his wagon home one day in 1885 from St Louis, he carried with him an idea that was to bring prosperity to the "new Switzerland" surrounding Highland and make at least one of his neighbors a multi-millionaire.

The idea was carried in the brain of John Myenberg, a newly arrived Swiss immigrant, whom he found a group of Swiss dairy farmers badgering in a saloon because of his "funny notion he could make milk keep sweet." Everybody knew it was the nature of milk to sour and any "Schweiser" who tried to make them believe he could prevent it just made them laugh, they said.

August Pagan was a vineyardist, not a dairy farmer, and so he listened without laughing to the enthusiastic Myenberg's assertion he could do what had never been done before. As to whether there was anything in Myenberg's idea or not, Pagan did not pretend to say. But Myenberg said he needed lots of milk to experiment with and Pagan knew that was what he would find on the farms around Highland.

And so, writes F. A. Behlmer in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, John Myenberg arrived at Highland in the high-wheeled farm wagon of August Pagan. And that is why the world now has evaporated milk that keeps sweet anywhere and for any length of time, and also why, one might say, Louis Latzer, farmer, when he died a little while ago on the farm where he was born seventy-five years before, left an estate appraised at $2,000,000, to say nothing of the $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 he gave away.

Money Backs Belief

CONDENSATION of milk was not a new thing. But the trouble was that condensed milk did not keep any better than milk that had not been condensed. Not much better, anyway. What was needed was a formula that would make it keep. Myenberg said he had that.

Latzer was not a milk farmer, but his successful handling of the rich acres accumulated by his father, a Tyrolean immigrant, had made him at 36 one of the prominent men of the community. Also he was one of the best educated. He had gone through the grade school at Highland, had a farm in McKendree college at Lebanon and a year at the State Univeristy at Champaign. So he listened with understanding when Myenberg talked of a chemical process for preserving milk. Latzer had always had a leaning toward chemistry and that may have made him more inclined toward trying out Myenberg's idea.

As a result of Latzer's interest a stock company of business men and farmers was formed with $15,000 capital. An old mill building was acquired, machinery installed and condensation started. Trouble began also. Myenberg's idea was good as far as it went, but it didn't go far enough. It couldn't be depended on. Some batches of the company's output kept very well, other batches not at all. Sometimes carloads of it came back to the factory spoiled.

The "told you so" crowd had their day and the timid stockholders pulled out and quit. Louis Latzer and a few others had faith enough not only to stay in, but to increase the capital to $50,000.

A Battle With Bacilli

LATZER and his associates realized that their fight was with the bacilli that soured sweet milk, but they didn't understand just how to combat them. Dr. Werner Schmidt, village physician, was an expert chemist as well as doctor. Latzer and two others engaged him to teach them chemistry. The other two soon became discouraged and dropped out. In the meantime the company reached such financial straits that it could pay its bills and meet its payroll only by giving shares of stock in lieu of cash. Many persons refused the substitute or accepted it with reluctance. The shares that went begging then are worth $20,000 each now.

After more heartbreaking months of costly experimenting Latzer and Schmidt decided that if the milk could be evaporated in a vacuum and sealed hot the bacilli would be foiled and the milk keep indefinitely as long as it remained sealed. That proved the solution of their problem and from then on they had only to perfect the means for doing the work.

SERGEANT IS ARTIST FOR THE AMERICAN ARMY; EXPERTLY DESIGNS ITS INSIGNIA AND CRESTS

IN Washington there is a hard-boiled Army sergeant who, it is said, can embroider more expertly than any of the capital city fair sex. Sergt. Edward C. Kuhn, who has designed the original coat of arms for every National Guard regiment in the United States, is listed as expert draftsman at his post in the coast artillery service, but as a side line he has woven intricate tapestries and created beautiful water colors, oils and pastels of the scenes in various parts of the world to which his service in the Army has taken him.

Twenty-six years in United States Army posts in Cuba, Porto Rico, Panama, the Philippines and all sections of the United States have taught Kuhn all tricks of the soldier's trade and have forestalled accusations of effeminancy on account of his "fancywork." Trained as an artist, Sergt. Kuhn used the soldiers' rough-and-ready skill with the needle to create a tapestry of the national coat of arms, which is valued at from $7500 to $10,000. For fourteen years he toiled in spare time on the thirty-nine square feet of intricate weave, and evolved a piece of work which would be the equivalent of two years of a craftsman's effort.

Kuhn had his first ambition for a career in art when he was a sawmill laborer in a lumber camp in New York State. Five nights a week Kuhn, after his ten-hour shift with the cant hook, would catch the train for Buffalo, where he attended art school. The limited train did not stop at Kuhn's village. He had to leave the train five miles up the line at a junction and walk home. Five nights of the seven he crawled between his blankets later than 1 o'clock in the morning, and was up again and at work in the sawmill at 7 o'clock.

For a half-year the youthful woodsman-artist lived up to his strength-racking schedule and mastered the rudiments of the culture which he coveted, the Washington Star says. Then the Spanish-American War broke out and Kuhn enlisted in the New York State volunteers.

Stationed near New York City for several years after the Spanish-American War, Kuhn devoted all his leisure to studying art under the direction of George De Forest Brush, one of America's modern masters.

Kuhn learned much from George Brush about art. His regiment was transferred to Massachusetts. The first day he could obtain leave he went to Boston, where he met Eric Pape, a notable illustrator, and arranged to continue his art work under Pape's supervision. A year later Kuhn was sent to Portland, Me. There he joined the Portland Art League.

Finally he was stationed at Fort Hamilton, N. Y. The captain of the company, becoming interested in Kuhn's art efforts, asked the soldier to design an appropriate coat of arms and insignia for the company. After some study of company records and reference books on heraldry, Kuhn produced designs which so pleased the officer that he showed them to the colonel of the regiment. The colonel immediately asked Kuhn to work out insignia and crest and coat of arms for the regiment. This assignment so interested the soldier in heraldry that he made a thorough and painstaking study of flags, escutcheons, crests and coats of arms.

After the World War Sergt. Kuhn was assigned to a post in the coast artillery service in Washington, where he has been stationed since. He designs all the insignia and coats of arms for the various branches of the national military service.

Summer Night

The red gold moon through the cottonwood trees,
The soft cool feel of the summer nights' breeze;

The night blue stream flows by our side,
And dropped leaves on its bosom ride;

Across my cheek a wisp of hair,
The smell of sagebrush nestles there;

Though Time but one such moment holds
Its memories all Life's grief enfolds.

THE CHANGING NUMBERS

wants," said Mr. Sims valiantly. "He'll get his head broke one of these days."

Mr. Gunnill acquiesced. "I remember when I was on the Peewit," he said, musingly, "one time when we were lying at Cardiff, there was a policeman there run one of our chaps in, and two nights afterward another of our chaps pushed the policeman down in the mud and ran off with his staff and his helmet."

Miss Gunnill's eyes glistened. "What happened?" she inquired.

"He had to leave the force," replied her father; "he couldn't stand the disgrace of it. The chap that pushed him over was quite a little chap, too. About the size of Herbert here."

Mr. Sims started.

"Very much like him in face, too," pursued Mr. Gunnill; "daring chap he was."

Miss Gunnill sighed. "I wish he lived in Littlestow," she said slowly. "I'd give anything to take that horrid Mrs. Cooper down a bit. Cooper would be the laughing-stock of the town."

Messrs. Sims and Drill looked unhappy. It was hard to have to affect an attitude of indifference in the face of Miss Gunnill's lawless yearnings; to stand before her as respectable and law-abiding cravens. Her eyes, large and sorrowful, dwelt on them both.

"If I—I only get a chance at Cooper!" murmured Mr. Sims vaguely.

To his surprise, Mr. Gunnill started up from his chair and, gripping his hand, shook it fervently. He looked around, and Selina was regarding him with a glance so tender that he lost his head completely. Before he had recovered he had pledged himself to lay the helmet and truncheon of the redoubtable Mr. Cooper at the feet of Miss Gunnill; exact date not specified.

"Of course, I shall have to wait my opportunity," he said at last.

"You wait as long as you like, my boy," said the thoughtless Mr. Gunnill.

Mr. Sims thanked him.

"Wait till Cooper's an old man," urged Mr. Drill.

Miss Gunnill, secretly disappointed at the lack of boldness and devotion on the part of the latter gentleman, eyed his stalwart frame indignantly and accused him of trying to make Mr. Sims as timid as himself. She turned to the valiant Sims and made herself so agreeable to that daring blade that Mr. Drill, a prey to violent jealousy, made the company a curt good-night and withdrew.

He stayed away for nearly a week, and then one evening as he approached the house, carrying a carpet bag, he saw the door just opening to admit the fortunate Herbert. He quickened his pace and arrived just in time to follow him in. Mr. Sims, who bore under his arm a brown paper parcel, seemed somewhat embarrassed at seeing him, and after a brief greeting, walked into the room, and with a triumphant glance at Mr. Gunnill and Selina, placed his burden on the table.

"You—you ain't got it?" said Mr. Gunnill, leaning forward.

"How foolish of you to run such a risk!" said Selina.

"I brought it for Miss Gunnill," said the young man, simply. He unfastened the parcel, and to the astonishment of all present, revealed a policeman's helmet and a short boxwood truncheon.

"You—you're a wonder," said the gloating Mr. Gunnill. "Look at it, Ted."

Mr. Drill was looking at it; it may be doubted whether the head of Mr. Cooper itself could have caused him more astonishment. Then his eyes sought those of Mr. Sims, but that gentleman was gazing tenderly at the gratified but shocked Selina.

"How ever did you do it?" inquired Mr. Gunnill.

"Came behind him and threw him down," said Mr. Sims, nonchalantly. "He was that scared I believe I could have taken his boots as well if I'd wanted them."

Mr. Gunnill patted him on the back. "I fancy I can see him running bareheaded through the town calling for help," he said, smiling.

Mr. Sims shook his head. "Like as not it'll be kept quiet for the credit of the force," he said, slowly, "unless, of course, they discover who did it."

A slight shade fell on the good-humored countenance of Mr. Gunnill, but it was chased away almost immediately by Sims reminding him of the chaff of Cooper's brother-constables.

"And you might take the other away," said Mr. Gunnill, brightening; "you might keep on doing it."

Mr. Sims said doubtfully that he might, but pointed out that Cooper would probably be on his guard for the future.

"Yes, you've done your share," said Miss Gunnill, with a half glance at Mr. Drill, who was still gazing in a bewildered fashion at the trophies. "You can come into the kitchen and help me draw some beer if you like."

Mr. Sims followed her joyfully, and reaching down a jug for her watched her tenderly as she drew the beer. All women love valor, but Miss Gunnill, gazing sadly at the slight figure of Mr. Sims, could not help wishing that Mr. Drill possessed a little of his spirit.

She had just finished her task when a tremendous bumping noise was heard in the living-room, and the plates on the dresser were nearly shaken off their shelves.

"What's that?" she cried.

They ran to the room and stood aghast in the doorway at the spectacle of Mr. Gunnill, with his clenched fists held tightly by his side, bounding into the air with all the grace of a trained acrobat, while Mr. Drill encouraged him from an easy-chair. Mr. Gunnill smiled broadly as he met this astonished gaze and with a final bound kicked something along the floor and subsided into his seat panting.

Mr. Sims, suddenly enlightened, uttered a cry of dismay and, darting under the table, picked up what had once been a policeman's helmet. Then he snatched a partially-consumed truncheon from the fire and stood white and trembling before the astonished Mr. Gunnill.

"What's the matter?" inquired the latter.

"You—you've spoilt 'em," gasped Mr. Sims.

"What of it?" said Mr. Gunnill, staring.

"I was—going to take 'em away," stammered Mr. Sims.

"Well, they'll be easier to carry now," said Mr. Drill, simply.

Mr. Sims glanced at hm sharply, and then, to the extreme astonishment of Mr. Gunnill, snatched up the relics and, wrapping them up in the paper, dashed out of the house. Mr. Gunnill turned a look of blank inquiry upon Mr. Drill.

"It wasn't Cooper's number on the helmet," said that gentleman.

"Eh?" shouted Mr. Gunnill.

"How do you know?" inquired Selina.

"I just happened to notice," replied Mr. Drill.

He reached down as though to take up the carpet-bag which he had placed by the side of his chair, and then, apparently thinking better of it, leaned back in his seat and eyed Mr. Gunnill.

"Do you mean to tell me," said the latter, "that he's been and upset the wrong man?"

Mr. Drill shook his head. "That's the puzzle," he said, softly.

He smiled over at Miss Gunnill, but that young lady, who found him somewhat mysterious, looked away and frowned. Her father sat and exhausted conjecture, his final conclusion being that Mr. Sims had attacked the first policeman that had come in his way and was now suffering the agonies of remorse.

He raised his head sharply at the sound of hurried footsteps outside. There was a smart rap at the street door, then the handle was turned, and the next moment, to the dismay of all present, the red and angry face of one of Mr. Cooper's brother-constables was thrust into the room.

Mr. Gunnill gazed at it in helpless fascination. The body of the constable, garbed in plain clothes, followed the face and, standing before him in a menacing fashion, held out a broken helmet and staff.

"Have you seen these afore?" he inquired in a terrible voice.

"No," said Mr. Gunnill, with an attempt at surprise. "What are they?"

"I'll tell you what they are," said Police Constable Jenkins ferociously, "they're my helmet and truncheon. You've been spoiling His Majesty's property, and you'll be locked up."

"Yours?" said the astonished Mr. Gunnill.

"I lent 'em to young Sims just for a joke," said the constable. "I felt all along I was doing a silly thing."

"It's no joke," said Mr. Gunnill, severely. "I'll tell young Herbert what I think of him trying to deceive me like that."

"Never mind about deceiving," interrupted the constable. "What are you going to do about it?"

[illegible] inquired Mr. Gunnill, [illegible] "It seems to me it's between you and him; you'll very likely be dismissed from the force, and all through trying to deceive. I wash my hands of it."

"You'd no business to lend it," said Drill, interrupting the constable's indignant retort, "especially for Sims to pretend that he had stolen it from Cooper. It's a roundabout sort of thing, but you can't tell of Mr. Gunnill without getting into trouble yourself."

"I shall have to put up with that," said the constable desperately. "It's got to be explained. It's my day helmet, too, and the night one's as shabby as can be. Twenty years in the force and never a mark against my name till now."

"If you'd only keep quiet a bit instead of talking so much," said Mr. Drill, who had been doing some hard thinking, "I might be able to help you, p'r'aps."

"How?" inquired the constable.

"Help him if you can, Ted," said Mr. Gunnill, eagerly; "we ought all to help others when we get a chance."

Mr. Drill sat bolt upright and looked very wise.

He took the smashed helmet from the table and examined it carefully. It was broken in at least half a dozen places, and he labored in vain to push it into shape. He might as well have tried to make a silk hat out of a concertina. The only thing that had escaped injury was the metal plate with the number.

"Why don't you mend it?" he inquired at last.

"Mend it?" shouted the incensed Mr. Jenkins. "Why don't you?"

"I think I could," said Mr. Drill slowly; "give me half an hour in the kitchen and I'll try."

"Have as long as you like," said Mr. Gunnill.

"And I shall want some glue, and Miss Gunnill and some tin tacks," said Drill.

"What do you want me for?" inquired Selina.

"To hold the things for me," replied Mr. Drill.

Miss Gunnill tossed her head, but after a little demur consented; and Drill, ignoring the impatience of the constable, picked up his bag and led the way into the kitchen. Messrs. Gunnill and Jenkins, left behind in the living-room, sought for some neutral topic of discourse, but in vain; conversation would revolve round hard labor and lost pensions.

From the kitchen came sounds of hammering, then a loud "Oo!" from Miss Gunnill, followed by a burst of laughter and a clapping of hands. Mr. Jenkins shifted in his seat and exchanged glances with Mr. Gunnill.

"He's a clever fellow," said that gentleman hopefully. "You should hear him imitate a canary; life-like it is."

Mr. Jenkins was about to make a hasty and obvious rejoinder, when the kitchen door opened and Selina emerged, followed by Drill. The snarl which the constable had prepared died away in a murmur of astonishment as he took the helmet. It looked as good as ever.

He turned it over and over in amaze, and looked in vain for any signs of the disastrous cracks. It was stiff and upright. He looked at the number; it was his own. His eyes round with astonishment, he tried it on, and then his face relaxed.

"It don't fit as well as it did," he said.

"Well, upon my word, some people are never satisfied," said the indignant Drill. "There isn't another man in England could have done it better."

"I'm not grumbling," said the constable, hastily; "it's a wonderful piece o' work. Wonderful! I can't even see where it was broke. How on earth did you do it?"

Drill shook his head. "It's a secret process," he said, slowly. "I might want to go into the hat trade some day, and I'm not going to give things away."

"Quite right," said Mr. Jenkins. "Still—well, it's a marvel, that's what it is; a fair marvel. If you take my advice you'll go in the hat trade tomorrow, my lad."

"I'm not surprised," said Mr. Gunnill, whose face as he spoke was a map of astonishment. "Not a bt. I've seen him do more surprising things than that. Have a go at the staff now, Teddy."

"I'll see about it," said Mr. Drill, modestly. "I can't do impossibilities. You leave it here, Mr. Jenkins, and we'll talk about it later on."

Mr. Jenkins, still marveling over his helmet, assented, and, after another reference to the possibilities in the hat trade to a man with a born gift for repairs, wrapped his property in a piece of newspaper and departed whistling.

"Ted," said Mr. Gunnill impressively, as [illegible]

[illegible] "He is very clever," said Selina, with a broad smile.

Miss Gunnill cast down her eyes and Mr. Drill had just plucked up sufficient courage to take her hand when footsteps stopped at the house.

"Don't tell me it's a failure," said Mr. Gunnill, starting from his chair. "You must have been handling it roughly. It was as good as new when you took it away."

Mr. Jenkins waved him away and fixed his eyes upon Drill.

"You think you're mighty clever, I dare say," he said, grimly; "but I can put two and two together. I've just heard of it."

"Heard of two and two?" said Drill, looking puzzled.

"I don't want any of your nonsense," said Mr. Jenkins. "I'm not on duty now; but I warn you not to say anything that may be used against you."

"I never do," said Mr. Drill, piously.

"Somebody threw a handful o' flour in poor Cooper's face a couple of houfs ago," said Mr. Jenkins, watching him closely, "and while he was getting it out of his eyes they upset him and made off with his helmet and truncheon. I just met Brown and he say Cooper's been going on like a madman."

"By Jove! it's a good job I mended your helmet for you," said Mr. Drill, "or else they might have suspected you."

Mr. Jenkins stared at him. "I know who did do it," he said, significantly.

"Herbert Sims?" guessed Mr. Drill, in a stage whisper.

"You'll be one o' the first to know," said Mr. Jenkins darkly; "he'll be arrested tomorrow. Fancy the impudence of it! It's shocking."

Mr. Drill whistled. "Well, don't let that little affair o' yours with Sims be known," l said quietly. "Have that kept quiet—if you can."

Mr. Jenkins started as though he had been stung. In the joy of a case he had overlooked one or two things. He turned and regarded the young man wistfully.

"Don't call on me as a witness, that's all," continued Mr. Drill. "I never was a mischief-maker, and I shouldn't like to have to tell how you lent your helmet to Sims so that he could pretend he had knocked Cooper down and taken it from him."

"Wouldn't look at all well," said Gunnill, nodding his head sagely.

Mr. Jenkins breathed hard and looked from one to the other. It was plain that it was no good reminding them that he had not had a case for five years.

"When I say that I know who did it," he said slowly, "I mean that I have my suspicions."

"Ah!" said Mr. Drill, "that's a very different thing."

"Nothing like the same," said Mr. Gunnill, pouring the constable a glass of ale.

"Sims needn't know anything about that helmit being repaired," Jenkins said.

"No," said Drill, looking puzzled.

"Anything that's worth doing at all is worth doing well," continued the constable, "and while I'm drinking another glass with Mr. Gunnill here, suppose you go into the kitchen with that useful bag o' yours and finish repairing my truncheon."

A Page Conducted By John Steven McGroarty

Here is a Lesson From Young John D.

THERE awhile back, one night not long ago when we had nothing better to do, we picked up a newspaper and were reading through it carelessly and aimlessly enough until we came across a piece that impressed us deeply.

There was a piece in the paper which said that young John D. Rockefeller had given a million dollars to restore the war-ruined cathedral of Rheims.

Well, sir, while it is not uncommon for a rich man to give away a million dollars for one purpose or another, this seemed to us to be out of the ordinary. And the reason that it seemed out of the ordinary was that the cathedral of Rheims is a Catholic church, and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is a high elder in the Baptist Church. What struck us at the moment was the thought that you wouldn't find a Baptist every day who would give a million dollars to restore a Catholic church. And as far as that goes, you wouldn't find a Catholic every day who would give a million dollars to restore a Baptist church, either.

But, on the other hand, as the saying is, now and then you will find a man who is in tune with life. A man whose soul is near to God. Men whose spirits are in harmony with the music of the spheres—yes, now and then we find them, and God be thanked for it.

It was perfectly consistent for young Mr. Rockefeller to do this thing. What he did was to restore beauty; to re-create a great and noble landmark of history. It mattered not at all what sign or symbol with which the monument was marked. Had it been a Mohammedan mosque or a pagan temple of Apollo, young John D. would have been just as consistent in giving the million dollars that he gave for Rheims. Beauty is universal and belongs to no one sect or creed. And the landmarks of human history are the heritage of all mankind.

After we had read the piece we went out from our little high house in the hills and stood wonderingly and reverently under the great listening stars of the heavens. And in the distance we could see the lights of the pleasant town of San Fernando in the midst of which stands the ruins of an old Franciscan Mission builded in the long ago by the patient hands of Indian neophytes and the tireless industry of the brown-robed, wandering brothers of St Francis. It is, too, a landmark of history, and it was once a thing of surpassing beauty. Now it is in ruin and decay waiting the hand of some great-souled man or sweet-souled woman to re-create its beauty and restore its roofs and arches.

And we thought then as we stood under the great stars of the high heavens of all the men and women there are in California whose hearts must be grateful to the Lord God of the Ages for all that was done for them in this beautiful land in the days gone by. And we wondered if the time would ever come when they would join hands together and restore to their lost beauty and their great memories the fallen roofs of the ruined Franciscan Missions that crumble in the wind and the rain and the sun along the golden stretches of the King's Highway between San Diego's Harbor of the Sun and Sonoma in the Valley of the Seven Moons.

The Mormon Monument to The Sea Gulls

OUR neighbor in the green Verdugo Hills, the man we call The Prowler, having just returned from what seemed to be a long journey, had much to tell the neighbors a few nights ago when they were all gathered together in the little gray house in the hollow that has the lilac bush in front of it and the two big rocks behind.

And there is nothing so interesting or so fascinating as travelers' tales. Even now when there are railways and automobiles and airships and everything like that, the tales of travelers are as interesting as they were in the old times when men went about on foot or, at best, in ox-carts or on the backs of horses.

And it turned out that this, the latest adventure of The Prowler, took him a far way indeed. You might not believe it, but he went clear to Salt Lake City in his little old battered flivver and never lost a minute either going or coming except to stop once in a while for gas and oil and water, or maybe to put a little air in the tires.

Well, it would take up too much of the time of the synagogue this blessed Sabbath morning to relate all the tales that The Prowler had to tell the neighbors this night when they were gathered together in the little gray house in the hollow in the green Verdugo Hills. And so, we can only speak of one thing that he considered the most wonderful of the sights that his eyes had beheld on the journey. And this, according to The Prowler himself, was the monument of the Sea Gulls that he saw in Salt Lake City. And this is the story of it:

When the Mormon pioneers had migrated into the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, three-quarters of a century ago, they had planted a meager crop of wheat upon the harvesting of which their very lives depended. They had worked hard and their hopes were high for the harvest. But along in the summer when the brown desert land had turned green with the spears of the growing wheat, the very heavens grew black with a flock of crickets, innumerable as to their numbers, and they fell upon the wheat fields like the plague of Egypt.

The Mormon men with their women and children went out into the fields in frantic effort to battle with the destroying insects. But their efforts were as those of children against a hurricane of winds. And so all they could do was to fall upon their knees and pray to the Lord God of the Ages to save them from the plague. And while they were upon their knees there came from the Great Lake in the mountains legions of white-winged sea gulls. And the sea gulls fell upon the crickets and devoured them. And the crops were saved. And the pilgrims of the desert, their wives and their children were also saved.

Whereupon, at a later day, not forgetting the mercy of the Lord, the Mormon people erected a wonderful statue, noble and beautiful, with a great granite base and a high column with a globe at the top, and upon the globe two white sea gulls with great glistening marble wings. And on the base of the monument these words were chiseled:

"Sea Gull Monument,
Erected in Grateful Remembrance of the Mercy of God to the Mormon Pioneers."

Well, sir, the neighbors were deeply impressed with this story of the monument of the sea gulls which The Prowler had seen in the stately capital of the Mormon Empire when he was away traipsing over hills and mountains and through valleys in the lure of the wanderlust that time seems to be unable to vanquish in his gypsy soul.

Faith's Creed

There are no yesterdays, only tomorrows
And glad todays, with sunny golden hours
Laden with loveliness of scented flowers,
Symbols of joy. Speak not to me of sorrows
That are not, since they live but in the mind
That harbors them, and will not let them go.
This day is God's, and thine, and mine; and so
No fairer day is there for us to find,
No other sun, than that which high above
Gives warmth and light, and blesses us with peace
Untold; and for our spirits' sure increase
No other God, than Him we know as Love.
Speak not of loveless yesterdays. Each morn
Brings to us faith and love and life, new-born.

SYDNEY KING RUSSELL.

The Ugly House That Was Made Beautiful

ON A high road that we travel frequently there was for a long time an ugly house that stood as what you might call an eyesore on the landscape.

But we have the happiness now to report to the Congregation of the Faithful and to all who sit in our far-flung synagogue between Dan and Beersheba, that the eyesore referred to is no longer in existence.

Now, you might think from this that the ugly house burned down, or that a cyclone picked it up in its mad career and scattered it to the four winds, or something like that, but this is not at all what happened.

What happened is that a man bought the ugly house because he liked the location upon which the house had been builded. So what did he and his two boys do but get out the saws and hammers, tearing the old house down and rebuilding it out of the same materials in a new way.

The man and his boys worked like Trojans on the job, but they whistled and chattered and laughed as they worked, and they seemed to be enjoying themselves immensely. They took the old boards and the old shingles and everything down and put them up again so that when they were done you saw not an ugly house, but a thing of beauty.

The old house had been builded square and squat and without the least touch of imagination or the faintest trace of any sense of beauty. Now it is like a little gabled house that you will see if you should ever wander out beyond Chutney in the green lanes of Surrey. A little English house that you would call Elizabethan. And it is as lovely and as homey-looking as a house could possibly be.

Maybe it is only a little thing to be talking about—this thing of a little ugly house being transformed into beauty—a little thing to be talking about in a big world where men are concerned with wars and leagues of nations and world politics and who shall be the next President of the United States and everything like that. And maybe in the synagogue this blessed Sabbath morning there will be many who will think it is a waste of good paper and ink for us to be making record of a thing that they might deem so trifling.

But we are of the opinion that the most important thing in the world is a house under the roof of which a family dwells. And if it be a little house, perhaps it is all the more important for that. Not that we say that big houses are unimportant. The idea we wish to convey is simply this, that the rooftree is the foundation of civilization and society. And, since this must be true, there can be no excuse for any man to dwell in an ugly house, be it big or little, when merely by the use of a hammer and a saw he can make it beautiful.

England's Scheme Might Be Good for Us

NOW that our nation is in the throes of another Presidential election, we are thinking as we have often thought before, of the fact that when we elect a President of the United States the main thing we do is to hand him a hard job and to put a heavy burden on his shoulders.

In the early days of the republic the office of President of the United States was a stately position. The nation was young and new, it was confined mainly to the Atlantic seaboard, its population was comparatively sparse, there were not many cities and none of them very large, and the President of the United States could assume that certain dignity which so well became our early chief magistrates.

But now the office of President is a purely business manager of the biggest and richest corporation on the face of the earth. The concern of which he is the head handles more money and drives a bigger trade and commerce than any other institution in existence. It deals with revenues, taxes and the distribution of immense funds and the solution of economic problems of gigantic proportions.

In England they have, we think, a better plan. There is the King who is the head of the nation, but the English do not burden the head of their nation with these nerve-wracking details of business that we shoulder on our Presidents. The King is almost wholly a figurehead, and yet he represents in his person the dignity and the power of the nation.

The English give the head of their nation leisure and time to carry out the social phases of public life. He goes about shaking hands with folks, attending receptions and reviews, making pleasant and perfectly harmless speeches.

Now, what do you think? Might it not be a good idea for us to relieve our Presidents of all this work that a good hired man could attend to so that we all might see more of them—see them happy and in good health, and not see ourselves killing them off as we have killed off the last five or six Presidents that folks who have lived to middle age can remember?

tributed, but, unfortunately all of them are governed by the fallacies of orthodox medicine. From their pamphlet concerning babies, I have taken the table printed below:

Age	FEEDING Day Every	Night No. given	Ounces for one Feeding	Ounces in 24 hours
Day
1st-4th	3 hrs.	2	1-2	10-15
5th-7th	3 hrs.	2	1-2	10-15
Week
2d	2½ hrs	2	2-2½	15-25
3d	3 hrs.	2	2-3½	15-25
4th-8th	3½ hrs.	1	2½-4	25-40
Month
3d	2½ hrs.	1	3-5	23-42
4th	3 hrs.	1	3½-5½	23-42
5th	3 hrs.	1	4-6	28-42
6th-10th	3 hrs.	0	5-8	30-45
11th	4 hrs.	0	6-9	35-45
12th	4 hrs.	0	7-9	35-45

In this issue I promised to discuss quantitative feeding. A glance at the above table shows one outstanding feature—namely, babies fed on this schedule are overfed.

There is no justification for two-hour feedings during any part of baby's lifetime, under normal health conditions; nor should a feeding be given after midnight or before dawn.

For the first two weeks baby should be fed every three hours and after that every four hours. This should be a definite feeding law.

In the above table you will note quite a flexibility in total daily consumption. This is as it should be. No two children are alike.

The quantity of milk formula to be given baby should be governed entirely by baby's reactions and by mother's intelligent observations.

If baby spits up or vomits shortly after feeding, the chances are that he has been overfed. Reduce the quantity.

If he has hiccoughs after feeding, again he is probably overfed.

If he is paunchy, with a bloated protruding abdomen, he is overfed.

If he discharges much gas and is constipated, the chances are that he is both overfed and wrongly fed. Correct the dietary, and if this does not overcome gas formation, reduce the quantity.

Remember this emphatically: Strong healthy babies are much more desirable than fat babies. Looks are of minor importance—normality of body function is of major importance.

The quantity given to baby may vary from meal to meal, or from day to day, dependent on many factors. When baby is teething, or constipated, or feverish, or cross, or restless, he does not need as much food. When he has recovered, increase his ration.

Never force food into him. His body knows more than all our combined knowledge, and more than all the books ever printed. If he refuses food which he normally took, calmly set it aside and wait until his next feeding time.

Millions of babies are wrongly fed. One can go through a lifetime of practice and scarcely find one underfed. Wrong feeding and overfeeding constitute the great curse of babyhood.

Next week we shall continue along the lines of baby feeding.

A ROMANCE OF THE WAR

BY J. A. GRAVES

FOR some twenty years prior to 1917, there lived with us, at our home in Alhambra, an aged colored man named George Edwards. He followed us up from Terminal Island one time after we had spent the summer there, and, somehow or other, he just stayed with us. He was a typical Tennessee darkey, tall, good-looking; had been a slave; a carpenter by profession; quite handy at general jobs, willing, obedient, and grateful for kind treatment.

When automobiles came in vogue, I turned over to him one of my buggy animals, "Eliza Cook," and he drove her in a buggy, going for the mail and attending to various errands for the family. Finally, Eliza Cook gave out. Her ankles would no longer sustain her weight, and we had a veterinary put her out of her misery. I then bought a good-looking sorrel horse for George, which he used as a substitute for Eliza.

When the war broke out, my son-in-law, Mr. E. S. Armstrong, went to New Jersey as one of the managers of a large ammunition factory there. My daughter, Mrs. Armstong, and her children, stayed with us. Two of the children, Kittie and Betty, were small girls at that time. It was their delight to ride in the buggy with old George. He would take them to the postoffice and to market, and allow them to drive Joe, the new horse. One morning George died suddenly, without pain, from apoplexy; and he lies buried in our family plot in the San Gabriel Cemetery.

Having no use for Joe, I wrote to the army officials at Los Angeles, telling them that I had a good horse which I would be glad to donate to the government. The offer was accepted, and Lieut. James Irvine, who was in charge of the cavalry forces at the Balloon Station at Arcadia, came for Joe. Kittie and Betty, my grandchildren, wept copiously when Joe left us. Frequently, Lieut. Irvine would ride over from the Balloon Station and chat with the children about Joe. He thought a good deal of the horse. Finally the men under his command went to France, and Joe went with them. For a time, letters came to Kittie and Betty from Lieut. Irvine, about Joe and his war experiences. Then we heard from him no more and thought he had met the fate of many another brave American.

What was the astonishment of Mrs. Graves, however, a few days ago, to have a call from Lieut. Irvine accompanied by a charming French lady, whom he had married, and their little child. He is now vice-president and general manager of the Mexican States line of steamers, English owned, and plying between California points, Mexico and Central America. He informed us that Joe had proved to be a wonderful horse. He simply gloried in the strife of battle. Neither a battery of guns, nor bursting shells, nor scattering shots, nor cannon balls, had the slightest effect upon his nerves, and he came through the strife unscathed.

Lieut. Irvine was not so fortunate. He was gassed, and at the hospital where he was treated were a French lady and her daughter, nursing the soldiers. The daughter he subsequently married. The mother has a landed estate in France and Joe, whom we presented to the government, is now in her possession and in honored retirement. He must be now some 14 or 15 years of age. Thousands and thousands of the best blooded horses of Kentucky went over the seas, during the war, and if reports are true, the average life of any horse in the war was two weeks—and yet, "our Joe" came through safely.

PARIAH'S MONEY IS NOT UNCLEAN

British law in India administers impartially to Hindu and Pariah alike, yet the enormous power and prestige of centuries of Brahman domination survive.

Thus it is still a common sight to see a Pariah indicating to the bazaar shopkeeper, from a safe, undefilable distance, the goods he wishes to purchase. The goods are then placed in the middle of the street and the money in a receptacle, which is claimed after the unclean purchaser has removed himself to a safe distance. The fact that the money recently handled by the Pariah and carried on his unclean person may be safely used is one of those many anomalies that pester the observer in India.

Moreover, for all its impartiality, British law is necessarily administered by Indian judges and juries. It is here that the Parah tacitly is made to realize that, despite British law, his countrymen find ways and means of interpreting or reading into it the ancient Hindu laws of Manu. It is in this extra-juridicial way, by the sheer weight of ingrained custom and prejudice.

"Stars That Fall"

When silvery streams fall upon the bay
And the summer winds sigh, then laugh and play
My thoughts drift back to the days of old
Till the vision I see is one of gold.

With the moonlight beaming across the field,
The clouds drifting slowly, but not to shield,
A little star, in yon heavenly blue
That fell, twixt the night and the morning dew,

To a higher place, where the red moon rose,
Away, far off, only the Master knows,
To shine forever, as it did one night,
Just free from the clouds that would hide its light.

My Rendezvous

I have a rendezvous with love
When toil is o'er at close of day,
Across the fields of new mown hay
And deep-ploughed furrows marging corn;
I have a rendezvous with love
Beneath the roof where I was born.

The clinging hands and childish fears,
The days of joy and nights of tears
Have blended soul and hearts in one
Till naught annoys. I lift mine eyes
And see thro' ever-changing skies
The smile of God, when day is done;
And like the winging, homing dove
I seek my rendezvous with love.

AVOID GAS AFTER EATING

Bloating and distention of the abdomen, drowsiness after eating, pressure and pain around the heart, hands and feet cold and numb, nervousness, are the more common symptoms of this torment—gas.

All is due to the fermenting of food in the stomach.

Physicians state that the best absorbent they have found for this foul gas is Hylands No. 10 Gastritis. These little tablets also quickly relieve the pain and distress that come after eating.

If people would only give some attention to their diet and carry these wonderful tablets for emergency use, they would quickly find that many of these ailments and symptoms would permanently disappear.

Suffered For 25 Years

Miss Louise H. Young of Braddock Park, Boston, had practically despaired of life when some kind friend told her of INNER CLEAN. Read her interesting story:

"I was for 35 years a sufferer from Varicose veins (hereditary) and had made up my mind to have my legs cut off, as I could no longer endure the pain and mental worry. After having taken the third package, I am a well woman today. The best doctors in Boston—high-priced ones—had given me up to die. I shall tell the world what INNER CLEAN has done for me."

This remarkable unsolicited testimonial for Prof. Arnold Ehret's wonderful new remedy, INNER CLEAN, is only one of hundreds received almost daily.

Varicose veins are due to constipation of the entire circulatory system. Prof. Arnold Ehret's INNER CLEAN, successfully removes from the system, age-old uneliminated substances produced through the eating of wrong foods of modern civilization. As soon as the intestines are cleansed by INNER CLEAN, of the disease-producing, retained masses of feces, the blood stream throughout the entire system becomes purified.

The foundational cause of all sickness and disease is ONE. Indigestion, nervousness, headache, boils, general run-down condition, rheumatism and gout can all be traced directly to a clogged condition of the bowels.

Prof. Ehret's INNER CLEAN is a perfect blend of aromatic herbs exercising an entirely new principle of action on the digestive organs. Prof. Ehret is the originator of the Mucusless Diet Healing System.

Most Just Among Moslems

By Achmed Abdullah

Illustrated by Ralph C. Criswell

A Brilliant, Haunting Tale of a Parisian Love-Affair That Terminated on the Mysterious Street of the Lizard

"A NAIVE worshiper at the shrine of self," old Mademoiselle Marie de Tourcoing used to characterize her nephew, the Marquis Roger de Villemot. "The sort who is jealous when he sees a pretty woman whom he doesn't know stroll down the boulevards with a man whom he doesn't know either. Pathological? A—what's that new word—a complex? No, no. Simply a virulent form of the disease called youth—"

Sidi Mahmoud Chedli, on the other hand, was more metaphorical in his judgment, being an Arab; also, by the same token of race and faith, was he less tolerant. After he had arranged with some of his household for an alibi which would confound even the chilly logic of a French prosecuting attorney, he said quite casually to his negro pipe-servant:

"Tell me, Zaid! Where is the religion of robbers? Where is the forebearance of a fool? Where is the affection of a courtesan? Where is the truth of a liar?"

"The All-Merciful alone knows," Zaid mumbled piously.

"There are moments," smiled Sidi Mahmoud, "when I wonder if the All-Merciful does know."

Then, very calmly, he sent for Leila Fathouma, his youngest wife.

He was sure that, this last half hour, she had been behind the brocaded curtains which divided the reception salon from the haremlik. For this was a Moslem house. No privacy was here for either joy or despair.

"Ask her to come, fearing naught," he added.

The negro salaamed. "Listen is obey, yah Sidi."

"I shall wait for her on the balcony."

He stepped out.

Always, at sunset, he would stand here and look over the town, drinking in its beauty, its peace and its mazed riddles. It had developed into a habit, a daily episode, almost a rite which had become stronger as he had grown older; and he hated to have his habits upset—as Roger de Villemot had upset them a few minutes earlier.

"Allah!" He shrugged his shoulders with rather ungracious resignation.

Presently Fathouma would come. Then he would have to chide her—

He leaned over the balcony.

The chammach, the guardian of the synagogue, happened to look up. Both men smiled, bowed. They exchanged courteous greetings.

"May the All-Merciful bless thy feastings, Oh, son of Israel!"

"May thy destiny be as honey in thy mouth, Oh, most just among Moslems!"

Again Sidi Mahmoud watched the coiling throng of Algerian and Moroccan Jews in festive garb; the older men in the statuesque simplicity of turbans and swathing gehchebiah robes, the younger aping Piccadilly and Rotten Row.

He tried to smile; tried to forget the task which would be his when Fathouma came to him; tried to force himself to enjoy the motley scene at his feet: the triumphant shouts of "yoo-yoo-yoo;" the riot of the vendors of kous-kous, and bread dusted with anise and poppy seeds, and sugared drinks, clanging their metal cups and plates and yelling out the nature and quality and price of their wares.

Once more Sidi Mahmoud bowed courteously as from the synagogue, accompanied by a dozen Talmudists, came an old rabbi.

The latter raised both hands in sign of blessing.

"Jahveh's mercy on thy head, Oh, most just among Moslems!"

"Amen, Oh, teacher in Israel!"

It was not that Sidi Mahmoud Chedli loved Jews. But years ago he had been educated in Paris, where he had steeped himself in European wisdom and ideals. Unconscious of his ethical limitations, he prided himself on his lack of mediaeval prejudices; liked to think of himself as thoroughly Westernized, thoroughly modernized.

And it was, if not exactly this quality as such, then at least the interesting result of this quality which had attracted the Marquis de Villemot to the middle-aged Arab who, though not good looking, wore that inalienable stamp called pedigree and blood.

They had met during one of the Arab's periodic visits to Paris, and while the Frenchman, whose regiment had been stationed in Indo-China for several years, was on long furlough, in the house of old Mlle. de Tourcoing.

There, in that salon which breathed the gentle, rather anaemic elegance of the past with its simple carpet of taupe and claret velvet, the sad, light-gray panellings of tulip wood, the ceiling in Lebrun's best manner, the tortoise-shell boxes and Ubhl tables—amidst all that pathetic mixture of old-maid precision and grand-dame coquetry, Sidi Mahmoud Chedli had at first cut an incongruous figure, according to Roger de Villemot, who had jested about it with typical Parisian sharpness.

"I like him," Mlle. de Tourcoing had insisted. "He is the soul of justice. Everybody in Algiers says so. And he is tremendously good-natured."

"Good-natured? Oh, yes! I suppose even his dogs call him by his first name," the Marquis had laughed.

"But—"

"Really, I know the Arabs. I served a year in Morocco before I was transferred to Indo-China. And, for my personal taste, the Arabs are too—oh!—quite too unexpected in their reactions."

"Don't be so prejudiced, Roger. I met Sidi Mahmoud while you were away. I grew to like him very much. He is absolutely modern—a perfect darling—"

"How many wives has the darling?"

"Three."

"There you are! Polygamous, eh? And you call him modern, my beloved aunt!"

"Can anything be more up-to-date—in Paris?" Mlle. de Tourcoing had smiled. "And the Sidi shows such exquisite taste in choosing his wives."

"How do you know?"

"Last year I was in Algiers for a few weeks. I met his youngest wife—Fathouma. Adorable name, don't you think?"

"Does she do it justice?"

"Rather! She is delicious. And she speaks such charming French."

"That won't do me any good. No chance of my ever meeting her, I'm afraid, except with her face covered by a horsehair veil."

"Didn't I tell you that Sidi Mahmoud Chedli is thoroughly Westernized? His wives wear the veil at home, in Algiers, of course. But in Paris—"

"Why—" Roger de Villemot had looked up, a sudden gleam of interest in his hazel-brown eyes. "Do they ever come here?"

"Fathouma does."

"When?"

"Eager to meet her?" Mlle. de Tourcoing had teased. "Well—you can ask her for a tango three weeks from next Saturday. I am giving a dance in her honor. You'll come, won't you?"

"Delighted!"

"And—please—don't play the flippant, blase young Parisian. Be nice to her. She is such a dear little thing."

"I'll try my best. In the meantime"—for there were moments when Roger de Villemot's egotism was sublime in its transparent ingenuousness—"don't you think I had better drop in on her husband?"

"By all means!"

That same afternoon he called on the other. Resignedly expectant to be bored, he was pleasantly disappointed when he discovered that his aunt was right, and that Sidi Mahmoud Chedli was not only imbued with the deeper essence of Western culture and ideals, but also familiar with every up-to-date twist of speech and view.

Thus—and this had happened about a year earlier, and perhaps Sidi Mahmoud, looking from the balcony out on the Street of the Lizard and exchanging courteous greetings with chammach and rabbi, was thinking of it subconsciously—a certain friendship sprang up between the Frenchman and the Arab. Perhaps it was because, the ice once broken, the Marquis de Villemot took a genuine liking to the other; perhaps because he was intrigued by the idea that he would meet the Sidi's young wife.

He saw her for the first time on the evening of Mlle. de Tourcoing's ball.

Entering by the side of her hostess, who was built on the generous, broad-beamed lines of a Dutch frigate, she presented a charming contrast, with her silken, raven-black hair folded like wings over tiny ears; her ivory-white complexion, like heavy satin with a dull sheen; her profile clear as a cameo; her eyes large and ice-green, with golden high-lights beneath hooded brows; her supple young body in a low-cut, creamy gown of slender Grecian lines and with a loosely draped girdle that was woven in a confused pattern of peacock-blues and greens. She wore a single jewel, a huge emerald that fell over her forehead like a drop of liquid green fire.

He was introduced to her, bowed over step fashion, and step lightly on the ball of the foot.

When tired, the exercise would be varied. Each man was supplied with a circular rolling-pin, three inches in diameter. He would stand with arches and full weight directly on this rolling pin. It had the effect of pushing upward the fallen arch bones.

As a further variation, these men walked upstairs as close to "tiptoe" as possible. Then they would walk downstairs backward in similar fashion.

Every two hours or so each man grasped his foot and twisted and bent it in every movable direction to create limberness.

With five to six hours per day of this kind of work, it was nothing unusual to send a man back to his own company with feet "reconstructed" in a brief two weeks' time.

It is true that the average sufferer from flat feet and fallen arches cannot do these exercises as efficiently as in the Army, and correct the condition in so short a time, but he can succeed just as fully if he persists for a longer time. However, this barefooted corrective work is of no avail unless the walking habits are changed and proper shoes are worn.

For men, who are after all the greatest sufferers from this condition, I can recommend for every-day use no better shoe than the United States Army-style shoe. For women the problem of corrective footwear is a little more complicated, due to accumulated wrong habits of walking and long-time usage of high-heeled shoes. I shall handle their problem in a future article.

Brown Bread Versus White Bread

"WITH the fall of the franc, a question much discussed during the war has again come up. Shall we eat brown or white bread? Dr. Van Nypelseer has made an ardent plea in the Bruxelles medical to reduce the consumption of white bread. He says that its use as food is not based on observed facts, and that it is in opposition to biologic principles. Neither the Academy of Medicine nor physiologists recommend bread made from highly bolted flour. Grain merchants and stock raisers oppose it. The increase in the consumption of white bread in Western Europe is due to selfish interests, ignorance and blindness. It constitutes a grave social danger. Bread should be made from good wheat flour, ground between millstones, and bolted so as to retain from 85 to 87 per cent of the grain. The removal from flour of essential parts of grain induces tuberculosis, rickets and nervous and mental debility."

I suppose, as you read this quotation, you will say to yourselves that the editor has been reading Physical Culture again and is giving you another barrage against white flour. But this time you guessed wrong.

Like tiny stars in a firmament of darkness, a little light is sometimes permitted to appear in a regular, respectable, orthodox journal of the American Medical Association. This tiny star of a "new discovery" I found stuck away in a back page of the A.M.A. Journal reporting some "research" work in France.

One of these days the drugless people will awaken and find that the A.M.A. has stolen their "thunder"—and, oh, won't the fur fly then!

Whom the Public Prefers During Illness

THE following was published by the Naturopath, and is but a summary of a similar article that appeared some time ago in the Literary Digest. It is but another proof of the "handwriting on the wall"—and the up-to-date medical man recognizes it as one of the symbols of a new era in healing:

"The Illinois Medical Association determined to be honest with itself and find out, first hand, why the medical doctors were losing ground.

"A clever and fearless newspaper woman was employed to make a survey; to use her own discretion as to method, and to report without fear or favor. The investigator decided that a simply-worded question, the same question, should be put to several thousand persons, persons in all walks of life, all levels of the social scale and all types of workers and thinkers. The question was:

"'What did you do the last time you were sick?'

"The investigator employed clerks, in[illegible], [illegible], [illegible] and others to take the census of certain [illegible], buildings and organizations, and, so far as one can judge, it was a fair and impartial effort to get at the truth of the public attitude on present-day medicine and drugless healing.

"Six thousand, seven hundred and seventy-two persons were interviewed and their answers written down.

"The result was the greatest jar to medical egotism that has ever been recorded. Thirteen per cent had never been to a drugless physician or healer and 7 per cent were opposed to medical doctors for what they considered good reasons. Ninety-three per cent had formed the habit of going to drugless physicians or various healing cults. Seven per cent were solidly for medical doctors."

Physiology of Digestion

LAST week I promised you that we would discuss the process of digestion in the stomach. Recall the digestion as it takes place in the mouth. I called your attention to the action of saliva and especially to its enzyme, ptyalin. I said that ptyalin in saliva acts upon the starch particles of food and breaks them into small molecules. That is to say, it breaks the molecule in half, making it so much easier for later digestion to take place.

Saliva is alkaline in reaction. When the food reaches the stomach, it is still alkaline. Under normal conditions, it remains so for fifteen or twenty minutes.

Meanwhile the glands of the stomach are secreting four principal juices. They are pepsin, rennin, hydrochloric acid, and mucus. They pour forth from the walls of the entire stomach and thoroughly saturate the food.

Hydrochloric acid serves to acidulate the stomach contents and to neutralize the alkalinity of the newly-entered food. Its action is quite important. It is not until the stomach contents are thoroughly acidified that the other juices can do their work. That is, before pepsin and rennin can act on the food, the stomach must be made acid. This acidulation is quite exact. When too much hydrochloric acid is secreted, we have a condition of indigestion called hyperacidity. When too little is secreted, it is known as hypoacidity.

It is for the hypoacid conditions of indigestion that the medical man augments the stomach secretion with his prescription of artificially-made hydrochloric acid. When hyperacid indigestion occurs, this same medical man stupidly advises against acid fruits, under the mistake belief that the so-called acids of fruits increase the already excessive acidity. The fallacy of this belief we shall discuss in a later article.

Hydrochloric acid is the great food destroyer. It breaks open the food molecules, exposing them to the action of the other juices. Quantitatively it is secreted more than any other digestive secretion in the stomach.

In some of the inflammatory diseases of the stomach the concentration of hydrochloric acid is changed. Generally it becomes too concentrated; seldom too diluted.

This of course leads to the popularly-discussed question of drinking water at meals. The chief argument put up by the anti-water drinkers is that water at meals dilutes the gastric juices, especially hydrochloric acid, and impairs their functioning capacity.

Those who advocate water drinking at meals claim that it does not affect the digestive ability of the fluids. They back their assertions with proofs that most of the foods are chiefly composed of water anyhow. Since the water of food is harmless, water at meals is also harmless. They state further that the water helps to dissolve the food and renders the digestive process relatively easy. Altogether this mooted question has as yet had no satisfactory answer.

Next week we shall continue the analysis of stomach digestion.

"Remember once and for all time that these rays are not a panacea for all of the ills of human flesh, but that they are ONE of the best methods of treating these ills."

The above quotation from a text book written by a prominent Electro-Therapist only confirms the results obtained at the California Clinorium in the treatment of many ailments with the Actinic Ray.

The Actinic Ray is invisible, having a wave length of not over 4040A and running down to less than 1860A and are of a vibratory rate that is between the visible violet of the spectrum and the X-Ray.

Rather expensive electrical apparatus is required to produce the Actinic Ray and as they cannot penetrate glass the tubes and applicators are made of quartz.

The effect of the Actinic Ray is both local and constitutional. A decided constitutional effect is produced, as there is a chemical and bactericidal action on the blood. These rays penetrate through the body and rejuvenate every part. The hemoglobin or red blood corpuscles of the blood show a decided increase during these treatments indicating that it is a sure method of "putting iron in the system."

Many people suffer from a lowered vitality, lack of enthusiasm and vigor or general debility. In the treatment of these conditions, in Anemia, Auto-Intoxication, Arteriosclerosis, Ductless Gland Diseases, Dyspepsia, Neuritis, Neurasthenia, Rheumatic conditions and Tuberculosis, the Actinic Ray fully justifies all the claims made of it.

Locally it produces profound effects, relieving ugly skin conditions of many years standing. Generally but very few treatments are required and as one lady said, "To be relieved of an itching skin trouble by one two-minute treatment after putting on lotions for three weeks, was little short of a miracle."

Acne, Eczema, Erysipelas, Favus, Herpes, Keloid, Lupus, Naevi, Pruritis and many other annoying and disfiguring skin diseases are quickly relieved by the Actinic Ray.

The California Clinorium uses two Actinic Ray treatment equipments and they are busy all day long. A visit to this institution is well worth while as it is the largest and best equipped on the Pacific Coast, occupying an entire building with over 4000 feet of floor space.

Consultation is free and the rates for treatment are within the reach of everyone. The California Clinorium, 1001 W. Washington St. BEacon 3201. Dr. Louis C. Shingle, D.P., Managing Director.

A Prize Story of a Girl's Fight with Brute Baseness and Poverty

SHUG HUDSILL brought his young wife, Marthy, to a sandy land homestead—twenty-five miles from the nearest railroad—in that section of the country which borders the Gulf of Mexico. There followed shortly the inevitable log-rolling, at which the neighbors—mostly Hudsills themselves—contributed their labor. Shug furnished refreshments in the form of "shinny," an unpalatable, but unusually potent, native rum. The house, a two-room cabin of the "saddle-bag" type, was soon erected. Hand-split pine boards covered the roof; an unglazed window and a door in each room, which would be closed with rough wooden shutters during inclement weather, served for ventilation and lighting. A stick-and-clay chimney at one end of the cabin gave outlet to the single fireplace which was to answer the dual purpose of cooking and heating.

Shug accumulated two or three runty, tick-infested cows and a few razor-back hogs. These were left, in the main, to shift for themselves. During severe weather such of the cows as chanced to be giving a few pints of milk daily were fed a little home-grown fodder and corn on the ear. The hogs probed for succulent roots in the rank undergrowth of the near-by swamp. Sweet potatoes yielded generously in new ground; each year a fresh plot was cleared, broken, and planted to these. A patch of sugar cane was always grown for molasses; a portion of this was finally made into "shinny."

It was amid these surroundings that the girl Selina Jo was born.

For the first eighteen months of her existence the baby crawled about the cabin unnamed. Then it occurred to Marthy that their offspring ought to be christened.

"Shug," she suggested calmly, "seems to me we ort to be namin' that air young 'un."

Shug, lolling in the shade of a water oak, shifted his quid and spat disinterestedly. "I ain't objectin' none," he replied.

"How 'bout callin' her 'S'liny Jo'?" Marthy asked.

"Fittin' enough name fer her, I reckin," Shug yawned.

As the child grew up she came to accept her parents as they had long since accepted her—merely as a bald fact.

Once Marthy came upon Shug whipping the girl with a switch.

"What you whippin' her fer?" she asked. Her tone was one of simple curiosity, nothing else.

"All young 'uns needs it," Shug replied virtuously. "Hadn't been my daddy usetah whale me powerful, I wouldn't a been nigh the man I am now; not nigh."

It was a matter for remark that, even at a tender age, Selina Jo rarely emitted any outcry under punishment. There burned in her sloe-black eyes, though, the flame of an emotion which she checked upon the surface.

Selina Jo, upon a daily ration made up almost exclusively of corn pone, molasses and home-cured pork as salt as ocean brine, flourished amazingly. She was precocious, too. She learned early that, as a source of information, her parents were practically nil. Thenceforth, the questions that had rushed to her lips were succeeded by a look of eternal interrogation in her somber eyes.

After her twelfth birthday, a young school-teacher—the only one the community ever knew—came into the Hudsill settlement.

Selina Jo was grudgingly allowed to attend the school. For six months the young man's enthusiasm held out. Then it waned and died. But before the school closed Selina Jo had learned the alphabet and a portion of the old-fashioned first reader.

The school-teacher had lighted the fires of ambition within her.

"S'liny Jo," she informed herself one day in a fit of musing, "you air as pi'zen strong as a gallon o' green shinny, but you don't know skercely nothin'." A moment later she added dejectedly: "Ner ain't got no chancet o' learnin', neether."

Shoalwater River afforded her chief means of diversion. She never remembered when or how she learned to swim, but every day she enjoyed a plunge in the river and she noticed that no less pleasant than the contact of the water with her naked body was the comfortable after-feeling of cleanliness.

She had early begun to assist with the crops. With the manure scraped from the cow lot she made beds for the potatoes. At planting time she pulled the slips and set them out. She hoed the sugar cane and thinned the corn. During harvest she did almost as much work as Shug and Marthy combined.

Before she was 14 she had broken a pair of young steers to the yoke. She split the rails and laid the fence for a new potato patch. Using for the purpose the young oxen which she had broken, she prepared the ground for planting. At 15 she was as tall as her father, a slender, wiry creature, her young body as symmetrical as the trunk of a healthy pine tree.

In a corner of the cabin one day she found a dust-covered photograph. Brushing it off, she gazed upon a face that was unfamiliar. She took the picture to Marthy.

"Maw," she asked, "who is this?"

Her mother glanced at it, indifferently. "Me," she answered listlessly.

"You?" Selina Jo gasped.

"Yeah. Ruther, it usetah be. Tuck when I married yore paw."

Selina Jo scanned the comely pictured face for some likeness to the slatternly creature she knew. Wild resentment increase food consumption in the vain hope of building up that elusive pound or two. Health frequently is broken. In woman's search for personal beauty, she invariably disregards the fundamental health laws. If the question arises, health or beauty, beauty invariably wins. This is a condition that is truer in the rule than in the exception.

CARE OF THE BODY

If one were merely to consider the problem from a common-sense standpoint, it would be evident that the principal reason the body doesn't take on more weight is because the assimilative powers have been partly destroyed. If the burning capacity of your household furnace is diminished, you cannot increase its capacity by piling in more fuel. If the human body cannot build up tissue from food, the logical and sensible course is to clean out that eliminative apparatus and thereby permit assimilation to take place.

Sometimes a short fast of from forty-eight to seventy-two hours will permit an overclogged intestine to discharge some of its putrid storaged contents. Then, when food is again eaten, more of it will be converted into body tissue. Often it is necessary to lose weight in order to gain weight, because, in every eliminative function, nature invariably discharges the poison waste first.

Sit on Turtle and Grow Young

"SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 25, 1924.—Why need one go to the expense and trouble of being subjected to gland transplantation or rejuvenation when the same results my be obtained by sitting on the back of an aged turtle for a certain number of hours daily?

"Dr. Hugh Kennedy McClelland, one of San Francisco's leading physicians, has advanced and proved the theory, he says, that 'longevity emanations' from turtles may be drawn into the human body as a force rejuvenating the waning powers of youth."

Close your eyes, friends, and let your minds wander with me.

Deep in the African jungle we see the Voodoo-man beating his tom-tom and muttering his mysterious incantations. With a higher and higher cadence his mutterings become moans; his moans ascend into shrieks until he works himself into an insane fervor of fury in his efforts to drive out the Voodoo devils that plague his tribe.

Now open your eyes. The tattooed terror known as the Voodoo-man fades from view, and slowly a new actor appears on the scene. Dressed in the height of modern fashion, with a medicine chest in his hand, he utters words of mysterious medical syllabification—and lo! the Voodoo-man is here again!

Charcoal and Candy

THIS is addressed only to the "sweet young thing" and is useful only for Wednesday and Sunday nights. You know the reason why. These are the evenings that "he" comes.

Of the primping and the fol-de-rol, I have nothing to say. But a few minutes before 8 o'clock (at which time he is due to arrive) you blushingly ask mother, "Is my breath sweet, mother?"

And she, with a knowing smile, replies, "You had better take something, darling."

You follow the advice, sometimes, with some clove-smelling candy; sometimes, if your stomach is "upset," (what an upset stomach is, is more than I know,) you resort to a stomach deodorizer, generally charcoal.

Promptly at 8 o'clock the big moment arrives. In "he" walks with a beautiful box of candy under his arm. After all the other preliminaries—of which I need tell you naught—both sit down upon the parlor divan and proceed to do justice to the candy.

You sweet young thing! Your poor stomach! How blessed is the virtue of charcoal! Bad stomachs, foul breath, candy and character—[illegible], thou art a jewel, and woman, thou art well adorned.

Pain's Soliloquy

WHAT Herbert Spencer was to philosophy, Dr. Henry Lindlahr was to natural therapy.

His book, "The Nature Cure," is the synthesis of natural healing philosophy. In the back of it I found this gem of poetry, written by C. J. Buell, president of the Minnesota Health League.

Read it with a deeper meaning and it will teach you much:

I

I am Pain—most people hate me,
Think me cruel, call me heartless,
Study ways to bribe and fool me,
Try by every means to slay me,

Dope themselves with anesthetics,
Fill themselves with patent nostrums,
Call the doctor with his poisons,
Seek the Christian Science healer,

Beat the tom-tom of the savage,
Build the altar, burn the incense,
Seek to sate the wrath of devils,
Pray to saints, and gods, and angels;

Not to cure the ills within them,
Not to cleanse and purify them,
Just to calm the pain that hurts them,
Just to kill the guide that warns them.

II

Pain am I, but when you know me,
When you once have learned my secret,
How I come to help and bless you,
Warn you, guide you, teach and lead you

When you know my loving nature,
How at first I gently twinge you,
Lightly twinge you as a warning,
Hoping thus, by kind reminder,
You will hear my voice and listen—

Sure am I that when you know me,
You will gladly then embrace me,
Call me friend and give me welcome,
Call me friend and ask my message.

III

This the message I would bring you,
This the reason for my visits,
This the warning I would give you,
This the secret I would teach you;

When you learn to live as Nature
In her great and boundless mercy,
In her tender, loving kindness,
In her wisdom and her goodness
Meant that men should live and labor,

When you learn to shun the by-ways
Leading off to vicious habits,
When you learn to keep your body
Strong and clean and pure and active,

Give it work in right proportion,
Give it air, and food, and water,
Fit to build its every member,
Fit to nourish every function,

When you teach your mind and spirit
Pure and noble thoughts to harbor,
Drive out fear, and hate, and malice,
Cherish love and kindly motive,

When you learn these things I've told you,
When you know them, when you do them,
Then I will depart and leave you,
Then no more will Pain be needed.

IV

This is, then, the truth I bring you,
That I hurt you but to warn you,
Not to harm you but to heal you,
That I come to guide and teach you.

I am God's most blessed angel,
Sent to point the way to virtue,
Sent to teach the noblest manhood,
Sent to fill the mind with wisdom,
Sent to rouse the soul to action.

V

Love me, trust me, heed my message;
I will bring you peace and bless you!

Flat Feet and Fallen Arches

JUDGING by the number of queries received after publication of a short article on fallen arches several weeks ago, there are without doubt a goodly number of people suffering from this complaint.

Readers of this column who were members of draft boards when this country entered the war, will recall that fallen arches and flat feet restricted a man to limited service only.

Our War Department lifted these restrictions when some one informed them that those of the negro race were flat-footed. By that time they also learned that the greater majority of cases of flat feet could be corrected and the soldier returned to full service.

In many cantonments they had orthopedic squads, sometimes nicknamed "crippled crews," whose sole work was the correction of orthopedic defects.

For five or six hours per day the sergeant would march his barefooted squad in a pigeon-toed walk. That is, every man had to turn his toes inward as far as he could, raise the foot high in a sort of goose

PROPER CARE OF THE FEET

Vacation days with all their promise of golden hours of leisure and happy jaunts into the land of Adventure can be utterly spoiled by tender, uncomfortable or tired feet.

Many women have learned the delightful comfort to be found in a pair of Princess Pats—the preventive shoe we put out to meet the strenuous demands of active days. These women have learned that Princess Pats give them comfort and even correct minor weaknesses and foot troubles without sacrificing one iota of that smartness so necessary to a feeling of well being and happiness.

Princess Pats

Princess Pats have not "just growed," as little black Patsy did, but have been painstakingly evolved by some of the greatest foot and shoe experts of the country through many years of experimentation and study. Walk-Over takes great pride in these specially designed shoes that do so much to enhance their reputation for "Quality through Half a Century." We like to talk about them—like to show them to women who will find them one of the greatest elements of poise and comfort that enters into their daily living.

The special features incorporated into the design and construction of these famous Walk-Over shoes include an extra long and specially tempered steel counter which reinforces and supports the arch in a supremely natural way. The inner line to the sole is straight; the outside tread full and curving; the shoe so constructed that the foot is gently forced and held in a normal position and its entire alignment corrected. Your foot is in a natural, comfortable, fatigue-resisting position when it is in a Princess Pat.

Princess Pats are made in stunningly smart styles to fill the needs of your entire day—for formal afternoon, sports and business wear. There is even a black satin model that can be worn without fear of criticism to any evening function save the most formal of affairs. However, the wearing of Princess Pats for the most active hours of the day so normalizes the foot that fanciful footwear can be worn without discomfort or harm whenever desired.

PRINCE PATS for men are the brother shoe to Princess Pats. They give the same comforting and strengthening support to the masculine foot that Princess Pats give to a woman. We heartily endorse them for every-day wear. Made in distinctive designs that are correct for business or out-doors, they are priced moderately at $10.00 to $12.00.

CHILDREN'S SHOES are always carefully fitted—with due allowance for natural growth and individual needs — in our Juvenile Department. We feel a responsibility in such fittings and take pride not only in giving the growing foot what it needs, but in co-operating with parents in every possible way in keeping the feet of their boys and girls happy and normal. Children's shoes from $4.50 to $7.50, according to size.

Striving to Stay the Headsman's Blow

Predicament in Finding an Army's Wounded on Their Hands — Through the Hostile Zone — The Dread Courtyard— On Angry Waters

[Note—In a preceding article Mrs. Forbes—now Mrs. A. T. McGrath—generally recognized to be the leading woman explorer and adventurer in the world, related the perils encounterd and hardships suffered by herself and another Englishwoman in a daring dash into war-torn China. Refused a passport by the British Consul at Canton, they stole forth into the interior, with Hankow as their destination, first traveling by ammunition truck to Shiuchow, the base of the southern army.

Thence they proceeded by boat, by a fifty-mile overland journey in sedan chairs, in a driving rain through desolate, mountainous country, and again by barge to the village of Yunghinghsien. There further progress was prevented by a barrier of river vessels.

For their protection the two women had improvised a Red Cross flag and a Union Jack. As their barge lay at Yunghinghsien they observed long rows of stretchers being borne in their direction, and suddenly realized that it was mistaken for a hospital boat. And their equipment consisted almost wholly of a few bandages and some toilet soap.—Editor.]

OUR boat was moored a short distance from the bank, so the wounded were laid, or arranged themselves, in rows upon the flat stretch of mud between the straggling gray houses of the village and the river. There was a slight pause while we gazed at each other with interest, not unmixed with horror.

Then our interpreter gave one long howl of terror and dived head first into a pile of rugs at the farthest end of the craft. At the same time a procession of little gray figures waded into the stream, carrying maimed forms, who were unceremoniously bundled on to our narrow deck. Then began a lot of polite bowing and smiling and pointing to our "Red Cross" flag.

The first sufferer displayed a gaping flesh wound artistically smeared with some strong-smelling black stuff, and watched us stoically while we daubed and bandaged, but the second had a bullet lurking near a bone, and strongly disliked having it taken out with nail scissors. It was a sickening business.

There were terrible wounds that left us helpless, there was gangrene beyond hope of recovery, and there were broken bones which we tried to set, using every available stick and spar. One longed for morphia to still the pain our clumsy efforts caused. Worst of all, there were terrible skin diseases that we could not cope with. However, we washed and worked till the gentle dark came on and our eyes ached and our hands shook, and we wondered whether we worked for our lives as well as theirs. There was some grumbling on the part of the most ignorant because pain did not cease immediately, but for the most part they were grateful, and chin-chinned pathetically as they were carried or hobbled away.

Suddenly we realized that our interpreter had disappeared. We thought he had gone for good, and wondered apathetically at what premium an enterprising insurance company would accept us, but he reappeared at night almost cheerful and, with much mystery, told us that he had discovered a newly-converted Christian merchant who was most anxious to leave the neighborhood at once.

Apparently this man knew a route which would eventually lead us by unknown byways to Heng-sha. His plan was that we should leave the river by night and creep round the village, whose southern side was unprotected. He could secure chairs and bearers without raising suspicion, on the plea of taking his family south. They would meet us at a given place, and before the army woke to the fact of our disappearance we should be ten miles away and our direction unknown.

A Journey in the Darkness

IT was arranged that we should slip away between 1 and 2 a.m.—the only hour of the night at which the Chinese really sleep. The interpreter had produced rice, eggs (which we hard-boiled,) and a sort of flinty sponge cake. As only two chairs were available, we decided to leave all our belongings behind except what we could easily carry ourselves if necessary.

We started bravely forth, but without our merchant friend, who apparently had lost his nerve at the last moment. Luckily, it was a dark night, or we couldn't have escaped observation; but the houses were indistinguishable, and we went too far back up the river before we dared turn inland and attempt to work around the village, thus losing considerable time. It was a nightmare walk. There was no path, and we continually fell off mud-banks into wet rice fields. We crawled through tangles of briers, stumbled into unsavory rubbish-heaps, and came up against walls beyond which might be sleeping soldiery. A dozen times the interpreter lost the way.

Suddenly a rise in the land showed us a few houses just ahead. They looked absolutely deserted. As a broad stream cut off progress to the right, and leftwards lay the river and destruction, we had to risk it. Goading on our literally shaking coolies, we bore down upon the village.

I drew out a French motor license with a red seal, and an English passport, highly decorative, which I had always reserved in the hope of impressing the illiterate Chinese, who dearly love something official-looking and colorful. It was a lucky thought, for the instant we turned into the main path we saw a crowd of prisoners with hands bound behind them, tied to posts of tree trunks, while a guard lounged lazily at the open doors of a barn-like structure. I instantly decided that our only chance was to pretend we had every right to be traveling along that particular road, so, violently prodding my anguished bearers with my umbrella to make them proceed, I assumed my most haughty air.

With the flags attached to our chairs fluttering in the breeze, we bore rapidly down on the astonished guard. He recovered enough of his wits to challenge us, but before his officer could emerge from the depths of the shed, where he was drinking green tea, the little cavalcade had passed on, waving with infinite importance our inadequate documents.

Our coolies started to amble as soon as we were out of sight, but at the bridge across the stream were stationed half a dozen more soldiers. Feeling that a moment's delay would be our ruin, since the officer behind us had probably by this time dispatched some one to fetch us back, I seized my revolver and pointed with it to the beautiful red seal of the Gallic motor license, while I ordered the interpreter to say that the officer in the village had recognized our right to proceed and that I would stand no interference. One of the usual endless discussions would have ensued had it not been for the obvious power of my Colt.

The cook was shaking like a jelly, so I leaped out of the chair, bundled him into it, and ordered the whole procession majestically on, waved the sentries out of the way, and stolidly marched through them. The bluff succeeded for the moment, and we had great hopes that the worst was over, because, however much the southerners might wish to get us back, they dared not sweep out far beyond their own lines for fear of the advancing northerners. We imagined that, except for a few scouting parties, we were now beyond the scope of their army—but we were wrong.

Intercepting a Slaughter

A RAPID mile through green, fertile country, and just as we were talking cheerfully of breakfast in the shelter of a thin belt of trees by the roadside, we literally fell across a line of prostrate forms, waiting, rifle to shoulder, to fire across the low-lying fields in front. The first chair had actually got through before a scream from my companion, "They're murdering the cook!" brought me up panting.

To the left a Maxim commanded the plain, and the muzzles of other machine guns protruded from brushwood farther away. A clever entanglement of branches hid a double row of gray-clad soldiers. Some of these had dragged the cook from his chair, not too gently, for a trickle of red showed on his livid skin.

I rushed to the aid of the cook, gesticulating wildly with my passport. He gave a sort of gurgle and flopped across my feet. Pulling him up, I tried to get him away from the wreck of our belongings, which the soldiers were turning over with interest. He showed unexpected reluctance. "Me no likee leave him chicken!" he wailed, and I discovered that the two miserable fowls had hung head downwards under my chair all through that long march!

I don't know how many minutes or hours passed before the messenger who had been sent back with news of our capture returned. His advent was followed by some slight activity. Chairs were brought forward and we were motioned into them. Guards closed round us, and the unfortunate cook was finally wrenched away and made to walk behind with other prisoners.

tine is gone. The statement is now published that the French government—which has a monopoly on tobacco in that country—has discovered a method of removing all the nicotine from tobacco, without affecting the flavor. A San Francisco paper seems skeptical of the results, saying: 'Nicotine in tobacco is like humor in a musical comedy. It is dangerous, but the performance without it is likely to seem a little flat.'

"If nicotineless tobacco becomes popular, it remains to be seen what effect it will have upon the health of the users. United States Army surgeons declared during the great war that almost every one who used cigarettes developed some form of bronchitis."

Prussic Acid and Bitter Almonds

ONE of the most powerful poisons known to man is prussic acid. A few drops will kill. Prussic acid can be extracted from the oil of bitter almonds.

Were you to eat a pound of bitter almonds I assure you, death would not occur. Why?

When you destroy the chemical nature of food, frequently you change that which was before harmless into something deadly and poisonous.

To a lesser degree this law holds true with every extractive and food derivative.

Fever as a Blessing

THE London Lancet prints the article below. For twenty-five years Dr. Brook preached against the use of antipyretic drugs in the eliminative fevers. With some of the more liberal-minded practitioners, the logic of his contentions has long ago been accepted. But with the great rank and file of medical practitioners, fever is still recognized as an evil instead of a blessing and drugging treatment is a matter of routine.

"Long before the introduction of the clinical thermometer the meaning of fever was one of the most intriguing problems exercising the mind of the physician, and even when it became possible to measure its degrees with accuracy but little light was thrown upon the matter. For many years a heightened temperature was regarded as evil in itself—very much as a heightened blood-pressure quite usually is now—and in the treatment of febrile conditions the main line of attack was directed toward its reduction.

"Experience of antipyretic drugs led to some doubts as to the actual benefit to be expected from a mere lowering of temperature, and experimental work showed that in infectious conditions some degree was certainly beneficial; animals kept at fever heat were able to withstand infections fatal to normal controls. The light-hearted use of antipyretics does not now hold a place in therapeusis, nor is the degree of fever looked upon to any great extent as an index to the gravity of the condition; none the less the why and wherefore of fever remains almost as much a mystery as ever.

"Some little light has been thrown upon at least one aspect of the subject by Dr. Oliver Heath in two communications recently made to the Royal Society of Medicine. Working partly upon himself with typhoid vaccines and partly upon typhoid patients, Dr. Heath has been able to obtain results indicating in a very clear and unequivocal manner that the course of fever runs parallel to the reduction below normal of antibody in the blood.

"Thus, on administering subcutaneously to himself 2,000,000,000 killed typhoid bacilli, he found that a rise of temperature to 100 deg. Fahrenheit was synchronous with a very considerable drop in the bactericidal power of his blood; the return of the temperature to normal on the day following the injection was associated with a restoration of the normal bactericidal power. Inoculation of doses of dead typhoid bacilli on ten successive days likewise produced irregular pyrexia, associated when the dose was sufficiently large with a demonstrable fall in the bactericidal power of the serum.

"Numerous other observations are recorded, all going to show that fever is always associated with a reduction below normal of antibody in the blood. This, in itself, is a valuable observation. Dr. Heath interprets his evidence to mean that this reduction is the actual cause of fever, and that the heightened temperature may be looked upon as in the nature of a reflex designed to speed up the production of more antibody to replace that used up. On [illegible] while he [illegible] that the use of drugs for the cure of fever should be discontinued."

Passive vs. Active Exercise

IF ANY of you wants to make a fortune in patent-medicine compounds, the field of fat-reducing medicine is one that ever lends itself to exploitation. Women always furnish the greatest number of victims who purchase these drugs.

Of these different compounds, both external and internal, I shall speak at a later date. Many people who would condemn their use, think nothing whatsoever of the passive yet drugless methods of reduction.

The Turkish and Russian bath, the electric sweat cabinet, and the massage, are the principal means resorted to for adipose-tissue reduction. All of these methods rely on heat or friction to open the pores and eliminate sweaty secretions.

If we took an analysis of these secretions from the sweat glands and contrasted them with those given forth during active, vigorous exercise, a sharp difference in their composition would be noted.

Perspiration induced by the electric cabinet and Turkish bath is little more than water. Perspiration of active exercise is loaded with toxic poisons of the blood.

Active exercise oxidizes waste, contracts the size of muscles by reducing the fat infiltrated between the muscle bands, loosens the joints, creates a better venous and lymphatic drainage, purifies the arterial blood, stimulates and tones up the nervous system, renders muscles, ligaments and tendons more supple, and thoroughly burns up fat by oxidation. None of this is done by passive exercise as given in the massage, nor by the elimination of the sweat cabinet.

Massage has its place in natural therapy, and a very important one, it is. But for fat reduction, there is only one safe and sure method—eliminative diet and active exercise.

Eye Crutches

ABOUT one out of every three adult persons is compelled to augment his visual capacity by means of spectacles or glasses. In many cases these are necessary, but in some they serve either a temporary function or are entirely superfluous.

You who are wedded to your specs from morning to night, try a period of separation for a few minutes each day. Watch the result. If you have no disastrous effects, the next day try a little longer period. Many times you have not given your poor tired eyes half a chance. Your crutches have made them lame.

To the Lean and to the Stout

OFTEN in the practical application of dietetic principles, one is called upon to prescribe a diet which will reduce the stout. Just as frequently upbuilding the lean is the problem before the practitioner.

To those who have followed natural principles of dietetics, an astonishing feature involved in both of these procedures is the marked similarity in the diet of the stout and the diet of the lean.

Recently I visited a prominent gymnasium and above the entrance was a sign, "If you're stout we'll make you lean; if you're lean we'll make you stout." It works both ways.

Women who desire to build up a physique to a certain ideal of beauty are faced with the problem of putting on more weight. In the majority of cases the course pursued is wrong. A slight study of dietetic principles is made to determine which are starches, which oils and which fats. Orthodox textbooks impart the information that these are fat-building foods. They consume these foods in large quantities, generally overeating and often overspecializing. Most of these starches, fats and oils are of the refined varieties, concentrated, and almost totally devoid of vitamins and mineral salts.

The various butters, the salad oils, the vegetable oils, and the rendered animal fats, potatoes, sugars, creams and milks, eggs and cheese, constitute the chief weight-producing foods.

When nature rebels and creates fermentation in the digestive apparatus, bicarbonate of soda is used as a counter-agent. When the intestinal tract refuses to discharge the waste, and protests against the overfeeding, medicinal irritants are used artificially to stimulate the bowel until such time as even artificial stimulation fails.

When the "Best of Shoes" Can be Even Better

When the fine materials and the most skilled workmanship go into the making of shoes, such shoes are usually considered "the best of shoes." However, when to these high grade shoes is added the scientific construction necessary for foot health and comfort, such as found in the Cantilever Shoe, they can be considered as even "better than the best."

In wearing the Cantilever Shoe you experience the healthful influence of unrestricted circulation. The scientific flexible arch is so constructed as to gently support the foot arch while allowing natural movement to the bony and muscular action of the entire foot. The arch of the Cantilever Shoe, by its very reason of being flexible, follows the action of your foot and enables you to gain genuine pleasure from walking.

Also, the flexible, all-leather arch of the

The Fighters

Sweeping Action — Primitive Passions—How Far Should a Young Woman Go in Standing by a Law-Breaking Husband?

By
M. L. C.
Pickthall

Illustrated
by Rudolph
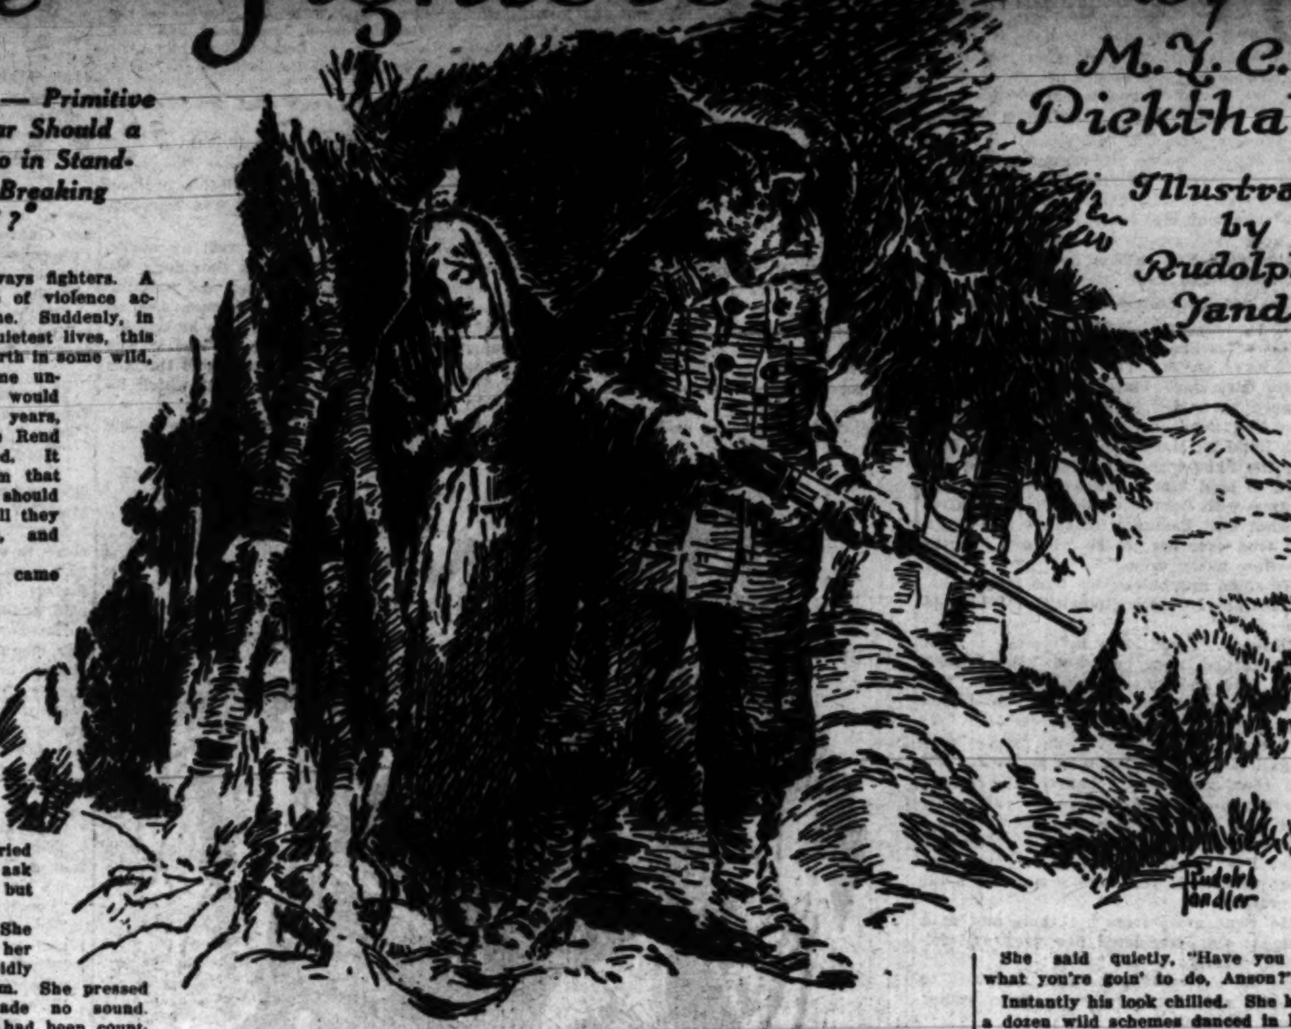
Tandle



"If you follow me, I'll stop for you no more than as if you were a stone."

THE Rends were always fighters. A strange inheritance of violence accompanied the name. Suddenly, in the midst of the quietest lives, this inheritance would flame forth in some wild, unpremeditated deed, some uncalculated blow, and there would follow bitter payment of years, of tears—but not by the Rend who had done the deed. It seemed a law with them that whatever they did, others should pay for it. Yet with it all they were a handsome race, and greatly loved.

So, when Anson Rend came home that night, entering softly, and without a word to Janet strode to the lamp and blew it out, what she saw of his face before the darkness enveloped it was quite in keeping with the Rend family history. And it was quite in keeping with the history of all the women who had married Rends that she should ask him, not "What is it?" but "Who is it?"

"Warrender," he said. She could hear him near her in the dark, moving rapidly and lightly about the room. She pressed her lips together and made no sound. When Anson came in she had been counting over the clean clothes, and mentally she yet repeated: "Five shirts, six towels, two tablecloths." Then she said aloud but quite calmly: "Have you killed him?"

"They carried him home," Anson told her. "He was—."

"Dead?" she broke in.

"I guess so."

She sat bowed forward over the table, very still; her hand closed unconsciously over the match box; the matches rattled.

Instantly Anson was beside her. His hand shut over hers, and the matches fell on the floor. There was violence in his touch, his breath; even his very clothes seemed to exhale it. They stood thus a moment, clutching each other in the dark.

Then Janet said: "So you're goin' to run away."

"My God! D'you think I would stay?"

He released her. She could hear him taking bread out of the box. She chafed her fingers which his grasp had hurt. She asked presently: "You goin' now?"

"Yes."

Presently she said, almost indifferently: "I guess I better go with you."

She heard his sudden stillness, there in the dark. Then he said unsteadily: "You're crazy."

"No . . . but I would be, if I stayed behind."

"You couldn't do it, Janet!"

"I guess I could keep up with you as long as there was any need."

"Janet—do you know what we'd have to fight?"

"Yes," she said slowly, "I guess I do."

"And you want to come?"

"I want to come, Anson."

Silence. Then, in the dark his passion broke on her with words and whispered cries to God, who had made women faithful. This passing, she said quietly: "You better get packed."

Ten minutes later she was following him along the trail to the mountains. It was the trail that led past the Warrender place. She guessed Anson had chosen that way because no one would think of looking for him near Warrender's.

Presently she saw a light through the bush—a lighted window in Warrender's house. Without a word she left the trail and crossed the orchard. Anson saw her head, black against that lighted window, as she peered into the room.

When she rejoined him, he was trembling. It was as if his first realization of what he had done came through his realization of what Janet might have seen. "What did you see?" he asked.

Janet was silent, looking at him strangely, her mouth set. She said: "Come." He did not question her again. He dared not.

Morning found them by a small lake, a shadowed sheet of water reflecting the undisturbed forest. It was autumn, and morning came late. They had been walking hours.

"I guess we might rest here awhile," Janet said. "I'm all in."

He answered remorsefully: "I'd forgotten you'd be tired."

She watched him, still with that strange secret look. She had a knowledge of him beyond that which even love could give. She knew that he would forget her more each day. It was that way with the Rends.

It was afternoon when she awoke at his touch. He was in a fever to press on, but he said ashamedly: "You're tired yet. You should not be here."

She did not answer. She kept up with him all the rest of that day. He led her by the roughest tracks, deer paths in thick timber; they climbed unnamed ridges, only to discover higher hills beyond. Janet, without asking, now knew where Anson was going. He meant to cross the Salmonback watershed by the higher pass and work down beyond to the railway. They spoke together very little. The time passed in a pressure of wild haste and fatigue. Anson seemed to be burning in a flame. She had never seen him so vividly alive, so handsome, strong and cunning.

Out of the past, voices of dead women seemed to come to her.

"Yes, yes, it's that way with them all." They told her that danger was the bread of life to the Rends, and adventure a sufficient atonement for any sin.

That night they made their camp beside a stream that spilled music from ledge to ledge of rock. They ate cold food and slept, still afraid to light a fire. In the morning when Janet awoke, the voice of the water was changed. The stream was veiled with thin ice along the pools, and there was rime on their blankets. She was so stiff that Anson had to lead her up and down before she could walk alone.

The look he bent upon her was dark and absent. Once, as her chilled feet stumbled and he caught her, he said: "I shouldn't have let you come."

"You wanted me," she answered calmly.

"Yes. I—wanted you." He caught her in his arms and pressed rough kisses to her cold cheek. She smiled faintly, conscious in every fiber of his remorse, and of that fiercer passion that warred with it and with her. "That way with them all." Yet each day, each hour now, he would want her less.

She said quietly, "Have you thought what you're goin' to do, Anson?"

Instantly his look chilled. She knew that a dozen wild schemes danced in his brain, and that she had no part in any one of them. "No, not yet," he said. "Anything to get away, anywhere—away from—."

"Justice," said Janet to herself. And again that whisper sounded down the corridors of memory. "It's that way with them all. They always went free and left us to pay." She felt as if hands, kindred yet ghostly hands of women who long ago had loved Rends, helped her on the way she had chosen to tread.

That day the trail led them still higher, and the ranges they saw at noon, ever ahead, were whitened with snow. And that night Anson, who had been broodingly silent for hours, and increasingly, unconsciously impatient of Janet when she showed weakness, said curtly: "It's no good, Janet. You can't stand it. You must go back."

"No," she said gently, "I'm not goin' back."

A moment his fierce, sullen eyes measured her. He repeated: "You can't stand it. I was mad to think of letting you share my—my sufferings."

A small still smile just moved her lips. She said: "Does it hurt you to see me suffer, Anson?"

He answered honestly: You know it does."

Her eyes held him with their mysterious still look. She said, almost in a whisper: "Yet what I suffer now, Anson, ain't to be counted with what I'd have suffered if I'd stayed behind."

"I don't understand you," he said roughly.

"Only you wouldn't have seen me suffer then."

He had no reply for her; but again and again, during the next day, she saw him watching her with that dark, brooding look; and she was glad.

At noon, when they stopped by a pool to eat and drink, she saw herself in the water. She was changed already. Her skirt was torn; her hair hung in dank strands; even her face was thinned and hardened by fatigue. She put up her hands instinctively to remedy the disorder, then dropped them. No. Let him see, let him not be spared one least small sign of what she endured.

That night she was so exhausted that she slept before Anson could bring her food. She woke in the morning to see him

Every girl should be a tomboy until the age of puberty. Until that age there is essentially no difference in the physical development of boy and girl.

It is not enough for you parents to say to your boy and girl, "Go out and play." Their ingenuity is great but not always great enough to keep them constantly active. They must be given every inducement to play—sand piles and swings, tricycles and bicycles, roller skates and coaster wagons.

A normal, healthy child should play so hard that when night comes, and he lays his weary head upon his pillow, within a few minutes the sandman has claimed him for his own.

"Arrested For Cruelty to Animals"

THE other day I went up to The Times office to get my mail.

In the course of conversation with Mr. Davis, the magazine editor, I told him I would like to demonstrate the absurdity and stupidity of the regulation American dietary by means of some animal experiments.

I proposed to take a half-dozen guinea pigs and a half-dozen rabbits and to feed them breakfast, dinner and supper with exactly the same foods as served in the best restaurants of this city. I thought that by placing these animals in a downtown window that the public would learn an object lesson in diet as they saw the poor creatures sicken and die upon the "best" food we serve ourselves.

After I was entirely finished explaining my project, Mr. Davis looked at me quizzically for a moment and answered, "They'd have you arrested for cruelty to animals."

As the thought came to me of countless children just as foolishly fed and just as needlessly made to sicken and die, I wondered!

Starvation Cure for Asthma and Bronchitis

THE following is contributed by Wesley Martin, a gentleman who has done much to enlighten the public concerning asthma.

His ideas presented here make "heap good medicine," but unfortunately he limits their scope to but a limited type of treatment.

Helpful as the strengthening of the diaphragm undoubtedly is, yet every branch of physical reconstruction must be used in the cure of asthma as in most of the other serious chronic diseases:

"A dying man, they say, will catch at a straw. A person suffering from chronic asthma is nearly in as bad a predicament. I would like to warn sufferers against some of the straws which hundreds of asthmatics have clutched at and found to be worse than useless.

"Perhaps the starvation cure is the most popular because it generally brings immediate relief from violent attacks.

"The cause of asthma is in the diaphragm. The stomach being attached to the diaphragm, the heavier it is with food the more it retards the action of the diaphragm, hence to keep the stomach as light as possible is the surest way of preventing violent attacks. Unfortunately asthma has a tendency to weaken the patient so that when he resorts to the semi-starvation method of healing, the system soon becomes less able to resist the attacks and the last state of that man is worse than the first.

"The serum straw is beginning to become popular, probably because there is money in it, and is therefore constantly boosted by unscrupulous doctors. It is too ridiculous to need comment. The cures are about as numerous as they would be with bread pills.

"The inhaling of drugs by smoke or sprays is another popular cure, but most often turns out to be only another straw.

"In many cases, however, it will ward off attacks until the patient regains strength enough to throw off the asthma altogether in which case it certainly cannot be termed a straw.

"One doctor has a glimmering of the truth, and, believing that the weakness of the diaphragm is the fundamental cause of asthma and bronchitis, he causes his patients to have violent fits of vomiting in order to strengthen the diaphragm. It is needless to say this cure is not often suc- [illegible]

"The only certain and scientific cure both for asthma and bronchitis is to so strengthen the diaphragm and abdominal muscles that the breathing has to be perfect under any conditions. This method has never yet failed because when you cannot help breathing perfectly asthma cannot exist.

"The up-to-date doctor is now beginning to realize that asthma cannot be cured without the use of the diaphragm. From 'The Fast Way to Health' by Dr. Frank McCoy I extract the following: 'Difficulty in breathing is the most characteristic symptom of asthma. Inhaling and exhaling the necessary air for the body's use are accomplished mainly by the action of the diaphragm, which is a flat muscle separating the lungs from the stomach and intestines. A permanent cure depends entirely upon the following:

"'First—The development of a strong diaphragm so the patient can inhale and exhale to the extreme with perfect freedom of movement.

"'Second—Avoiding those foods which produce an excess of stomach and intestinal gas, etc., etc.'

"Asthma and chronic bronchitis are closely related and are both cured in the same way.

"Why catch at straws when you can have a life preserver?"

Measles

HAVE you had your measles yet?

There is a prevalent belief among mothers that measles is a necessary disease of childhood. So deep-rooted is this belief that I have known of mothers who deliberately exposed their children by having them live in the same quarters with children suffering from the disease. They do this under the delusion that once having had measles, the child would be immune thereafter.

It is true that measles is a common disease of childhood, but it is untrue that it is a necessary disease. It is common for several reasons. First, almost universal stupidity and ignorance of infant and child feeding. The first opportunity nature has to discharge the accumulated toxic wastes, it proceeds to do so. The skin eruptions of measles, generally associated with congestion of the lungs, and discharge of mucus, is one way nature has of body-waste disposal.

Bacterial inoculation is another potent factor in the production of these skin eruptions. In a later issue in the baby column of this department, I shall deal with the disease of measles at greater length. All I desire to impress now is that it is a preventable and unnecessary disease of childhood.

Nicotine for Rats—and Men

ON OUR highways and byways the scenic beauty of California is cluttered with cigarette ads.

I hold no condemnation for the smoker nor praise for the nonsmoker. As a habit, tobacco smoking or chewing is unnecessary, unhealthful and but a reaction from our stimulating foods and nervous existence. But I hold no brief nor can I see any justification in this insidious propaganda to lead our young men and women into the nicotine habit.

The following article is but one of a series furnished by Mr. Will H. Brown, superintendent of the press bureau of the No-Tobacco League of America. It is reformist propaganda, pure and simple, but the kind of propaganda one wishes one could spread with a thousand times greater momentum:

"If you go into a drug store and call for a certain kind of rat poison, you will find it labeled: 'Pure Nicotine Made From Tobacco.' When a man goes to the cigar counter to purchase a smoke he buys the same kind of poison for himself, but it isn't labeled. That's the only difference. The box containing the nicotine intended for rats bears a skull and cross bones and the words: 'This is Poison. BEWARE!'

"Dr. J. H. Kellogg, the famous editor of the Good Health magazine, commenting upon this situation, truly says: 'Every package of cigarettes, every box of cigars, should be similarly labeled, and every cigar should be wrapped with the same warning. How can any intelligent person imagine that a drug which is deadly to rats can be harmless to man?'

"For several years experiments have been made in removing the nicotine from tobacco, but most of them have failed to leave the 'kick' in tobacco when the nicobeside her, looking darkly down. He said sullenly: "We ought to have been on the trail hours ago."

Dearly Beloved

She saw that both his blankets, as well as her own, covered her, and that beside her burned a small fire. She knew that he still feared pursuit; she said: "You shouldn't have lighted it; it might be seen."

He bit his lips, then broke out violently: "I know! But you needed it; you had to have it . . . Janet, you must go back."

"You should have let me suffer, Anson. All those others did."

He did not notice her vague words. He went on: "You can't stand it. I can. But I can't stand seeing what it costs you. It's a—a weight on me, Janet. I—feel as though I'd never get away—with you here. You remind me. You—hinder me. I can't drag you along with me."

"I'm not the drag you feel, Anson."

"If you love me, Janet—"

"Love?" She caught him up. "This ain't love, Anson. This is—justice."

His dark rage blazed in his face. He stepped up to her. And she said quietly: "Are you goin' to hit me, Anson? Dominick Rend hit Mary Appleby, that time he'd had the fight with Edward Joyce, and she tried to hold him. And Lucy's dress was all tore with Garthwick Rend's spurs after he shot Col. Easton. He threw her down and trod over her to the window. It was a yellow moire dress."

He stood motionless, his lean face white. At last he said with difficulty: "Who told you—that?"

"Nobody. I just know it."

He turned from her then. He divided their food and small equipment in two parts. One of the packs he shouldered. The other he dropped at her feet.

"I shall not strike you," he said. "And I shall not tell you again to go back. But you shan't spoil my chance of escape. There's enough food here to see you home. You can choose which you'll do. But I swear that if you follow me, in spite of what I've told you, I'll stop for you no more than as if you were a stone or a bit of grass."

He went away from her then, and in a moment she shouldered her pack and followed silently.

He did not once look back. She said to herself, with her mysterious little smile: "Soon I'll know."

She followed him all that day along a rough trail soft with wet. When she did not see his footprints, the immemorial solitude of the evergreen forests shut her in. When she found the footprints again, it was like finding freedom. Of him, she had long since lost sight.

Only twice she dared to stop for rest and food. There would be miles between them if she stopped too often. She said: "I'll know soon. It'll be worth while to be sure."

When night came, she made a little fire under a rock, ate, and fell into a sleep like a swoon. From this black pit of unconsciousness the first sunlight hauled her as by a rope. She made shift to light the fire again and boil some coffee. Then she trod out the embers, covered the place with wet moss and took up the trail. Her pack was not beyond her natural strength, but now it bent her down—she was so tired. Still, it was easier, thus, to see his footprints.

Presently she stopped, puzzled. There were Anson's tracks of the day before. But in a wet place there were no less than three distinguishable lines of his footprints, two leading away from her, one returning.

Then she knew. He had come back in the night to see if she was safe.

Neither her face nor her purpose changed, but she bent and pressed the marks with her hands.

That day, the fifth on the trail, she did not see Anson at all. She just walked, walked. All about her the great trees seemed to waver, as if she walked through their reflections in water, and the air weighed heavy on her body.

The night seemed to fall suddenly. She realized then that she herself had fallen some time back. She was lying with her hands in ashes, the ashes of Anson's last fire, which she must have found and uncovered. She huddled there, faintly smiling, as if she found them warm. But they were cold. As it was, she hardly knew if she slept or woke. But she felt her very weariness reaching out to Anson, making him aware of her, drawing him to her by the inevitable cord of love. She had given all to the making of that cord. Was it strong enough to hold a Rend? This was what she waited to know. It seemed as if all those other ghostly women who had loved and suffered for Rends waited with her. But that night he did not come.

She had little recollection of waking or of going on. She found herself on the trail again, and the sun high behind fleeces of luminous cloud. She went on with no continuous consciousness of time or place. The sun seemed to drop down the sky in jerks. Then again it was evening, and she looked back. She saw a great blue-black hill, a mighty ridge cut with a deep cleft and towering on each side into snows. She had crossed Salmonback behind Anson. She had not seen him. She did not know how far ahead he was. But she knew he was there as inevitably as he knew she was there. Love would let neither escape the other.

Something light and chill, blown from Salmonback, touched her hands and face. It was snow.

She went on with increased effort, yet stopping now for nothing. For the first time she realized the possibility of defeat. In the growing dusk she began to talk to herself. "I won't see it," she muttered. "It ain't there. It's just my eyes're tired. The forest's green—green." But all about her it was white.

Walking, she swayed under the pack. She could not outwalk the whiteness or escape the trees. She toiled past one tree, and it rose again directly beside her, a dark shaft towering into voices which she denied, saying: "I don't hear a thing. The air's still as still. It's just a kind of crying in my head." But for hundreds of miles, the forest was crying in the northeast wind.

The snow was dropping now in great wet flakes. It balled on her feet. Its wide whirl made her giddy. The danger cleared her senses, however. She leaned against a tree and questioned the coming night. She knew that in this night she would probably die.

She set her lips and pressed her pack against the tree so she could grip the straps. She held them to ease her shoulders. With her arms crossed thus on her bosom she pressed indomitably on. She meant to die as near Anson as she could. She fell often; her face was cut and bruised, her feet numbed, her arms so stiff she could not uncross them from her bosom. But her will held steadfast.

At last she dropped and could not rise. Strength was drained suddenly from her limbs, though her soul still burned its clear unquenched flame. She struggled to her knees.

Beside the trail she saw the great fan of the roots of a fallen tree, roofed with white. She crawled into the hollow those roots had once filled. She was too weak to rid herself of the pack. Propped upon it, she waited—for Anson—or for death.

She did not suffer. She smiled faintly; felt a strange sense of peace. All the trouble of her flesh had gone from her. Only her love was following Anson now. Her thoughts were with him. She was not alone. Sister women, long dead and long loving, were beside her. She saw the snowlike shadows in the folds of a yellow moire dress.

Then—then she knew that she was with him.

Unconscious of time, she thought at first that she had died, there under the roots, and that her spirit walked beside him on his dreadful journey. But it was morning. And he was carrying her.

Her mind was clear and still as water. She stirred her face on his shoulder. He was holding her in his arms and walking steadily. She was a little woman, and all the Rends were great men. He looked far ahead, his fierce dark face raised. She glanced from him to the woods and thought she recognized the trail down which he trod.

She lifted her hand and touched his cheek. He looked down, and his look was new and strange to her. In a moment all her strength of soul departed, as if she had no need of it any more. She was just a little, feeble, sick woman. She said tremulously: "Put me down, Anson."

"No. You're weak, Janet. Stay where you are."

Her eyes, blind with love, yearned on him. "So you came back!" she murmured.

"Yes. I came back."

His eyes gazed into a distance beyond the forest or any hill. He was still remote from her—escaping, but in another way. She whispered vaguely: "I'd have suffered—worse—if I'd stayed at home." For the first time it sounded like a justification.

"I know," he answered absently. But he did not look at her.

"Anson, where you takin' me?" she whispered.

"Home."

She shut her eyes. "When—where—did you find me?" she breathed.

"It was late," he answered. "I turned at the first snow. But I'd gone a long way on. I was a long while getting back to where you were waiting. I made a fire and fed you. I held you all night. And at dawn I turned back home with you."

"Why?"

He looked at her gravely. "You'd have died if I'd left you again."

"Even then," she said, "I wouldn't have suffered as I would if you'd left me up home!"

"I know." He looked down at her calmly now. He was more calm than she had ever seen him, and stronger.

"Anson." Her breath came in gasps. "You remember—what's waitin' for you—back home?"

"Yes, Janet, I know. But I can't let you suffer—this way—any more."

"You're takin' me back to—to save me?"

"To save you if I can." Some quality of his strength escaped her; he was out of reach, though he held her in his arms; he did not need her any more; he did not fight in spirit with her; he was surrendered, and therefore free. He said: "I can't save you all suffering for me, girl. I'm guilty of that, anyway. But I'll save you the shame of suffering for a man that's been too weak to suffer for himself."

"You're willin' to turn back with me, willin' to take—"

"To take what's coming to me? Yes."

There was again that living silence. Then Janet said strongly: "Set me down. Now I know."

"What, Janet?"

"That at last there's one Rend loves justice and right—and a woman—better than himself."

Love? In the place where his soul had come to stand—beyond her now—the word had less meaning. He questioned her mutely. Life and love thrilled her. She said again: "Set me down, Anson Rend."

He obeyed, holding her with hands under her elbows, for she was very weak. She crossed her wrists on her breasts as though she yet held the pack. Her eyes, indomitable with love, shone upon him above this gesture of meekness. She said: "Look at me, Anson. Do I love you?"

He said solemnly: "God knows you do, Janet."

"You love me?"

"You know I do."

"Yes. I know it now. The rest don't matter. Even if you don't forgive me, it don't matter beside that."

"Forgive you? What do you mean?"

"Anson—listen. Back there—the first night—when I looked in at Warrender's window—"

"Janet?"

"It was a livin' man I saw, Anson. You didn't kill Warrender, Anson. Go and make your peace with him—"

They stood, gazing at each other. In the man's eyes was all that Janet might have died for, and never have seen. But seeing it now, she was strong—even strong enough to hold her man in her arms when he hid his face against her shoulder.

June Roses

Down by the hedges the blushing June roses
Scented the air with their perfume so sweet.
Out in the meadow and down by the hillside
Violets modestly bloomed at our feet.

Up in the old oak the robins were singing,
Building their nests in some dense leafy spray,
Else they were feeding the little wee robins
Up in the treetop that long summer day.

He and I wandered unmindful of robins,
We were so happy, as happy could be,
What did we care for the gay world of fashion,
Our ship was coming in over the sea!

He a wreath making of lovely June roses
Crowned me his queen in that old grassy lane.
Ah, me, that love, like June roses, should wither,
Its memory bringing me sorrow and pain!

Down in the dell, where little bright buttercups
Looked in the grass, tiny sunflecks of gold,
Whispered he softly the sweetest of stories
The old, old story that never seems old.

Down by the hedges the blushing June roses
Blossom again as in dear olden times,
Birds sitting still in the old oak branches,
Sing to their birdlings most wonderful rhymes.

Blue sky and sunlight and bees humming brightly
All look the same as they did of yore—
Naught but the vows and the love light are wanting,
And he who made them one short year before!

apathy, answered the question in the mind of the above quoted author in 1874, when he said: "All the mysteries concerning health disappear just in proportion to man's acquaintance with this sacred product—the body, its parts and principles, separate, united or in action."

The article just quoted was published in Right Living, a splendid little magazine devoted to the interests of the osteopathic profession. More popularized articles like this ought to be published by the osteopaths. Forming a group that is most respected by the masses they should take the lead in educating a public that is clamoring for light on drugless healing.

Bobbed Hair and Strength

FROM the time of the hair-cutting episode of Samson and Delilah down to the present day, the notion seems to be thoroughly imbued in many people that strength lies in the hair.

The long-haired lassie preaches it against the short-haired ones, saying they will lose their strength when they get their hair shingled. The bobbed-hair lassie in turn retorts that the growing of long hair saps the strength.

The writer of this department being a man, wishes to take a neutral stand. Should you ask me as to whether long hair or short hair yields more strength—frankly I do not know. I don't believe the contention is capable of proof. Anyhow, I'm from Missouri. Maybe some of you can "show me."

Master or Slave

FROM the viewpoint of philosophy it is but a hair that divides the master from the slave. We know from a study of life that both mastership and slaveship are in a broad sense necessary to each other: Mastery of man's baser emotions; slavery to nature's immutable laws.

Mastery of our baser emotions, mastery of our passions, mastery of our lusts—these are man's greatest conflicts.

It is not within my province to discuss these mental and moral forces only in so far as they are bound up with man's physical instincts and desires. Man's mental nature the psychologists can more ably discuss, while his moral being comes within the scope of the educator and religionist.

The body of man, the mind of man, the soul of man, all these are one—intertwined, interdependent, indissolubly connected.

The body beautiful will house the mind and soul beautiful. To build the body beautiful—that requires more than all other factors combined—a will to do, a courage to persist, an impelling determination!

You have read in these columns over and over again of the things to make you well and to keep the body radiant with the energy of health. You have heard of the laws of the physicians, their prescriptions of diet, the sound common sense of hygiene, and the detailed techniques of body care. All this is indeed very fine and thoroughly useful, but of itself it is like the house that was built upon the sands. When the storms of lust, desire, and passion sweep the human soul and rack the pampered body, this superstructure of right living goes toppling into the sea of lost hopes. The problem of restoration of health is essentially mental and moral, not physical. Why? Because the keynote of health and beauty and vigor is simplicity and self-control—simplicity in our living habits, simplicity of desire, simplicity in the things that we believe necessary for life; self-control and dominance over the instincts, lusts and passions.

We commonly speak of habit fiends. The dope slave and liquor slave are common spectacles in the public eye, but there is one type of slavery which is far more rampant than the extremest liquor and drug slavery—our slavery to our bad habits, our slavery to our luxuries, our slavery to gluttony, physical and sensual.

Most people know that gluttonous food habits are the cause of their ill health, yet is that knowledge sufficient for restoration? It requires more than knowledge to give up that juicy steak, that delicious French pastry and stimulating coffee! It is far easier to follow the course of least resistance and indulge our senses and delight our tastes than to muster that will power which will subject our desires to the things which are rational and health building.

How many of us have started the day with the determination that we will rigorously [illegible] "Strong in the mind, but weak, oh, how pitifully weak is the flesh!"

Tricycles and Kiddie Cars

RECENTLY a mother came to me with a child who was listless, tired and indifferent. The mother was quite an intelligent woman. The child had been brought up in a sensible manner. She was bright and to all outward appearances seemed to be normal. The diet was good and the home environment excellent.

As the mother explained, the child would on every occasion, mope until she "got on her nerves." There was no disease so far as I could ascertain. What was wrong?

A little careful questioning as to the child's daily conduct and habits brought out some conditions which readily accounted for this lassitude and inertia.

The mother was proud of the charming appearance her little girl made. She dressed her in ruffles and laces, and the mother just "doted" on her cuteness.

"Little girls must not soil their nice clean dresses," this was the admonition that this little one had to heed and obey. In the school yard and playground, when the rest of the tiny tots frolicked and leaped and jumped, this little one had to remember her starched linens and fluffy ruffles or mother would scold when she returned home. Since mother lived in a nice, respectable neighborhood, of course it was necessary that the little one be clean, and "Don't do this and don't do that" was the constant admonition.

All of you are thoroughly familiar with the "don't" type of mother—slaves to their neighbors' opinions and who, at any expense, must live up to their neighbors' ideas. This child, as well as innumerable other children, was not in need of cod liver oil and iron tonics. Kiddie cars and tricycles—they were the only medicines she needed. To go bouncing and hullaballooing up and down the street, to go riding and pushing, this was far more essential than starched dresses and fancy frills. A sand pile and a swing in the back yard, a tricycle and a kiddie car to expend the surplus energy, and last but not least, a pair of old coveralls in which to run and jump and skip and play and slip and fall and laugh and cry.

Why in the name of the seven hills of Rome a mother wants to make a "perfect lady" out of a wee tot, is incomprehensible to me. How much more charming is that lithe and active body with the glistening eyes and the glow in the cheeks—all of

Stomach Tablets

Has Health Secret Been Found?

What is Stomach Trouble? What has happened when the stomach fails to digest your food? What is the real cause of the trouble? What is the condition of the stomach itself when it fails to do its work?

One of the greatest Stomach Specialists in this country says it is inflammation. That the linings become inflamed, interfering with its action. This same thing is what takes place when trouble develops in any other organ. The tissue becomes inflamed and sore. Every trouble is traceable to an inflamed condition of the linings. The X-Ray has proven this absolutely.

O-M Tablets are for internal inflammation. A new discovery and a wonderfully effective remedy. Whether it is your stomach, kidneys, bladder or intestinal tract that is giving you trouble, it is inflammation. The organ or tissue is in an inflamed condition. That is why O-M Tablets are giving such wonderful results. They allay internal inflammation. Many write that the week's trial alone has completely overcome their trouble.

Send this notice with 10c and we will send you a good week's trial treatment. The Tablets can be had at druggists in two sizes, 65c and $1. For week trial treatments, address Old Mission Laboratories, Pasadena, Calif.

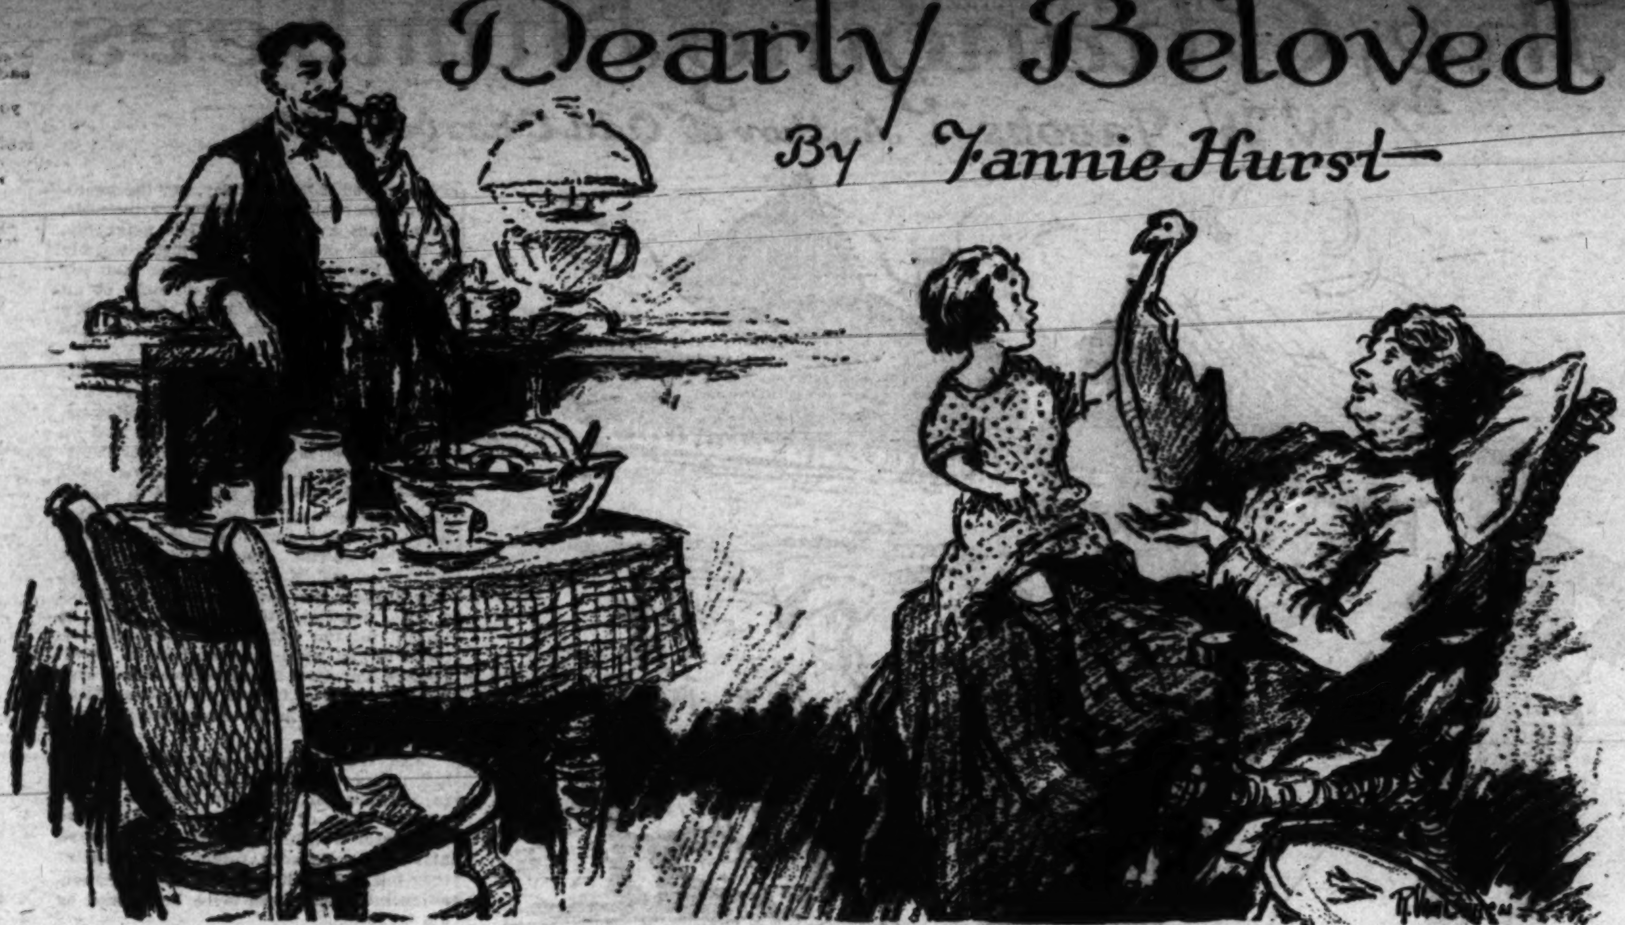
By Fannie Hurst



THERE are no two ways about it, Maude Saunders does lay herself open to criticism!

She is all blowy. You feel as if you wanted to grab hold of her, catch up the bright, straggly hairs with hair pins, make her collar stay straight and rub a smattering of powder over her shining, pink cheeks.

She looks as if she had blown in on a windy day from somewhere. And she usually has. Her house looks that way, too.

There is everything in that living room of the Saunders' house, from her eldest son Eldridge's new aeroplane-model on a fine old high boy, to the baby's pet live rooster. Maude's household is nothing to be proud of. She'll be the first to agree with you, laughing and tucking in those perpetual stray hairs of hers.

In a way it is particularly unfortunate, because Stanley Saunders teaches chemistry in Linwald College and, as a member of the faculty, comes in for his share of criticism about the upkeep of his menage.

True, there are five sons and it was a toss-up between Manual Training for Eldridge or a maid servant. The old frame house the Saunders live in is nothing more than an enormous barn, but it was the only thing available within walking distance of the college. And when the Dyers moved to Linwald, Mo., from Potterstown, O., it was about the only thing to be had, except one of the stodgy conventional boxes on College avenue, so in they moved.

It did not feaze Maude. She just closed off the top story and one evening she and Stanley and four of her five sons uncrated the furniture, such kicked-up pieces as they were, and set up the household goods.

The members of the faculty gasped when they called. Maude didn't believe in carpets or curtains. Said they inhibited the children and cramped their style. "Inhibited the children—cramped style—" whatever that meant! Stan smoked his pipe and smiled and looked at Maude while she talked. That was exasperating, too. The wilder Maude's ideas, the more the slow amusement would come over Stan.

She was always out of breath. With enthusiasm. Dyeing Easter eggs and then attending a benefit-bridge with blue, green and red fingers. Rigging up a tent out of a perfectly good table cloth for the twins. Spending the night down in the negro quarter with Lena, the campus laundress, when she almost died having her first baby.

Well, Lena didn't die, nor come so close as it had looked there for awhile; and Maude might have spent a few nights redding up her own place, from the look of it.

Stan walked down as far as the pike with Maude the night she decided to spend it down in the negro quarter with Lena and then walked home in the dark alone, puffing his pipe and smiling. That exasperating, slow smile of his.

Ryan, the second Saunders youngster, was a disgrace in the sight of man. That boy might have been a slum child. Barefoot at least eight months in the year, raggedy little vagabond, it was a sin and a shame to see him, all through the long summers, lying on his stomach in the lush grasses south of the campus, reading and digging his toes in the dirt.

The fact that Ryan said shoes and collars irked him wasn't sufficient excuse for his mother to permit him to be seen around town that way. Why, she owed it to her husband as a member of the Linwald faculty not to permit their son to go about looking as if he belonged to a family of squatters.

To dine at the Saunders' house was a revelation, to say the least, if you came from any kind of home where system and order prevailed. Everybody cooked. Stan with an apron tied about his middle. Maude with her hair straggling and perpetually pursing out her lips to blow it out of her eyes. Eldridge peeling potatoes. Ryan grinding coffee. The twins setting table and even the baby in his high chair adding to the din by pounding with a spoon.

There was plenty of good, hot, well-seasoned food, once you sat down to it—Maude could cook—and the children were invariably helped to large, wholesome portions before ever an adult was served. But the clearing away! Maude and Stanley racing each other to the kitchen. The boys sliding along the bare floors as they helped clear the table. Baby crying or crowing in his high chair and sometimes—over all—the radio squeaking.

MAUDE SAUNDERS looks as if she had blown in on a windy day from somewhere. Her house looks that way, too. It's unfortunate, because Stanley Saunders teaches chemistry at Linwald College, and comes in for his share of criticism.

The faculty gasped when they called. Maude thought curtains and carpets inhibited the children and cramped their style. But Maude always had time to make paper kites for the children, and serve on public welfare committees, to read to little Ryan and to carry Stan's dinner to him when he was busy experimenting in his little shack.

Her children adored her. And Stan thought life just could not be any sweeter.

Maude's house was a mad house. No wonder she had time to serve on all the public welfare committees in town. No wonder she allowed Stan, who was working on some kind of a vacuum-cleaner invention, to blow dust all over the house and then try to suck it up again with his not-so-dependable device.

No wonder Maude had time to read to Ryan whenever he came curling up into a ball at her feet and asked her to. No wonder the twins got her to build a pergola for them with her very own hands, that summer the Richmond youngsters had one imported for them from Japan.

The Saunders pergola was just as pretty, and every inch of it, except carrying off the lumber, was put together with her own hands. Trust Maude to potter at things like that. The dust could mount in her living room, but the whole of a summer morning she could sit in the side yard, snipping orange and green tissue paper into enormous kites for the twins and some of their little cronies.

It never seemed to trouble Maude, the neatness of the youngsters of the other faculty families or the methodical households and the spring cleanings and the Swiss curtains and the Axminster rugs and the spick and span little exteriors of the houses on College avenue.

Nobody was ever expected to be home on time for meals at the Saunders home and nobody ever was. Sometimes Stan never even came home after college, but spent his time pottering in a little shack he used for a chemistry laboratory down by the pike.

Sooner or later one of the youngsters turned up down there with his hot dinner in a pail and sometimes Maude stood outside and threw pebbles at the shack window, but never came nearer unless he appeared at the door to signify he was free of work.

Of all the loose-lived vagabond families! And of all the worshiped women in the world! Ryan, who has since become a world-eminent author, used to trail up to bed nights with his little face all tear-wet with the ecstasy of having such a mother to kiss goodnight.

Eldridge used to scratch outside his mother's door mornings, for all the world like a little dog, for the privilege of carrying her downstairs to breakfast in his arms. The twins tussled to be the first to do her bidding. Her baby crowed at her coming.

And Stan, who always had two or three buttons off and whose cuffs were really just too unpardonably frayed, Stan, sitting there smoking his pipe with that slow, amused smile of his.

Sometimes it seemed to him, regarding this dear woman who was his; this curious, understanding woman, who forgot all the little things but never, never overlooked one of the big things—sometimes it seemed to Stan as he sat smoking and regarding her, that life just could not be any sweeter.

CARE OF THE BODY

BY PHILIP M. LOVELL, N.D.

Gas

WERE you to ask me for an ailment which has for its victims more people, old and young, in every social stratum and walk of life, unhesitatingly I would say intestinal and stomach gas.

From the infant to the centenarian, none escapes its unpleasant symptoms.

The subject of gas fermentation is larger than can be dealt with in one issue of this department. I propose to deal with it more exhaustively in several succeeding issues.

What is gas? What is its cause? How is it formed? What is the physiology which induces it? How can it be prevented? What foods are gas-forming? What are non-gas-forming foods? What other factors tend to govern gas formation? What is the treatment for an attack? How can it be minimised? What are the mistakes of medicinal treatment?

These are essential questions which must be fully understood and solved before one can secure the perfect digestion free from gas distress.

To commence with, let me enunciate a cardinal principle of natural healing. This principle forms the keystone of the foundation of natural therapy.

Natural therapeutics can be summed up in one broad-meaning word, elimination. Behind this all-embracing word, "elimination," must come the understanding that it is getting the waste materials and poisons out of the body which keeps you well, while the poisons which are not discharged, but remain inside the body, make you sick.

This is foundational. Upon it the entire hypothesis of nature's healing powers must rise or fall.

If you accept this principle you will welcome the mild fever with its burning of toxic waste; the running nose with its discharge of mucus, pus and bacteria, the foul breath clearing the lungs of noxious gases; the yellow tinged, malodorous urine, cleansing the kidneys of the toxins clogging the bloodstream; the profuse sweats of the sweat glands, cleaning house of accumulated fermented by-products of cell activity; and, last but not least, the nauseous, painful belching of gases formed by putrefaction and fermentation of decaying foodstuffs in an inflamed digestive system.

Establishing the principle that belching is a process of elimination, we must next ascertain how gas is formed.

Those of you who are reading the articles on popularized physiology, will recall the processes of digestion in the stomach. You will remember that hydrochloric acid acidulates the food and prepares it to be acted upon by the pepsin and rennin of the stomach. You will further recall my explanation of hyperacidity, that is, too much acidity; also hypoacidity, or too little acidity. Both of these conditions are the result of stomach inflammation, which in turn is caused by improper food and wrong dietetic habits.

By improper food I mean food that is relatively indigestible and food that is predigested.

Food in wrong and vicious combination and above all, food in excessive amounts far beyond the capacity of the stomach to handle—these are the principal factors responsible for stomach inflammation and consequent gas formation.

Now, to resume the threads of our deductions, wrong foods, as here stated, cause stomach inflammation. Stomach inflammation causes too great, too little, too concentrated, or too diluted secretion of digestive juices of the stomach. These, in turn, do not adequately or properly digest the food, permitting decay and fermentation. The result of decay and fermentation is gas formation.

If any of you are in an experimental mood, take a regulation American meal of soup, thoroughly cooked and condimented; fried, broiled or cooked meat with condiments; mashed, fried or boiled potatoes; cooked or baked beans; coffee, cream and sugar; white bread and salt butter; mince pie and ice cream—place this mixture, which you call a "balanced ration" in an incubator at a temperature of 100 deg. Fahrenheit, and surround it with plenty of moisture. At the close of twelve hours you will have a stenching, nauseating, horrible-smelling mess.

Let us change the mental picture. Instead of an incubator we have the stomach and intestinal tract with the same heat, the same conditions of temperature and moisture. Practically the same results ensue.

Recently, a series of X-ray experiments were performed upon a miscellaneous group of people from every walk of life. They were given a meal of bismuth subnitrate in buttermilk. This mixture was used by the X-ray technician because of its capacity and because it shows in the X-ray photograph. Pictures were taken every three hours, showing the progress the meal had made through the approximately thirty feet of digestive tube.

The results of this experiment were as follows:

But one individual discharged this chemical meal in six hours (which should be the proper duration of time for complete digestion and elimination.) Three discharged in seven, seven and one-half and eight hours respectively; four in eight hours and less than fourteen; six in fourteen to twenty-four hours; two in twenty-four to thirty-six hours; two in thirty-six to forty-eight hours; and four in fifty-two, sixty-six, ninety-four and 110 hours respectively.

With two exceptions none of these patients admitted being constipated. By this experiment you can readily see why gas is formed. From it we can deduce the first cardinal rule for gas elimination, namely—food which is not retained, but which passes through the digestive tract quickly, will generally not produce gas.

This is but one factor. Next week we shall discuss other phases of gas production and prevention.

Drug Addiction and Crime

THE Western Osteopath, a splendidly edited magazine devoted to the interests of the osteopathic profession, publishes a very fine article on the drug evil. From it I excerpted the following:

"It is estimated that more than nine-tenths of all murders, hold-ups and daring robberies are now committed by addicts. It is especially the addict of heroin who is capable of cruel and daring crimes. The name "heroin" is derived from the psychology of the addict. Under the drug's influence he feels he is a hero. He will dare anything. He will do anything.

"America, richest country in the world, and the country with no apparent enemy, is the special objective of organized exploitation. The latest reliable figures show that Italy consumes one grain of narcotic drugs per capita per annum; Germany, two; England, three; France, four, and the United States, thirty-six!

"Already the amount consumed in the United States is enough to drug every man, woman and child in the entire nation for thirty days out of every year. The amount consumed is increasing at the rate of more than one-half grain per capita per year. Our country is rapidly becoming a drugged nation. We need not wonder at the persistent wave of crime and other alarming symptoms in our social structure."

Health, Old Age and Disease

"OUR subject presents the picture of man running the race of life.

"On one side of him we see health, offering him every aid possible to attain old age in happiness and contentment. On the other hand is disease, striving to gain a foothold that shall thwart the 100 year plan on which the body is built, and bring it to an early grave, or at least to premature senility.

"The winners in this race are all too few for this progressive century. Yet there are enough to pass the goal to prove the practicability of attaining that which nature craves—long life. However, the number who complete a happy, useful century are too few. With all our advance in knowledge, and all our scientific discoveries, it is rather startling to find that the span of man's life has lengthened so little. Is the failure in 'the ounce of prevention' or the 'pound of cure?'

"'All that a man hath will he give for his life.' And yet it is said that 300,000 people will die this year from preventable diseases.

"That system of practice which discovers the earliest deviation from health will best preserve the body in condition to attain longevity.

"The physical culturist says 'life is organization in action.'

"The psychotherapist believes that 'with man, as with dolls, the heads are the most fragile and are in most constant need of repair.'

"Coue says that autosuggestion is destined to develop into one of the most powerful curative elements at the disposal of the physician. 'A merry heart doeth good like a medicine, but 'broken spirit drieth the bones.'

"The endocrinologist claims that by the examination of the ductless glands he is able to forecast the approximate length of life, and by giving them support, prolong youth and retard old age.

"Sir James Mackenzie, consulting physician in the London Hospital, in his recent book, 'The Future of Medicine,' expresses his outspoken criticism of the teaching in the medical colleges in general. These suggestions, being set forth by one in his high position, and offered for constructive purposes only, give double weight to the opinions expressed therein.

"He says: 'If we seek to find out what the facilities offered for the detection and cure of disease in the stage when it has not yet damaged the tissues are, we discover that there is little consideration given to this aspect of the matter. There are evidences which would surely indicate the nature of disease in its earliest stages were we capable of detecting them. The reason why we fail to detect these evidences is that medical knowledge has not yet progressed far enough to inform us how to set about finding them. Obviously, the methods sufficient for the investigation of the last stages of disease are not sufficient for the investigation of the first stages.

"'The next step is to recognize that if progress cannot be carried further with our present conceptions and methods, we must look out for a new concept as well as new methods. To get a thorough understanding of disease, we must recognize the symptoms, not only by their presence, but by understanding the mechanism of their production, and their bearing on the future health of the patient.'

"Again he says, 'The fact that medicine is becoming more and more complex implies that it is being pursued along wrong lines; for a subject that is based on natural laws becomes easier to understand as the laws become better known.'

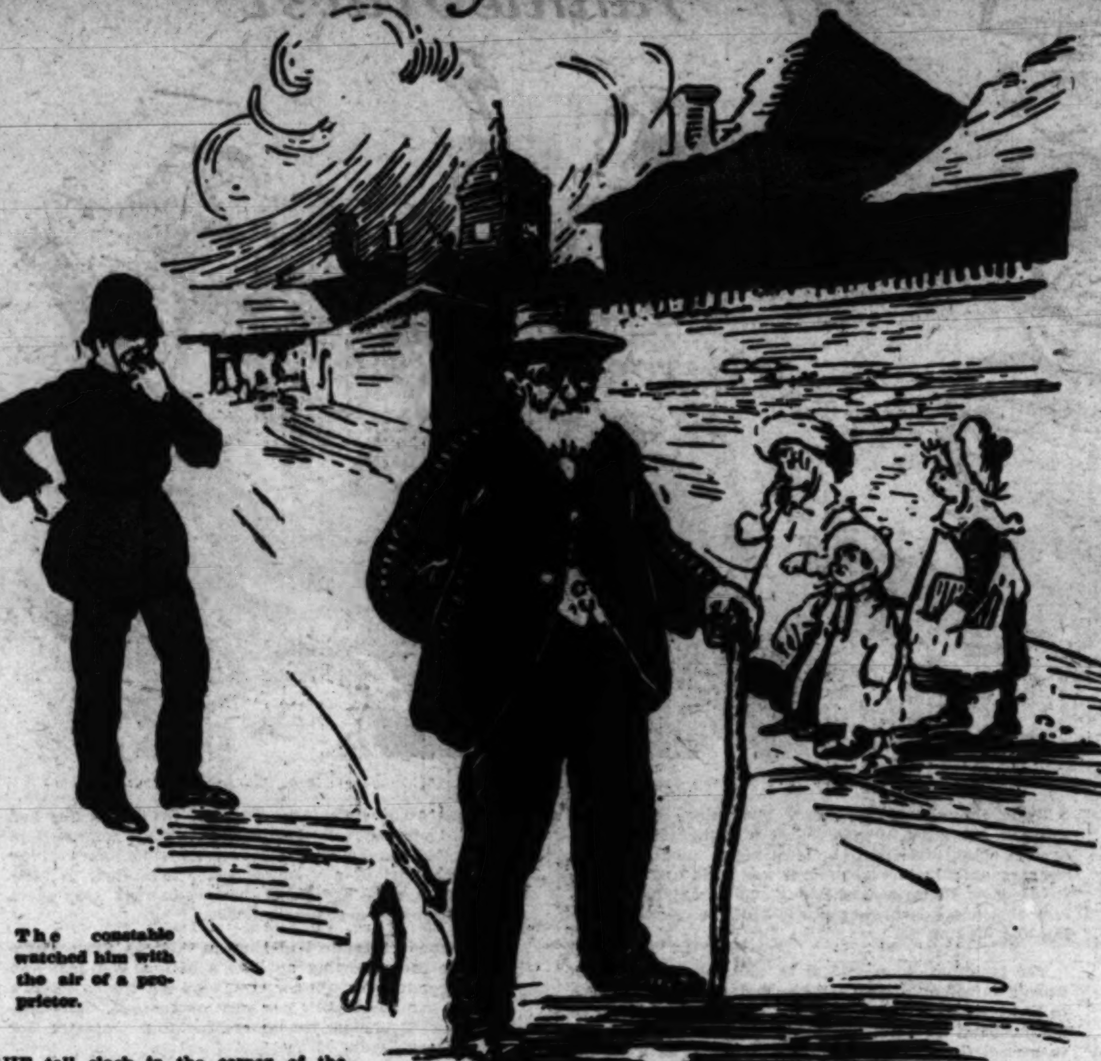
The Changing Numbers

By W. W. Jacobs · Author of "Odd Charges" Etc.



The constable watched him with the air of a proprietor.

THE tall clock in the corner of the small living-room had just struck 8 as Mr. Samuel Gunnill came stealthily down the winding staircase and, opening the door at the foot, stepped with an appearance of great care and humility into the room. He noticed with some anxiety that his daughter, Selina, was apparently engrossed in her task of attending to the plants in the window, and that no preparations whatever had been made for breakfast.

Miss Gunnill's horticultural duties seemed interminable. She snipped off dead leaves with painstaking precision, and administered water with the jealous care of a druggist compounding a prescription; then, with her back still toward him, she gave vent to a sigh far too intense in its nature to have reference to such trivalities as plants. She repeated it twice, and at the second time Mr. Gunnill, almost without his knowledge, uttered a deprecatory cough.

His daughter turned with alarming swiftness and, holding herself very upright, favored him with a glance in which indignation and surprise were very fairly well mingled.

"That white one—that one at the end," said Mr. Gunnill, with an appearance of concentrated interest, "that's my favorite."

Miss Gunnill put her hands together and a look of infinite long-suffering came upon her face, but she made no reply.

"Always has been," continued Mr. Gunnill, feverishly, "from a—from a cutting."

"Bailed out," said Miss Gunnill in a deep and thrilling voice, "bailed out at 1 o'clock in the morning, brought home singing loud enough for half a dozen, and then talking about flowers!"

Mr. Gunnill coughed again.

"I was dreaming," pursued Miss Gunnill, plaintively, "sleeping peacefully, when I was awoke by a horrible noise."

"That couldn't ha' been me," protested her father. "I was only a bit cheerful. It was Benjamin Ely's birthday yesterday, and after we left the Lion they started singing, and I just hummed to keep 'em company. I wasn't singing, mind you, only humming—when up comes that interfering Cooper and takes me off."

Miss Gunnill shivered, and with her pretty cheek in her hand sat by the window the very picture of despondency. "Why didn't he take the others?" she inquired.

"Ah!" said Mr. Gunnill, with great emphasis, "that's what a lot more of us would like to know. P'rhaps if you'd been more polite to Mrs. Cooper, instead o' putting it about that she looked old enough to be his mother, it wouldn't have happened."

His daughter shook her head impatiently and, on Mr. Gunnill making an allusion to breakfast, expressed surprise that he had got the heart to eat anything. Mr. Gunnill pressing the point, however, she arose and began to set the table, the undue care with which she smoothed out the creases of the table cloth, and the mathematical exactness with which she placed the various articles, all being so many extra smarts in his wound. When she finally placed on the table enough food for a dozen people he began to show signs of a little spirit.

"Ain't you going to have any?" he demanded, as Miss Gunnill resumed her seat by the window.

"Me?" said the girl, with a shudder. "Breakfast? The disgrace is breakfast enough for me. I couldn't eat a morsel; it would choke me."

Mr. Gunnill eyed her over the rim of his tea-cup. "I come down an hour ago," he said casually, as he helped himself to some bacon.

Miss Gunnill started despite herself. "Oh!" she said, listlessly.

"And I see you making a very good breakfast all by yourself in the kitchen," continued her father, in a voice not free from the taint of triumph.

The discomfited Selina rose and stood regarding him; Mr. Gunnill, after a vain attempt to meet her gaze, busied himself with his meal.

"The idea of watching every mouthful I eat!" said Miss Gunnill, tragically; "the idea of complaining because I have some breakfast! I'd never have believed it of you, never! It's shameful! Fancy grudging your own daughter the food she eats!"

Mr. Gunnill eyed her in dismay. In his confusion he had overestimated the capacity of his mouth, and he now strove in vain to reply to this shameful perversion of his meaning. His daughter stood watching him with grief in one eye and calculation in the other, and just as he had put himself into a position to exercise his rights of free speech, gave a pathetic sniff and walked out of the room.

She stayed indoors all day, but the necessity of establishing his innocence took Mr. Gunnill out a great deal. His neighbors, in the hope of further excitement, warmly pressed him to go to prison rather than pay a fine, and instanced the example of an officer in the Salvation Army, who, in very different circumstances, had elected to take that course.

Mr. Gunnill assured them that only his known antipathy to the army, and the fear of being regarded as one of its followers, prevented him from doing so. He paid instead a fine of 10 shillings and, after listening to a sermon, in which his silver hairs served as the text, was permitted to depart.

His feeling against the police constable increased with the passing of the days. The constable watched him with the air of a proprietor, and Mrs. Cooper's remark that "her husband had had his eye upon him for a long time, and that he had better be careful for the future," was faithfully retailed to him within half an hour of its utterance. Convivial friends counted his cups for him; teetotal friends more than hinted that Cooper was in the employ of his good angel.

Miss Gunnill's two principal admirers had an arduous task to perform. They had to attribute Mr. Gunnill's disaster to the vindictiveness of Cooper, and at the same time agree with his daughter that it served him right. Between father and daughter they had a difficult time, Mr. Gunnill's sensitiveness having been much heightened by his troubles.

"Cooper ought not to have taken you," said Herbert Sims for the fifteenth time.

"He must ha' seen you like it dozens o' times before," said Ted Drill, who, in his determination not to be outdone by Mr. Sims, was not displaying his usual judgment. "Why didn't he take you then? That's what you ought to have asked the magistrate."

"I don't understand you," said Mr. Gunnill with an air of cold dignity.

"Why," said Mr. Drill, "what I mean is—look at that night, for instance, when—"

He broke off suddenly, even his enthusiasm not being proof against the extraordinary contortions of visage in which Mr. Gunnill was indulging.

"When?" prompted Selina and Mr. Sims together. Mr. Gunnill, after first daring him with his eye, followed suit.

"That night at the Crown," said Mr. Drill, awkwardly. "You know; when you thought that Joe Baggs was the landlord. You tell 'em; you tell it best. I've roared over it."

"I don't know what you're driving at," said the harassed Mr. Gunnill bitterly.

"H'm!" said Mr. Drill, with a weak laugh. "I've been mixing you up with somebody else."

Mr. Gunnill, obviously relieved, said that he ought to be more careful, and pointed out, with some feeling, that a lot of mischief was caused that way.

"Cooper wants a lesson, that's what he muster words for the real object of his visit—Lella Fathouma.

In Paris it would have been the most natural thing in the world to draw her name into the conversation. But here something seemed to check him.

He had already risen, had already said au revoir, when he mentioned her finally.

"How is Madame Fathouma?" he said.

"Quite well," came the measured answer, and, immediately dismissing the subject: "You will lunch with me tomorrow at the Belvedere?"

"Gladly!" murmured Roger de Villemot. "I hope you and Madame Fathouma will dine with me soon," he went on, trying to make his voice appear casual.

"I am sorry," replied Sidi Mahmoud, "but she is out of town."

Roger de Villemot looked up. He remembered that only a few moments before he had heard her voice. He was quite certain that the other had lied. It disturbed him. It could not be jealousy. Sidi Mahmoud had never shown the slightest trace of it in Paris. Was it the habitual oriental reticence where a man's female relatives were concerned?

He spoke of his affair that evening to Capt. Grandchamp of his regiment, who had lived a lifetime in North Africa. He mentioned no names; inquired simply how he should go about to meet an Arab woman whom he had known in Paris and who here, in Algiers, seemed thousands of miles away.

"Did she encourage you?" asked Grandchamp.

"Oh—she kissed me."

"What's a kiss more or less?" laughed the other.

"Laugh all you want to. But what shall I do? Shall I write her a note?"

"Any other wives in the house?"

"Two."

"Then don't write! Here"—he jotted down an address—"tell your troubles to Bibi Kenza."

"Who is she?"

"Once she was a dancer. And today she makes a living by charging young fools—like you, for instance, handsomely for her services!"

He found Bibi Kenza in a little shop, bright with merchandise, twinkling, faceted bottles, curiously shaped glasses, ivory eggs, and mysterious green boxes of cosmetics. She was a huge, elderly woman in whose features the thickness of eyelid and nostril betrayed the fact that there was a drop of Soudan negro blood tainting her Arab race.

She cut short his halting explanations with a ribald burst of laughter. "Tell me the woman's name and her husband's!"

He told her.

"I shall talk to her, Christian."

"How?"

"The stick to the bean-seller," laughed Bibi Kenza, "but confidence to the one who comes selling perfumes and antimony!" She indicated her boxes of cosmetics. "I shall let you know her answer."

It was a mingling of feelings, partly shame and embarrassment, partly jealousy, partly a sub-conscious surging of fear, which kept Roger de Villemot from seeing Sidi Mahmoud during the next week.

Once, on a late, cloudy afternoon, he walked through the Street of the Lizard, and, obeying an impulse, stepped into a dark postern across the way from the Arab's house. He wondered if Fathouma had received his message, and what her reply would be. He stared at the door, almost as if trying to pierce it with the strength of his passion.

He saw it open and, preceded and followed by liveried black servants, three women leave the house. They were burnoused and veiled but he was sure that one was Fathouma. He recognized her by the little lilt in her walk, by her soft laugh as she gave a coin to a ragged, bakshish-begging urchin.

The three women turned down the street, while the servants threw out flat palms to cut through the throng of haggling Algerian and Moroccan Jews.

"Give way, Oh sons of Israel!" they cried. "Give way for the household of Sidi Mahmoud Chedli!"

The Marquis stared after them. An impetuous yearning leaped into his blood full-fledged. But through the blurred indistinctiveness of his overwhelming passion, more sober counsel prevailed. He turned sharply on his heel.

It was with a sweep of relief that the next morning he saw his soldier servant usher Bibi Kenza into his apartment.

"I spoke to Lella Fathouma," she said. "She sent you a message—two messages—"

"Well?"

"The first is that occasion, like clouds, pass away; and the second that she who introduces herself between the onion and the peel does not go forth without a strong smell!"

"What does it mean?"

"The first message is obvious. Opportunities pass away, eh? And by the second message she means that between the onion and the peel, between the Sidi's older two wives, Lella Meryem and Lella Nefoussa bent-Daoud, would she be fool enough to risk—ah—the smell? The smell of suspicion, belike of danger!"

"Go back to her," said the Frenchman, "and tell her that—"

"I know! Allah! The fly knows the face of the seller of milk!"

Three times within the next week Bibi Kenza went to the house of Sidi Mahmoud. Three times she returned to Roger de Villemot, with always the same answer—a "no," metaphorically expressed, but still a "no."

And her last message was the sharpest. "For," said Bibi Kenza, "she bids you remember that the wise takes his 'no' with a wink, and the fool with a kick."

"You lie!" he cried, white with rage.

"It is the truth—by the All-Merciful!"

"Go back," he stammered, "tell her—"

"No!" Bibi Kenza shook her head. A look almost of compassion came into her eyes. "I like gold," she said, "and I dislike Christians. Still—may the Prophet count it a good deed on the Day of Judgment—listen! Do not attempt the impossible! Do not try to weave ropes of sand."

He could not sleep that night. He could neither lie nor sit, could hardly stand still. He had only just enough resolution to resist the mad impulse to rush to Sidi Mahmoud's house, to batter in the gates, to take Fathouma by force.

Love? Yes. But also the blow to his selfishness, his conceit. She had refused him. A breach was left in his emotional defences. He must repair it. He must bend his energies to that one task. The thought, as he paced through the room, became an obsession.

From that night's vigil on, he haunted the Street of the Lizard, chiefly in the evening, for he knew that Arabs seldom leave their houses until after the heat of day.

There were little shops, dim, alcoved. He bought things there which he did not need. There was an Arab cafe where he sat, late into the night, drinking musk-flavored coffee.

Still, the obsession grew with Roger de Villemot. Day and night he thought of her, caught himself composing conversations with her, to the point, masterful, conclusive. He would stop her, would talk to her when he saw her, regardless if she be alone or accompanied by Lella Meryem and Lella Nefoussa bent-Daoud. He did not care. The resolve was inflexible, almost passionless. But when one evening she came from the house between the other two wives and escorted by liveried negroes, when again he recognized her by the lilt in her walk, he could not utter a sound.

He saw her ice-green eyes above the hem of the veil. They looked at him, then through him, beyond him, and she walked on.

He tried to rise; could not. Tried to speak; could not. Something like an iron fist clutched his body, his throat.

"The next time I see her," he said to himself, "I shall speak to her."

And he saw her again, was again unable, somehow, to approach her, to utter a sound. He felt, as the first time when he had called on her husband, that eerie sensation of a terrible racial closeness which excluded him, as if here in Algiers the life and emotions and reactions of this woman with whom he had danced and flirted in Paris were a sealed book in an unknown tongue. Insoluble it seemed, this Orient, sneering and hard and cruel—

"Another cup of coffee?" asked Moise Belaize, the Jewish waiter.

"No!"

"Perhaps a glass of sherbert?"

"No!"

He stared at the waiter. He forgot who the man was and what. He only knew that, with his impassive, patient smile, his black, opaque eyes, his attitude of mixed humility and familiarity, he represented the Orient [illegible]

"Perhaps a glass [illegible]"

"No—nom de Dieu!" Roger de Villemot's fist lashed out and caught the other on the shoulder. He rushed away in a towering rage.

"Hayah!" said Moise Belaize, philosophically, as he rubbed his shoulder. "All Franks are mad."

"You made him angry," laughed the chammach of the synagogue, who had witnessed the scene. "He will not come back."

But the Marquis returned the next evening and ordered his coffee as if nothing had happened. He sat for hours staring at the house across the way. He sat and stared till night came, racing to the west; till the moon stabbed out of the south, chilling the houses to flat, silvery white; till gradually the streets emptied of people and the voices of barter and trade faded into the memory of sound and there was nobody left in the Street of the Lizard except Moise Belaize, the waiter.

"Haw! Ho!" yawned the waiter.

He sat down; fell asleep. The shadows of night danced in a wild, purple saraband; and still Roger de Villemot waited, as still as death, his face grim, somewhat the color of ashes, despair in his soul and a certain cold curiosity.

That afternoon he had gone to Bibi Kenza, had argued with her, pleaded with her, and finally she had told him. The words were traced indelibly across his mind—

"Lella Fathouma has forgotten you. Tonight—late—she meets her cousin, Sidi Abd el-Latif. How do I know? Because it was I who arranged the meeting! I who bribed the Lotus Petal and the watchman at the gate! I who bribed the people in the little pink house to the left of the grocer's to keep their patio open for the matter of an hour, to keep shut the inner windows, and"—she had laughed—"their eyes and mouths! Eh? She loves you, you say? Why should she? Go and watch, fool, if you do not believe me. The little pink house! It juts out from the street. You can't miss it."

So he watched, sitting well back in the shadows, until finally the gate of Sidi Mahmoud's house opened.

A white-robed figure slipped out. She flitted across the road. She tapped lightly at the door of the little pink house. It opened; and, on the threshold, sharply outlined in the moon-rays, Roger de Villemot saw a young Arab, bearded, red-burnoused; saw him open his arms and fold her to him.

There was murder in his heart. But it passed. It gave way to a revulsion of feelings that left him in a state of numbness where his emotions seemed to have ebbed like the cold tides of death.

Mechanically, he ate his breakfast the next morning. Mechanically he attended to his regimental duties. Then, in the evening, he went to the house of Sidi Mahmoud. His love was dead, and his longing. There was only an unflinching resolve of hate, a desperate tenacity to squeeze this hate to the last drop. And he considered that Sidi Mahmoud was an oriental. Westernized? Yes. But still an oriental, a Moslem.

"Delighted to see you," said Sidi Mahmoud, as he came into the upstairs apartment. "Lovely night, isn't it?" He pointed to the balcony whence, from the street below, drifted the Hebrew chants of joy, celebrating, the end of tchebiah, the month of grief. "Care for a cigarette?"

"No thanks." The Frenchman hesitated. "I want to tell you . . . " Again he hesitated. He felt—was it fear? He did not know, did not stop to analyze. But, whatever it was, it seemed to come from the center of his consciousness, spreading through every nerve, swiftly and terribly.

"Yes?" asked the Arab.

"It is my duty—as—as your friend—"

"What? You sound mysterious." The other smiled.

"Your wife—Madame Fathouma—"

"What about her, Monsieur le Marquis?" The hooded eyes flashed a cold, scrutinizing look.

"She—I saw her last night—with a man—a young Arab—she—"

"Deceives me?"

"Yes!" Roger de Villemot breathed more freely. The worst was over, he thought.

Sidi Mahmoud caressed his cheek with his left hand.

"I am aware of it," he said, after a pause. "I am a middle-aged man. I have made my life—did I not tell you so once?—an exquisite mosaic of gentle little habits, dovetailing into each other, each a guarantee for the happiness of the entire day. I hate to have it upset. That's why I do [illegible]

"But"—Roger de Villemot [illegible]—"I don't understand—"

"I am a just man," the other went on, "so just. Fathouma has given me a year or two of happiness. She spread silver and gold across the dust of my declining years. Thus I am grateful to her. But she is young and so she deceives me. I know it. Perhaps she knows that I know. But you, Monsieur le Marquis, why should you know?" The question was soft, almost casual. "Perhaps—ah—you have been her lover, too?"

"No, no!"

"Or tried to be?"

"No! I assure you—"

"Then—how do you know about her?"

"I happened to find out!" Roger de Villemot was steadily growing more nervous. "And—since I am your friend—I came to you and . . . "

"Yes, yes. It is very regrettable."

"I am sorry." The Frenchman rose to go.

"Wait. It is regrettable, I repeat, for me, for Fathouma, and for her lover. You should not know. You have no right to know—you see that, don't you? It is a private matter—between her and him and me. You should have never found out!"

"I shall try and forget," murmured the Frenchman.

"But—can you? And, if you can't, consider my honor. There you are, an outsider, knowing of my—ah—disgrace! What can we do?"

"Anything—anything!" Again the feeling akin to fear spread through Roger de Villemot's nerves; icy perspiration burst forth upon his skin.

"So glad you agree with me. And I am sorry—really—that there is no other way."

And at the last moment, as the Arab leaned forward a little, while his right hand, disappeared in the folds of his waistband, Roger de Villemot understood. At the very last, he caught a glimmer of the truth in the other's dark, opaque eyes. But it was too late. The dagger was already finding his heart. And there was the end of the affair as far as he was concerned; while Sidi Mahmoud Chedli summoned some trusty servants and arranged with them for an alibi which would confound even the chilly logic of a French prosecuting attorney.

He felt a little upset. Presently Fathouma would come, and he would have to tell her. He would have to chide her, and ask her to be more careful in the future. And his other two wives, Lella Meryem and Lella Nefoussa bent-Daoud, would abuse her—and she would cry—and he liked her very much.

"Allah!" He shrugged his shoulders with rather ungracious resignation.

He leaned from the balcony. He looked at the throng of Jews in festive garb.

Moise Belaize, the waiter, caught his eye. He smiled.

"May the All-Merciful bless thy feasting, Oh, son of Israel!" he said.

"May thy destiny be as honey in thy mouth, Oh, most just among Moslems!" came the sonorous reply.

WHEN I COUNT TEN YER ALL SPOSED TO BE OUT OF SIGHT!

[illegible] Bob.

It is nearly midnight. They are sitting quietly at their table. Her brows are knit. He feels he ought to be thinking things out. She is drawing faces on the back of the menu with a little gold pencil. Some one drops a nickel and the piano strikes up.

He: Shall we dance, Harriet?

She: No, I don't think I want to dance any more.

He: All right. It's pleasant just to sit here and look on. Did you notice the policeman at the kitchen door? He was drinking Scotch?

She: No, I didn't. Bob, we haven't done a thing about that letter.

He: I know. I was just thinking.

She: I don't see how I can. I don't feel like it now.

He: The whole business is rather confusing. I mean—well, we couldn't foresee that we'd hit it off like this. You and I.

She: We do seem to be getting on pretty fast.

He: The plain truth is, you're so perfectly adorable, Harriet, that I can't think consecutively about anything else.

She: I don't think I'm going to write any letter.

He: But I'm afraid you ought to, Harriet.

She: How can I do a thing I can't feel? (She is drawing another face.) It's several years since Jim has considered anything but his own feelings where I'm concerned.

He: I'm older than you, Harriet. A lot. And I can't quite get away from the notion that we shouldn't let our judgment be swayed too quickly.

She (still drawing:) I don't think I've got any judgment. That's where you're so wonderful, Bob.

He: I'm not wonderful. I'm rather bewildered.

She: But you have got judgment and imagination.

He: The trouble with having imagination is that you never grow up. It's rather upsetting.

She: Yes, I feel that in you. You're the youngest man in spirit I know. Jim's 34 and he's old.

He: Many men are oldest in their thirties.

She: I hadn't thought of that. I suppose it's so. Probably I oughtn't to say this, but I feel myself mothering you. Jim never makes me want to mother him.

He: See here, Harriet, let's try to get hold of ourselves. We've still got that long ride uptown to face, you know—in a taxi.

She draws on. A little later she says—Bob, I do want to dance once more. Of course, we really ought to go, but . . .

He: All right. I'll drop the nickel.

She: No, let me.

They dance.

She (as they move slowly along the floor:) Bob, will you bring me down here again tomorrow night?

It is the following evening. She is eating lazily the rich Italian ice cream. She says—

There's something I ought to tell you, Bob. I wired Jim last night after I got home. You know, it got completely away from us. I've been wondering if I'd show it to you.

She considers this, then looks through her bag and finds a much folded bit of yellow paper. He reads—

Dear Jim: I've decided to go ahead on my own, I shall probably go back on the stage. It is better, I think—I shall not write and you needn't write me unless you want to as we really don't seem to have much to say to each other.

She: There was a little more—about money and such. I hate that.

He (knitting his brows:) It's rather drastic, isn't it? I mean in tone.

She: It was how I felt.

He: But it will mean only one thing to him.

She glanced up.

He: That there's another man.

She resumes eating her ice cream.

She (breaking their silence:) I think, Bob, the trouble with me is I'm tired. Beaten down.

He: I don't wonder. It has been hard on you.

She: Awfully, I've been thinking today. I'm afraid it will sound rather erratic to you (she smiles faintly)—rather feminine, I mean just after I've taken this new apartment. Do you think it was foolish of me to take it, Bob?

He: Of course not.

She: What I was trying to say—thinking it out, was that perhaps I'd better go away somewhere.

He (perturbed:) Go away?

She: For a little rest, I mean. Out of [illegible] could find some sort of mental balance. I was wondering if you know anything about Nassau or Bermuda.

He: Nassau would be full of people you know, a little island of them entirely surrounded by rum. It's as bad as Havana, that way. Bermuda is lovely, though. I was there years ago. Green hills with houses of white coral rock peeping out through the trees and the bluest ocean you ever saw. An indigo ocean.

She: You make it wonderfully attractive.

He: The journey is rough. Right across the Gulf stream.

She: I'm a poor sailor. I'd dread that part of it.

He: But it only takes two days.

She: One ought to be able to endure two days of it to reach such a lovely spot. Do you think I could find peace there, Bob?

He: I don't know. I'm wondering, Harriet.

She: Wondering what?

He: Well, if we mightn't as well accept the inevitable.

She lifts her eyes for a moment.

He: And go together.

She: Oh, we couldn't do that, Bob.

He: No. I suppose not. But I couldn't help thinking it, Harriet. You'll have to forgive me.

She: It would be wonderful if you could—you know, not travel with me—we couldn't do that, but just go naturally at the same time. Would there be anything out of the way in that? I mean—of course, I'd hate to go away from you right now. You steady me so, Bob. I never had such a friend. And being alone is the hardest, I've had to be alone so much. Oh, why can't people just do natural human things!

He: They can, I think. At least they do. We needn't even take the same ship. But I could see you there. We could walk and sail. I'd make you exercise. It would do you no end of good.

She: I know I'm weak about all this. The fact is, Bob, I feel that I ought to go away somewhere and try to find myself, but I dread even starting off alone.

He: For that matter, there needn't be any harm in taking the same ship.

She: If people weren't so petty. I hate gossip. It's so—inhuman—so unnecessary.

He: We could take the same ship, easily enough. If there were people we knew on board we simply needn't be seen much together. Good Lord, lots of men and women who know each other happen to take the same ships!

She: I know. When I came back alone from England last summer Percy Wilkes was on board. I didn't know it until I met him on deck. He had his chair moved next to mine and we visited all the way over. There was absolutely nothing between us. And nobody minded. Why, Jim thought nothing of it!

He: Of course. You've got a right to go to Bermuda. And so have I. It would be delightful. Likely as not there wouldn't be a soul we knew. None of the theater people are traveling away at this season. And we could be together all the time. It's merely a matter of using ordinary discretion.

She: I could just give up my rooms at the end of the week. It's a hotel, you know. There's no lease. My things are all stored anyway.

He: I'll get a paper. There's probably a sailing on Saturday.

She: This is Thursday.

He finds a newspaper, and opens it to the ship advertisements. They study the page together.

He: Saturday at 10. It's a good ship. A regular liner.

She: It's pretty short notice.

He—but that's the fun of it! Just take up the adventure. Pack a trunk and dash away. Harriet, we'll do it.

She: I believe it would do me good.

He: I'll get the tickets in the morning. Fortunately we shan't have to bother with red tape. You don't have to get passports for Bermuda. It's as easy as taking the day line to Poughkeepsie.

She: Our—our rooms wouldn't have to be too near together, would they, Bob?

He: No, oh, no. Suppose I take you home now, Harriet. It's nice to think we're really going to be together. I've had a feeling I couldn't bear to let you go. You know, because I was afraid I mightn't see you soon again. How strange it is! A sort of destiny.

She: I know.

He: We'll both be pretty busy tomorrow. I'll have to straighten out a lot of things. We can meet for dinner.

She: It will be a busy day. But I'm glad [illegible] things at the hotel. Perhaps it will be better if we don't have dinner.

He: That's so, of course. I'll send your tickets over by a messenger in the afternoon. Then you can go along as if I didn't exist.

She: You're wonderfully considerate, Bob.

He: It's too simple. I shall be thinking of you every minute. All day.

She: I shall be thinking, too. We can't escape thoughts, Bob.

He: No. We can't. But it's something not to be afraid of life. Thank heaven, we're not afraid!

She: I think I will go home now, Bob.

He: All right. I warn you I'm going to take beautiful care of you, Harriet.

He re-enters his hotel at 11 on the following morning. The steamship tickets are in his pocket. He has bought a new trunk, a lounging robe of silk, a cap of homespun, an outing suit of English manufacture, golf shoes, a half dozen new bright neckties, other things. The packages will be coming in rapidly during the early afternoon. He has decided to be on hand to begin packing as soon as the trunk is delivered. They have promised it by 2 o'clock.

The telephone girl (calling out over the clerk's counter:) Mr. Braeburn, the Hotel Van Dam wants you to call.

He: All right.

Telephone Girl: Will you be in your room?

He: You may as well call it now.

Telephone Girl: All right. Booth four, please.

He lights a cigarette and nods easily to an acquaintance in the lounge. It is reassuring to find himself quite cool and steady. No one would know. He shuts himself within the stuffy little booth as naturally as if he had put in a business call, and holds the receiver at his ear. Now he hears her voice.

She: Bob, dear.

He: Yes, Harriet.

She: I've got to see you.

He: Gladly. Shall I come over?

She: I—Perhaps it would be better not to come up here, and I don't want to go over there.

He: I have the tickets, Harriet. And wait until you see me in my new neckties!

She: Oh, Bob, I wanted to catch you before. Listen, suppose you walk up Sixth avenue to the corner. I'll put on my hat and come right out. It's pretty important.

With wholly new misgivings he lights another cigarette and walks out. He was to wait only a moment at the corner. She wears a charmingly natty little suit and a turban he hasn't seen before. She has never looked so young. She walks with a grace uncommon even in New York. She has the gift of smartness. His pulse quickens.

She: I've been awfully upset, Bob. We may as well talk right here.

He: Surely. (He lifts his hat to an alert young man who walks briskly by.)

She: Who is that? He looked at me. Oh, he was in Voisin's the other day.

He (somewhat grimly:) It's Arthur Briggs. He edits the Interstellar magazine. I'm doing some work with him.

She: Listen, Bob! An extraordinary thing has happened. I didn't foresee it. And I didn't know how I'd feel. I feel rather mixed up about the tickets.

He: What is it, Harriet?

She: First you'd better read this.

It is another crumpled yellow paper. A telegram.

He reads: Harriet I can't leave it like that for a minute, I never knew before this trip how much I need you, I haven't played quite fair, I've been pretty heedless and selfish, but that's over, I've got everything I wanted out here, we're in luck, dear, and no sitting around for you—I've got you the second lead in my new picture at $300 a week. It's all settled, hop on the Century at once and come straight out here, no time to lose, we begin shooting Monday; I can't wait an unnecessary hour, come.—Jim.

She (there are tears in her eyes:) You see, Bob, he is my husband and he really has the right. He called me up before 10 on the long distance. Think of it, Bob, it was only dawn out there in Hollywood, he hadn't slept all night. Bob, he's crazy about me. It's pretty wonderful. You see, he thought all the time that I didn't want to go with him. I felt awfully mixed up and sorry and wondered what you'd think. You know, I—I sat right down and wrote you a note and dropped it down the mail chute. And then, of course, I thought about the tickets and all the trouble you've been put to.

He: Then you're going?

She (her hand on his arm. Passersby are aware of them:) Bob, I have to. I can't help it. The porter told me just now that he has picked up a lower to Chicago for me and a compartment from there to Los Angeles. He says it was great luck. Jim will meet me at the station there, I don't know how to—you'll have my note this afternoon.

He: You'd better rush right along, Harriet. The Century leaves at 2:45.

She: Yes, I must. I'm in a whirl. Bob, I could kiss you, right here.

He: Perhaps it would be better not to.

She: I'm going to. (She does.) You've been wonderful.

He: Good-by.

She: Oh, good-by, Bob!

He: Good luck! And my best to Jim.

She: I'm going to tell him how you made me see things sensibly.

He: I don't know as I'd——

She: Oh, not everything. But—well, it was really you, Bob. That's what stays in my mind.

She is gone.

The porter meets him at the hotel with—I put the trunk in your room, Mr. Braeburn.

He: Thanks, Eddie.

The Clerk: Special delivery for you, Mr. Braeburn.

It is her letter. Odd that he should never before have seen her writing. It is a surprisingly sprawling hand with heavy down strokes. He might have known.

He drops down in a corner of the lounge and nervously tears the envelope. The daily luncheon crowd is passing through the dining rooms.

The Letter: Dear Bob, I don't know how to say this. But Jim wants me out there, and I'm going. I've got to. I can't tell you how confused I am and sorry. But that's how it is. It's all my fault. I don't see now how it could have worked out happily. We'd have had to be furtive. Dodging around and all that. But you've been wonderful, every minute. (He turns the page here.) In our first talks you saw the whole situation. The telegram did it. Jim called up this morning from Hollywood. We talked twenty-five minutes. I don't dare to think how much he paid. I'm going back to him. Start right out there this afternoon, and we're going to be happy. And it's you that did it, Bob. You're so understanding and conservative. We can never be grateful enough to you, Jim and I. Good luck, dear Bob. Harriet.

He sits motionless, holding the letter in nerveless fingers. A little later he lights another of those cigars. Acquaintances speak, and he nods absently. Arthur Briggs appears with a new girl, a blonde. Hastily he stuffed the letter into a pocket. Arthur mustn't see that, and mustn't see him in this dejected pose. He will smoke as if he were enjoying it. He straightens his shoulders.

The new blonde is speaking to a young actor. She is very pretty. Arthur sees him and comes over. The corners of his mouth curl devilishly.

Arthur: Thought you were leaving us, Bob.

Bob: I am. This afternoon. Going up country. Arthur, I'm setting myself at the most interesting job I've ever tackled.

Arthur: Really! Can't you drop up to the office and tell me about it before you go?

Bob: Haven't time. And I'd rather wait, anyhow, this time, and show you the finished thing. It's rather an experiment for me. I'm pretty keen on it. By the way, I've just wound up another little job that was interesting. Been called into service as a doctor for sick hearts. Quite an experience.

Arthur: It must have been.

Bob: No occasion to be so damn dry about it. Read this—the second page. (He produces the letter and folds it back.)

Arthur: Hmm! Interesting! Impulsive little thing, isn't she! I've been rather envying you.

Bob (himself now and quite the man of the world:) You needn't have. It was just a decent little job that had to be done.

Arthur: Wish I was unselfish.

Bob: I knew all the time what you were thinking, and so I'm putting you right on it. It's only fair to the girl.

Arthur: Saved them from the surgery of the law, eh? Well, you always were a wholesome old thing, Bob. I've got to move along. The ingenue is hungry.

Bob (with a faintly superior smile:) Run along, trifler. See you later in the fall, I've got to get down to real work now.

STRIVING TO STAY A HEADSMAN'S BLOW

into the narrow, cobbled streets that we had hoped never to see again. The interpreter was far in the rear, so we could ask no questions as to our destination. Past shuttered shops and temples we went, beyond the low, windowless houses, to where the general had his lodging in some merchant's dwelling.

Behind this was a great court used as a drilling ground, a prison yard, and a place for grimmer work still, as three blood-stained wooden triangles showed. The instant they saw these the prisoners began protesting frantically. Some flung themselves on the ground, chin-chinning violently; a few were sullenly unmoved. Our chairs were set down on one side, and the whole mass of prisoners driven at the points of bayonets into a great dark barn, utterly windowless, which stood on one side.

At the door were more sentries, but we were saved further effort by the appearance of a polite A. D. C., who actually smiled when he saw us. For the first time I wondered how we looked! My shirt was rent from shoulder to elbow where a thorn had caught it in the night, the brim of my companion's straw hat flopped gaping from the crown, the result of her fall into the pond. We were mud-stained, scratched and unkempt, our boots and skirts stiff and caked with mud.

I remembered suddenly that we hadn't had a proper bath for three weeks, and hadn't taken our clothes off for nine days, and yet I knew that I would have bartered a year's baths for a good meal! Ridiculously, while the interpreter was volubly explaining our plight, I began thinking of Hongkong and all the things I would eat under a rose-red lamp in the famous grill-room there.

It was too late to see the General, we were told, and as it was nearly dark we did not press the point. A fat senior officer came out, and after much parleying we were conducted to a building at the other end of the garden—half house, half shed. There was some straw in it, a wide bench, and the remnants of a charcoal fire. Some soldiers left it surlily at our approach, so it had probably been used as a guard room. There was a kind of loft up above, whose only obvious approach was by means of a ladder.

Sleep—and Dreams

THERE we slept the sleep of exhaustion, disturbed only once, when I thought cat-like steps sounded across the room, followed by a slithering thud, but, too tired to care, I went back to dreams of lavender-scented sheets and buttered eggs with crisp bacon!

The morning light beating in through a hole in the roof woke us early, and we searched for our retinue. There was no sign of them at first, but shouts brought the smiling interpreter with cold water, in which we made a hasty toilet. His obvious nervousness made us ask for the cook. He assured us that he had no knowledge of that individual with such emphasis that we grew suspicious. I remembered the stealthy sound in the night. Had fear driven the poor wretch into the maddest of all courses—attempted escape? As far as I knew, he had no friends in the town, and we had seen the fate of one fugitive.

Wasting no further time, we insisted on seeing the General. This time the protests of his staff were of no avail. It must have been very early, but we forced ourselves into the presence of a pompous-looking individual who was studying maps and, by the sheer force of our horror, made him fetch his superior. The General was exceedingly polite, but naturally denied all knowledge of our lost follower.

I felt desperately helpless until the idea came of searching among the prisoners in that frightful yard. The instant I suggested it I felt something terrible was going on there—so much protest came forth, so many reasons why we shouldn't go. I think despair drove us beyond reason. I remember stumbling through the bushes with a quite kindly officer clutching at my sleeve; I remembered the naked blades of the sentinels at the door and how I fell through them and wondered vaguely if I were hurt. Then I saw the red prison yard, and some of the sand was a deeper red where strange huddled heaps lay headless, with hands still bound behind their backs.

The place seemed very full, but I didn't see anything else, for right in front of me was the little cook, livid, but trance-like in his calm, kneeling with several others, hands bound, waiting for the great sword, which came slowly nearer.

Sounds broke from my lips, but I don't know what I cried. In any case he didn't hear. His mind had gone ahead of his body—far into the next world, I think, before the blow fell. I don't even know if I actually saw the end of his timid life. I felt my revolver in my hand. I would have shot somebody, something, but I was dragged back. There was a struggle, in which I seemed to be another individual. The branch of a tree cut my face; and then, looking down painfully, I remember seeing sand and blood on my shoe, and all that seemed to matter in the world was to rub it off, to hide it, in the thick green grass.

Only towards night there was a stir—the sound of rare hoofbeats on the cobbles, bad news of a northern success. The interpreter displayed unexpected energy. I do not know what he did or whom he saw, but he came back in the darkness saying we might go free! Freedom presumably meant the approach of the northern army and the possible evacuation of Yunghinghsien, but we did not wait to ask. This time we took no coolies and had no thought of further advance. Carrying our rugs and a few other effects, we toiled down to the river through a village full of aimlessly hurrying figures. Lights flashed from open doors.

Trains of figures carrying bundles began to pour into the streets. Wounded drifted in on footsore ponies. Officers in sedan chairs were hurried from temple and storehouse. Merchants in rich silk mixed with painted girls in satin coats. Peasant women passed, burdened with long boxes of ammunition. Lanterns swung and flared from shaking poles.

Fleeing in a Panic

IN the general panic no one took any notice of us, and we gained the river unmolested, but wondering why the whole crowd was not pouring down to the water highway. We understood as soon as we got there—there were no boats! Long ago ours had been commandeered, and the few others firmly moored to the floating bridge were evidently used as storerooms and bedrooms combined by the soldiers who manned it.

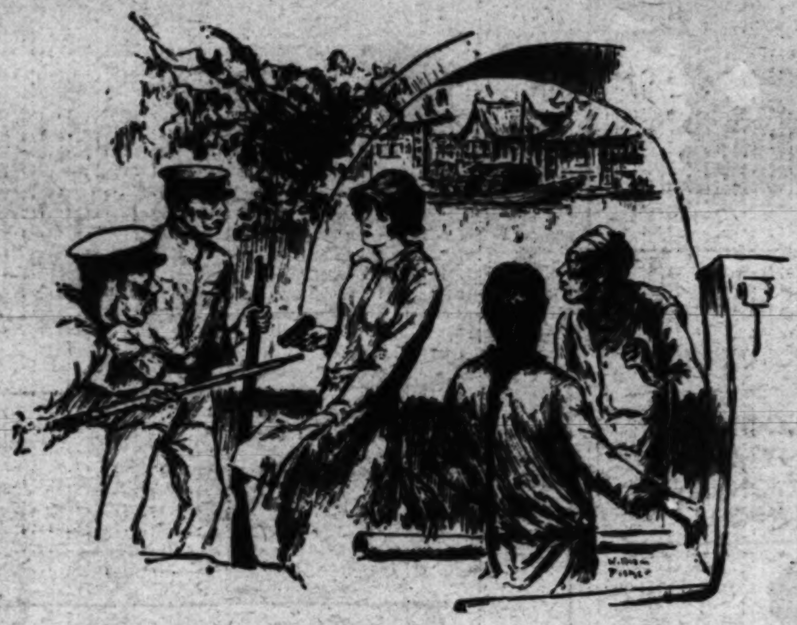
Our first trouble was that in our hurry we had asked for no written permit. Money availed not. Back went the interpreter to the House of Mulberries, while we sat in a drizzle on the wet shore and waited endlessly. Nobody interfered with us. Many people were despondently sitting on bundles in different places, and the soldiery had other things to think about. Finally, the interpreter returned with a strip of paper bearing large characters and a seal. It appeared to fill the army with suspicion. They regarded it from every point of view, and finally handed it back with a shrug of the shoulders and a gesture to indicate that we might go. But how?

The first thing was to find a boat, and here at last those heavy rolls of nickel coin helped us. A stiffe bout more or less mattered little to the watchers on the bridge, and after an argument which appeared interminable we handed over most of the contents of our one dispatch case, to which my companion had clung even after she relinquished her treasured flag, and were allowed to detach one of the oldest boats. Nobody helped us.

We poled and pushed and tugged it a little way up from the bridge, and realized as we labored how difficult it would be to punt it up the river, swollen and rapid with so much rain. We told the interpreter to collect a crew and to promise them anything he liked. Then we crawled under the curved roof, stretching out our weary limbs, and went to sleep.

When we woke up a few hours later the dawn was cold and clear, and we were in exactly the same place. There was no sign of a coolie or even a pole, and the hated houses of Yunghinghsien still frowned at us across a few yards of mud. All the interpreter said, when roughly roused from sleep, was that every able-bodied man, woman and child was transporting the army stores.

We never thought of breakfast that morning, but set forth to search for coolies. Practically by physical force we collected a few feeble old men and a little boy attired only in a blue sash. We added a few old women, and then our crew was complete.



I pointed to the beautiful red seal of the Gallic motor license.

Any description of that return journey would be as tedious as the thing itself. Our progress was infinitely slow! We had come down the river in three days. It took us six to go back, though we worked all night when we could find anyone to pole us.

Replenishing the Crew

WE stopped wherever we saw houses to collect new recruits, if the village was not entirely deserted, and to drop our exhausted veterans. We managed to buy rice and occasionally an egg or two. The tide of battle must have flowed away from the river bank, for we heard no firing. Thus, infinitely slowly, we returned to Chenchow, arriving late one afternoon and disturbing all the shuttered houses to ask for chairs. The town was far emptier than on our first visit, and a long stream of fugitives was still pouring from and through it. The chairs had all been taken, and we had to wait a day while a carpenter patched up two odd structures for us. We took turns with the interpreter to ride in these, but we always felt safer when walking.

It poured in torrents the whole of those three days, and the stone paths were so slippery that sometimes the bearers fell, tipping their burden into a ditch that was generally a small rivulet. After I had flown over a bank into a very clinging rice field I stuck to my feet, and the exercise probably saved me from rheumatism, for we spent two nights, or parts of nights, under leaking roofs in noisome sheds. So great was the crowd of fugitives, all going south, that every available shelter was instantly appropriated.

We arrived at Ping-Shek the third evening, and while my companions took refuge in a particularly uninviting outhouse I went down to the river to inquire about boats. "Thank goodness, it will be down-river this time!" I thought, as I looked across a swirling torrent to an empty shore. One very old boatman tottered towards me. I tried to make him understand the urgency of our need. He almost lost his celestial calm in horror at the idea. "The river is in flood," he told us. "The foreign devils are mad! There is no boat on all the waters."

The interpreter, now safe in his own country, backed his arguments. "You look, see no boat him turnee the first corner. One month, two months you waitee here, and then the liver velly nice."

It was true; there was no sign of life on all that waste of water. Gone were rice boats and the long, low junks that bear the salt of Hunan south to the marts of Kwantung. Gone were the heavy house-boats, where whole families live by the green reed-banks, and even the black fishing cormorants watched no more for a gleam of silver amidst the swirl of foam.

This was a contingency for which we had not allowed, so, for the last time, we turned to the dispatch case, rapidly becoming lighter. Wealth of little coins was offered to any boatman who would face the torrent. All refused, and we were growing desperate, for Ping-Shek was frankly hostile, and the merchant who had sheltered us before now barred his doors against us, when it appeared that one woman's greed was greater than her husband's fears.

A Greedy Crone

SHRILL-VOICED and forcible, she ordered her trembling family to get out their boat. Expostulation mixed with argument, preparations interminable, and at the last moment the interpreter deliberately got lost! Most of the night was passed searching for him with flaring torches in incredibly dirty interiors. He was discovered at last drinking burning chum-chum in a dark cafe, and dragged half-dazed on board the ancient boat. Half the money was counted out to the greedy claws of the crone who risked her menfolk's lives with placidity, but thrilled to the gleam of silver coin. To be near the rest of her price, she decided to come with us, and with the dawn the raft-like structure swung out into the raging river.

The last stage of our long journey remains in my mind as a singing paean of gray waters under gray skies. With the crash of frail boards and the swirl of foam about us, we flew down the great North River. Sudden rocks sprang up at our bows, waves opened to engulf us, a silent crew flung themselves desperately on the rudder. A howl from the woman mixed with the thunder of the river as a shock flung her full length on the drenched boards, and with every timber shuddering, we were hurled around bend after bend till the wider reaches at Lokchonghsien brought us a moment's calm.

"Plaything of the Water God"

WHEN the storm eased for a while our crew hammered frantically to repair the damage done by the rapids or chin-chinned earnestly to their familiar spirits. Then the gorges took us again and we became the plaything of the water god unleashed. We lay in the bottom of our craft, and, with every muscle tortured and aching, clung to bar and board while the rapids flung us from rock to rock, each avoided in one thrilling second by swiftly-turned pole or rudder.

It had taken seven days to pole slowly up the river. We came down in a few mad hours, and saw the many-storyed pagoda of Shiuchow before the noon light had waned, and knew that our dream of scented baths and culinary greed lay but a day's journey ahead.

The ambulance train quickened its slow progress for our need, arriving at Canton about six hours before it was due, and thus we avoided the minions of the law whom a rapidly-aging Consul, conscious of having grown gray hairs and wasted much government money in our pursuit, sent to arrest us on the platform. By the time these minions were dutifully searching for the criminals who had ventured inland without a passport, those same criminals were devouring hot buttered toast on board the largest and swiftest steamer of the river fleet!

"Matching Wits With Desperadoes"

MAJOR W. ROBERT FORAN

[illegible] she would always be referred to as "one of them Hudsill tribe."

During breakfast she was quiet and thoughtful. With a shy acknowledgment of thanks, she accepted the liberal lunch provided by the Sheriff's wife and made her adieus. Two miles outside the town she left the highway. A hundred yards from the road she seated herself upon a log and grimly prepared to wait.

Darkness had fallen when she again entered Eastview and cautiously approached the reformatory from the rear. She scaled the iron fence with comparative ease and crept toward a lighted window on the ground floor. Two girls of about her own age sat at a study table.

"Kin I come in?" Selina Jo asked softly.

One of the girls screamed slightly; the other was more self-possessed.

"Sure, Rube!" she invited cordially. "Step right in!"

Selina Jo climbed over the low window sill into the room.

"What you doin' here?" one of the girls asked.

"I'm j'inin' o' this here re-formin' place," was the unruffled answer.

"You're wha-a-at?"

Very simply Selina Jo made known her intentions.

"But you'll be caught, sure as shootin'," one of the girls objected. "In the first place you've got no uniform."

Naturally, Selina Joe expected to be discovered sooner or later; but she had prepared for this eventuality.

"Maybe we can fix that," the other girl broke in eagerly. "There's that old blouse of mine and your extra skirt. Gee! I wish we could put it over! Wouldn't old Iron Jaw be wild?"

Between them they rigged a uniform for Selina Jo. At the nightly inspection she crept under the bed. Later, she slept on a pallet.

The fortunate indisposition of a girl across the hall solved the breakfast problem. Selina Jo, taking the vacant place in the formation, passed undiscovered for the moment.

As the girls were forming for certain duties shortly after breakfast, Selina Jo felt a heavy hand upon her shoulder. She looked up into the stern face of the matron.

"What are you doing here?" was the curt inquiry.

"Me?" Selina Jo's attempt at surprise was ludicrous. "I—I b'long here, ma'am."

"You do? You ought to know me then. What is my name?"

Instinct told the girl that this must be the matron. "Old Iron Jaw," she answered unabashed.

Mary Shane smiled grimly. "Come with me," she ordered.

She led the way, Selina Jo following meekly, to her little cubby-hole of an office.

"Now, then," the matron commanded sternly, "tell me the truth. How did you get in here?"

"I—I clumb that fence."

"Why?"

"Just 'cause, ma'am, I nachorly got to git re-formed," was the perfectly serious answer. "I ralely b'long here. I'm so pi'zen mean they ain't no other place fitten for me."

"What's your name?"

Now it came, not hesitantly, but defiantly: "S'liny Jo Hudsill!"

Mary Shane knitted her brows thoughtfully: "Hudsill?"

"Yes'm. Them low-lown, sneakin' ornery Shoalwater River Hudsills, ma'am. They air the shif'lesses' fambly that ever was borned. An' what's furdermore, I'm the hellraisin'es' one o' the intire gin'ration!

"Last mont', ma'am," she continued earnestly. "I burned down three cow stalls. Right after that I went into my own blood uncle's cornfiel' an' pulled up ever' smidgin's bit o' his young corn. Ner that ain't all, not nigh all. I almost hate to tell you this'n, ma'am. But last week I stabbed a li'l nigger baby to death. Killed him dead. Dead as a——"

"Hush, child, hush!" the matron ordered. "You did none of those things. Now then: Tell me—the truth!"

It came then—the truth—a story haltingly told of a child's scarcely understood heartache for self-betterment. As the recital progressed, the matron turned her back suddenly and strode over to a window.

Presently the story was finished.

"An' please, ma'am," a voice was asking hopefully, "I kin stay now, cain't I?"

Mary Shane did not reply, for a moment. "I'm afraid not, child," she said presently. "You—you've done nothing to be kept here for. You'll have to go home." Selina Jo flung herself upon the matron.

"Oh, ma'am," she sobbed, "please don't make me go back! I ain't goin' back! I don't want to be one o' them low-down Hudsills all o' my endurin' days. I want to be somebody, like other folks is. I don't want to have a passel o' dang li'l' old gals lookin' at me slanchwise when I go to meetin.' I want to be changed! I want to be made diffe'ent! Ma'am, I just got to git re-formed!"

Mary Shane had opened her mouth to speak, to check this outburst; suddenly her iron jaws closed with a snap.

"Come with me, child," she said. "We'll see the superintendent. Jim Wellborn," she said brusquely, as she and Selina Jo entered the superintendent's office, "this girl wants to tell you something. You listen closely. When you've heard her story, if you can't find some way to keep her here, why I'll undertake the job of looking after her myself and the reformatory can get another matron."

"Hm-m-m!" Superintendent Wellborn's gray eyes twinkled, but he did not smile outright. "Well—the reformatory is fairly well satisfied with its present matron. Good-day, Mary Shane! Sit down, little girl."

The matron closed the door and returned to her office. For nearly an hour she sat, idle, at her desk. Then there came the sound of hurrying footsteps. She whirled her chair about.

Selina Jo stood in the doorway. The flush in her cheeks, the flame in her sloe-black eyes, blazoned her happiness to the world. An answering light gleamed, momentarily, in Mary Shane's face. And as she went about the prosaic business of acquainting Selina Jo with her duties, deep within herself a small voice was chanting, chanting over and over:

"For this one—just this one, Lord—who comes of her own accord to be changed, for this single one who wants to be made different, I thank Thee!"

THE HEART DOCTOR

natural charm. He'd feel that in a moment. He'll be crazy about you.

She: Oh, Bob, do you suppose I can do that?

He: Why not?

She: But how can I put that in a telegram?

He: I wouldn't send it.

She: But . . .

He: Not yet. Wait until you have a job. Find something. The producers all know you. It shouldn't be difficult. If there's nothing open here in New York right now, you could surely pick up something in stock. And even that would be a good beginning. A step back into harness. Then, when you've actually got an engagement, send a friendly, jolly little wire annoucing the fact. That'll make him sit up. A man will run away from a broken hearted woman, but you can depend on it he'll run after an independent one.

She: Do you think so?

He: I know it. In the meantime, you could write a letter telling him in a general way that you've decided it's better for you to go to work. Be good humored about it. Don't let him think for a minute that you need him. No tears, no reproaches, no ultimatums.

She (considering this:) Couldn't we write out the letter now?

He: Of course. That is if you really feel that I . . .

She: Bob, I was all at sea until you came along. What I'm wondering now is whether I could keep up a front like that. I mean without you right here to tell me what to do.

He: Of course, you can.

She: Let's draft the letter . . . Bob, it's getting late. People are coming in for dinner.

This is the fact. The tables in the double row of cubby holes are filling rapidly with couples, the men all with the easy bearing of success in the business world so characteristic of the evening gatherings in the better class restaurants of New York; the women young, attractive, and discreet in manner. He watches them.

She: I suppose we could have dinner in my apartment. It would be quiet there, and we could write. But . . .

He: There is some one I know.

Arthur Briggs is following a dark pretty girl to a table nearly opposite. Braeburn finds his color rising a little, and turns away. Then he looks again and nods with marked dignity. Arthur lifts his eyebrows, and smiles.

He: No, Harriet. I want you to have dinner with me. The Brevoort, perhaps.

She: So many people there, Bob. We couldn't think.

He: I used to know an Italian place in Houston street. As soon as I can get the waiter's eye. . . .

They are waiting in the dim foyer when Arthur appears there.

He (stepping aside:) Oh, hello, Arthur!

Arthur: Hello! Just going to wash my hands. You didn't catch the 4 o'clock.

He: No. Arthur, seriously, I don't know when I've been so touched.

Arthur: She's lovely.

He (earnestly:) It's a chance to do a really constructive thing, Arthur. You know, help her.

Arthur: That's fine, Bob.

He doesn't smile, but Bob finds himself struggling with an attack of self-consciousness and turns away rather stiffly. He will offer no further explanations.

The uniformed door man whistles for a taxi. They ride south on Fifth avenue. It is twilight. The double row of curb lamps narrows far to the south and dips over the Thirty-eighth street hill. The lights in the traffic towers shine steadily yellow. The long lines of automobiles that never, day or night, leave the great avenue in peace, are rolling swiftly over the smooth pavement. Our couple pass the ghostly white mass of the public library, the lighted shop fronts, the bank that was once the Holland House whence the yellow and black coaches, in a less frantic and crowded day, used to trot gaily off toward Ardsley. Madison Square slips by, the illuminated clock high in the Metropolitan tower at a few minutes before 7. Below Twenty-third street the avenue is a dim canyon flanked by loft buildings. Taxis and a one horse victoria stand before the white front of the Brevoort. They curve under the arch and through Washington Square where a hurdy gurdy is tinkling its mechanical melody and Italian children dance on the pavement.

They speak of the charm of the square, and turn to look through the little back window at the red brick houses that still give an old worldly distinction to the north side. And they talk of Greenwich Village that lies off to the westward. They have momentarily forgotten Jim. Arthur was right; she is lovely. The face under the jaunty little turban is softly rounded, somewhat pensive, softened by unhappiness. A sensation of warmth creeps around his heart.

The little place on Houston street proves an adventure. It is an old house, approached from the cluttered sidewalk up a flight of steps with iron work railings of the eighteen-fifties. Two stocky and somewhat furtive door men survey them and ask a few questions before passing them within. They find there a dingy little room, filled with plain tables and chairs. A mechanical piano is banging out a dance tune and oddly dressed couples are dancing.

She: (in the doorway, breathing quickly and glancing brightly about:) Bob, what atmosphere!

He (as they pick their way to a table:) It is amusing.

She: Oh, look, Bob, you can drop a nickel here in the wall, and the piano will play! (Hurriedly she looks through her bag for a coin.) I'm going to drop one as soon as it stops. Bob, let's dance!

He: All right. Fine! But let's order first. Do you like Italian food?

She: I love it!

He: The we'll leave it to the waiter. But we must have minnestrone.

She: And sphagetti with cheese.

The Waiter: Certainly Madam.

He: And chianti.

She: Oh, can we really have chianti?

The Waiter: Certainly, madam.

She: How wonderful! In a wicker bottle! Bob, I want to dance.

He: Come on.

A little later they are eating the steaming minnestrone.

She: Bob, of course you know you dance divinely.

He: I didn't quite know that. But I loved it.

She: It's such fun. We can eat a course, and then drop a nickel and dance some more. Oh, I haven't had an adventure for years. I really believe it's what I needed more than anything else. We do have to be toned up once in a while, don't we?

BAGUIO. — Imagine that you are jumping into an airplane in the city of Washington, shoot up to ten times the height of the Washington Monument, turn the machine so that it faces the sun at its setting, and guide it into the west. You can easily make a speed of 100 miles an hour, and within four days you will strike the exact place where I am writing. It is Baguio, the summer capital of the Philippine Islands, on the top of the mountains of Northern Luzon. My altitude is just about one mile above the level of the sea, a climb that has conquered the heat of the Equator has turned the tropics to the temperate zone. In Manila I sweltered at night under a mosquito net cover. Here I am chilled with anything less than a blanket, and the life-blood of a climate like ours again flows through my veins. The very air here is filled with champagne. In Manila, in contrast with this, every breath was as flat as stale beer.

The nation owes this place to William H. Taft. He discovered it when he was Governor of the islands. He then weighed a third more than he does now, and tipped the beam at more than 300 pounds. At that time he was fair, fat, and not much over 40, but the hot sun of Manila made him ill, and he cabled Elihu Root, who was Secretary of War, begging to be allowed to come home. That was just preceding the Presidential convention of 1904. Taft was a popular hero, and I am told that both Roosevelt and Root thought he was safest out of the country. At any rate, they cabled Gov. Taft that it seemed necessary for the good of the islands for him to hold his job until after the election. They advised him to take a vacation in the best climate near by and see if he could not regain his health. Gov. Taft then investigated the high spots of this country, and as a result took a ship, steamed north, and landed on the Gulf of Lingayen. Here he got an outfit, and rode over the winding trail through the jungle to this place in the mountains. His health improved almost immediately, and he cabled Secretary Root:

"Root,
"Secretary of War,
"Washington, D. C.

"Have arrived at Baguio after three hard days up the mountain on pony back. My health is already greatly improved.
[Signed] "TAFT."

The next day over the wires under the wide Pacific Ocean came the following:

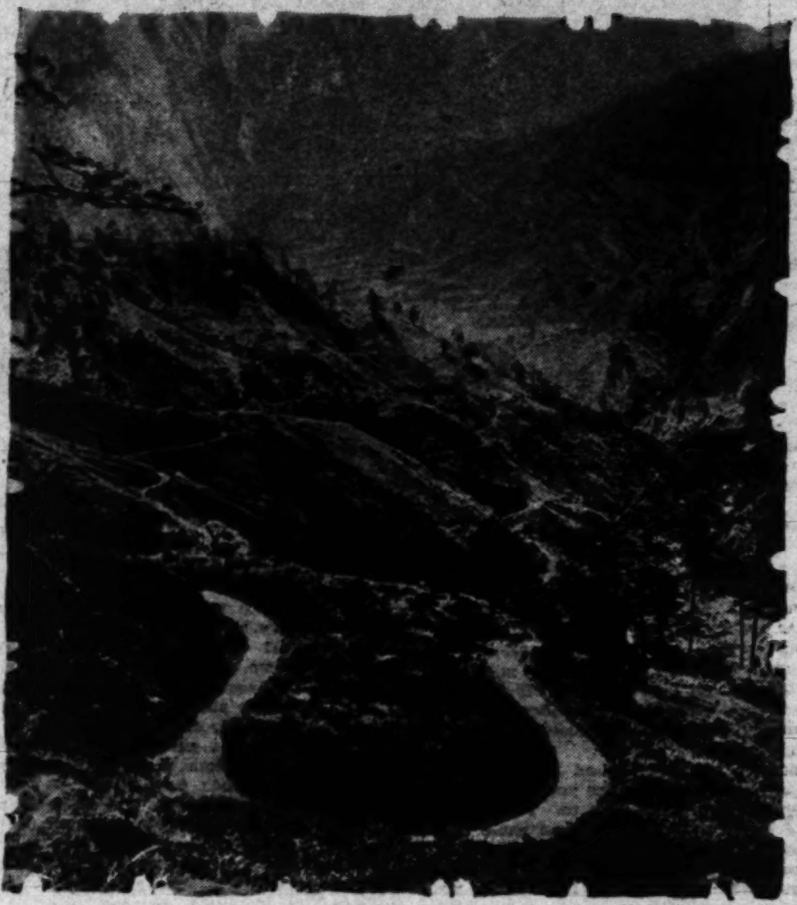
"Taft,
"Governor-General,
"Philippine Islands.
"But how is the pony?
[Signed] "ROOT."

A Summer Capital

AT THAT time the Filipinos had not begun to talk independence, and it seemed as though we would have to hold the islands for many years before the natives would be fit to govern themselves. It was necessary to have some place where the white man on the job could go for several months every year to keep himself in good health, and Baguio was chosen as the best in the islands. The subject was carefully canvassed by the authorities at Washington and Manila, and on the advice of Gov. Taft it was decided to create here a summer capital, much as the English government has done for its Indian officials at Simla in the Himalaya Mountains.

In order that the work might be well done, D. H. Burnham, the famous landscape architect, was brought over from the United States, and under his directions was laid out the new city. Burnham had already made the plans for the World Fair at Chicago and for the new Washington, and his fame had gone around the world. In this connection also was laid out the wonderful Benguet road from the seacoast to the top of the mountains. The plans proved a success, and today we have here in the heart of the tropics one of the finest health resorts in the midst of surroundings that are as beautiful as any God has ever created.

But before I describe Baguio, let me tell you how I came up the mountains. I am not a high official and I have no government vessel. Moreover, cables are too costly for me to telegraph the Secretary of War as to my health and that of my ponies. The only way I could get here was by an automobile across country from Manila, or by taking the railway to Damortis, and wiring for a motor car to come down from Baguio to meet me. At Manila I learned that the charge for the automobile would be $80 for this trip of eight hours through the valley and up the mountains to Baguio. The railway and car from Damortis cost less than one-third of that sum and took only about an hour longer. I chose the latter, and it was not at all bad. As I rode up the hills, however, I congratulated myself on the car, thinking betimes how unfair it was that Gov. Taft should have had to carry his one-seventh of a ton on a pony, while skinny I, who kick the beam at 110, should rest my lean bones on comfortable cushions.



One of the most beautiful as well as most expensive roads in the world is the one cut through the mountains of Luzon to the summer capital of the Philippines at Baguio.

But the ride! I despair of showing its beauties. Seat yourself beside me in this automobile and climb with me up this Benguet road into the skies. There is no better highway even in Massachusetts. The road is macadamised from one end to the other, and it is kept in perfect condition. As we go we shall meet half naked Igorot men and women dragging stones from the cliffs and with rude hammers of steel breaking them inside rings of hoop iron into bits the size of a walnut. Most of the men wear only a shirt and a gee-string. I made a snapshot of one—a man as brown as a berry, who had left his shirt home. They are paid by the cubic meter, and receive just 90 cents of our money for pounding to bits a pile of stones heavier than two horses could haul on our country roads. The stones are afterward crushed fine by machinery and steam rollers so that the road is perfectly smooth.

A Golden Highway

HERE and there they are repairing the walls. In the heart of the mountains the road is so narrow that motor cars cannot pass, and as they wind their way around the curves a skid might drop us into the rocky canyons below. At such places walls a foot wide and half as high as your knee have been built, and there are miles of these walls on the way up. We shall go over long wooden bridges just wide enough for the car, and shall stop again and again at the frequent gates to wait for the automobiles coming down in order that we may pass them at these wider spaces. At each of the stations stands a Filipino guard who keeps clear the traffic on the road above and below by means of the telephone, and thus prevents accidents.

The road is cut right out of the cliffs, and at times it seems to hang to the rock half way between the top and the rushing river in the canyon below. It follows the course of a river, and that river is more winding than the Jordan, which flows 600 miles in covering a distance that could be crossed in 200 by airplane. The Benguet road cost more than $2,000,000. It is a little more than twenty miles long, which means an expense of about $100,000 per mile. It is a veritable highway of gold.

In speaking of the trails up the Ecuadorian Andes, someone said to the natives, "Your roads are for birds, not men." One feels the same as he rides in his motor car much of the time in low gear. Nearly the whole way is a corkscrew, and often the car seems inclined like the slope of a roof.

We are in the Switzerland of the Philippines, in the great western mountains that wall one side of the Cagayan Valley. The hills are ragged and rough, but they are covered with green. At times they rise straight into the clouds, fleecy white masses resting on their sides. There are no smooth spots anywhere. The torrential rains tear the mountains to pieces so that they look like gigantic windrows plowed by the gods. Here their green peaks rise and fall. Our way is through a narrow winding canyon, which is walled with great cliffs. In one place a waterfall like a bridal veil dashes in a sheet down a wall several hundred feet high. You can see the black rock through the veil.

In Baguio

WE HAVE twenty miles of such riding, during which we climb from 200 to 300 feet to the mile. We pass Zigzag Gate, climb on up in second gear, and then coast along on the roof of the mountains to Baguio.

It was in a motor car in company with E. J. Halsema, the government engineer who is Mayor of Baguio, that I drove for several hours through the city. It seemed strange that one could spend so much time in covering a town of only 6000 people but Baguio is spread out over the hills and valleys. It is a garden that would be the pride of any multimillionaire of the United States if he could drop it down near New York or Chicago. The business part of the town and some of the chief buildings lie in the beautiful amphitheater, of which the walls are the mountains. In the center of the arena is a lake upon which people are paddling canoes. High above the lake is the City Hall, a long, low, two-story building of green with white ribs crossing one another this way and that, and with flower gardens dropping in terraces to the road that runs near the lake. On the opposite side of the lake on hills cutting the sky are the fine buildings of the government center. On the hills about are picturesque structures of one kind or another. Away up in the clouds is the massive rest house of the Dominican friars, to which the archbishop of Manila comes now and then for the season. A half dozen mission stations have beautiful homes in the hills, and there are dormitories for the Y.M.C.A. and the Knights of Columbus.

The city owns all the public utilities. It operates the electric light, the water supply, the telephones, and the pail and garbage systems, which take the place of the sewers. It has an incinerator where all the sewage and refuse of the city are burned. the sewage and refuse of the city is burned. It has an ice factory and rock crushers run by a hydro-electric plant. The roads are given a fresh coating of stone every few weeks. The town has its court and police, and last year there were just about 400 arrests, which is fifty less than in 1920. The persons arrested included four Americans, one Turk, three Japanese, 180 Filipinos, and 190 Igorots. The Mayor says he has the best form of city government in the Orient, and from the order I see everywhere I judge he is right.

In another part of the valley is the Igorot farm school established by the government. It is a little republic that elects its own rulers, has its own police, and punishes all infractions of the law. This is a large tract divided into plots, each of which is farmed by a student. There are a hundred or so boys here at work. Each day they spend four hours i nthe classroom and four hours in farming, one hour of which is allotted to work for themselves. Each boy sells what he raises and receives the money for himself. The produce usually goes to the Chinese and Japanese, and is shipped by them to Manila. Many of the boys earn their way through school and I saw one who has saved $300 which he has on deposit in the bank. This is Howard Ilinga, a full-blooded Igorot, who now at 23 years of age is engaged to be married to the daughter of the chief of his tribe. He has rented twelve rice fields from the school, and has other boys working them for him.

against something flamed in her heart. Suddenly she dashed the photograph to the floor and hurried from the cabin.

"Oh, Goddlemighty!" she burst out tempestuously, "I don't want to be like her! I ain't goin' to, neither!"

There was a church in the neighborhood where, at rare intervals, some itinerant preacher held services; but upon one occasion Shug took the family to preaching in what was known as the Briggs settlement, ten miles nearer the railroad.

Shortly after they had seated themselves in the church, Shug, uncouth and unshaven on the men's side, and she and her mother on that reserved for her sex, Selina Jo heard one of the women whisper to her neighbor:

"Some o' that Hudsill tribe!"

As the girl caught the slur in the words her face flushed darkly. She began to notice the unfavorable looks with which the men of the congregation were regarding her father. Even the children stared superciliously toward her mother and herself. Puzzled, vaguely hurt, at first she wondered why.

Lingering just outside the church at the close of services, she waited, hopeful that some one would speak to her. No one paid her the slightest heed. In a land where a lack of hospitality was the one unpardonable sin, this alone was enough to convince her that something was terribly wrong somewhere. But she held her peace until they had completed the tedious homeward journey.

"Maw," she demanded abruptly, as soon as they were alone, "how come we ain't like other folks?"

"What air you talkin' about?" Marthy intoned querulously.

"Them folks in that air Briggs settlement."

"Wa'l?"

"They looked slanchwise at Paw when we went in an' set down. An' them li'l' old gals looked slanchwise at me, too. Durn 'em!"

"How kin I he'p the way they looked at us?" Marthy whined. "Treatin' us thatta way just 'cause we air pore."

"'T weren't that, neither," the girl insisted stubbornly. "Them men—most of 'em—was wearin' overhalls. The schoolteacher said rich folks don't wear them kind o' clo'es to meetin'."

"Tryin' to git better 'n yore raisin', air you?" Marthy suddenly showed unwonted spirit. "Wa'l, gal, you kin just make up yore mind to be like yore pore maw an'—"

"I ain't goin' to be like you!" The words shot out with sudden passion. "I ain't!"

"God ha' mercy!" Marthy's face showed a trace of surprise at this outburst. "But I've allus said seein' lots o' things gits notions inta young 'uns' heads what ain't good fer 'em."

"Ner that ain't all I seed, neither," Selina Jo retorted. "They didn't none o' them folks—not nary one o' 'em—ast us home to eat a Sunday dinner with 'em."

At the conclusion of the church service she had seen invitations to the noonday meal being extended and accepted right and left by the Briggs settlement householders. Slowly the impression fastened itself upon her brain that her family was hopelessly low in the social scale—"poison low-down," she would have phrased it. This conviction gripped her. It stung—and it stayed with her.

Fortunately, something occurred about this time to divert her thoughts. Three miles from Shug's home, Pruitt Brothers, turpentine operators, established a woods commissary. Selina Jo's first visit to the store left her gasping with pleasure. Dress goods in loud patterns dazzled her sight; vari-colored ribbons flaunted themselves tantalizingly before her gaze. But one thing that charmed her, that held her spellbound, was a cheap, ready-made gingham dress. She made frequent unnecessary trips to the store merely to feast her eyes upon it. She would look from it to the faded homespun that she wore and sigh enviously. Once she even mustered the courage to ask the price. It was an insignificant sum, but it might just as well have been a thousand dollars. She had never owned a piece of money.

Slowly a plan formed in her mind.

"Paw," she began timidly one day, "I—I got a hankerin'."

"S'pose you have?" Shug's manner was more surly than usual. "A hankerin' never hurt nobody, yet."

"But, but I shore 'nough want sump'n."

"Wantin' an' gettin' is diff'ent things. What is it?"

"They's the purtiest dress over to Pruitt's store," Selina Jo began eagerly, "an' it's made outen real gingham."

"Gingham?" Shug whirled about with a snarl. "What air you talkin' about, gal!"

Selina Jo's heart sank. "I ain't never had nary one," she offered placatingly. "An'——"

"Ner ain't never li'ble to, neether. Homespun's good enough fer yore pore maw an' it'll hatter be good enough fer you. I ain't goin' to be workin' myse'f to skin an' bone to be fittin' out no young 'un in fancy riggin's."

"But, Paw, it don't cost much."

"It costs that much more 'n you're goin' to git. Shet up!"

It was then that Selina Jo unfolded her plan. "I'm goin' to git me that air dress," she announced dispassionately. "I'm aimin' to pay fer it myse'f, too."

"How?"

"Yearnin' the money at public work."

"You?" Shug snorted derisively. "Whare'll you git any public work?"

"In Pruitt's turkentime orchard. They's a heap o' the work I kin do. I could do scrapin' er dippin'; reckin I could even do hackin'."

Shug had slumped into the one comfortable chair in the room. Turning his head, he glared at his daughter.

"You air not goin' to work in no turkentime orchard," he rasped. "You air goin' to stay right here an' he'p yore pore maw an' me. I told you oncet to shet up!"

It struck Selina Jo suddenly that life was terribly one-sided and unfair. Other girls in the community, who didn't work as hard as she did, were beginning to wear gingham dresses for Sunday. By everything that was right, she reasoned, she had earned at least one store-bought dress. Yet it was roughly denied her. Her soul cried out against what was a patent injustice. But she managed to speak calmly.

"Fer as I kin figger it out, Paw," she said, "I been doin' my sheer o' keepin' this here fambly up. I broke them last yoke o' steers, an' one of 'em you was afeared to tech. I've split rails, an' laid fences; I've broke new ground. An' the fu'st time I ast fer anything you say I cain't have it."

She ceased speaking for a moment, but her steady gaze never left Shug's face.

"Now, I'm goin' to work for Pruitt," she continued slowly, "till I git me the money I need."

Shug rose from his chair. Taking a heavy leather strap from the wall, he started toward Selina Jo.

"You air, huh? You'll git a larrupin', that's what!"

Selina Jo paled suddenly. A carving knife lay upon the rude deal table beside which she was standing. One slim, brown hand grasped the knife. Her emotion visible only in the tumultuous heaving of her breast and the white, set expression of her face, she waited, motionless, her dark, somber eyes gazing unwaveringly into Shug's face.

"Paw," she said evenly, "just you tech me oncet with that strop an', as shore as God gives me stren'th, I'll cut yore heart out."

Shug recognized a danger sign when he saw it. The hand which held the strap dropped to his side. He backed slowly away.

"You— you—" he sputtered and stopped

"You an' Maw been sayin'," Selina Jo continued, "that I'm tryin' to be better 'n my raisin'. But I ain't forgot how them Briggs settlement folks looked at us slanchwise. They knowed, somehow, we was plumb low-down an' onery. That's why they didn't none of 'em ast us to a Sunday dinner. They seed we was trash. Course I'm honin' to be better 'n that kind o' raisin'—an' I'm goin' to, too!"

Shug had retreated to the doorway, where he stood watching this new daughter of his with furtive, fearful eyes. It was several moments before he mustered courage to speak. "Sence you air goin to do public work," he whined presently, "'t ain't nothin' but right you ort to pay for yore bed an' board."

Selina Jo was glad to agree to this arrangement. Marthy sulleny acquiesced. She would have to do the housework now, which was no more to her liking than the realization that Shug would permanently [illegible] the money for their daughter's board.

Next day Selina Jo sought out Lige Tuttle, woods foreman for Pruitt Brothers.

"I'm lookin' for a job," she announced bluntly.

"Sorry," Tuttle answered brusquely, "but all our cooks are niggers."

"Cook?" was the scornful answer. "I ain't astin' to be no cook. I want shore 'nough work."

Tuttle smiled patronizingly. "What can you do?"

"Scrapin', dippin', er hackin'," was the confident answer.

"You?" Tuttle laughed softly. "Why, that's a man's work. It's hard."

"Any harder 'n breakin' bull yearlin's to the yoke? Er splittin' rails an' breakin' new ground?"

"Mean to say you've done all that?"

"I most bardaceously have!"

Labor was scarce at the time. Tuttle asked a few more questions, and decided to take a chance.

"What's your name?" he asked.

"S'liny Jo."

"What else."

It was the first time Selina Jo had ever been asked her surname; she felt the blood rush to her face.

"What's your last name?" Tuttle repeated.

The answer came almost inaudibly: "Hudsill."

"Shug Hudsill's young 'un?"

"How kin I he'p it?" the girl burst out passionately. "If you'd a been borned a Hudsill, you'd hatter be one, too!"

"Don't get mad, child." There was something in the spirit of this strange creature that Tuttle respected. "I wasn't aimin' to low-rate you none just because of your daddy. Come here tomorrow mornin', an' I'll try you out."

Selina Jo found that the work was hard. The dry, slippery pine needles underfoot made walking itself a task. She carried a heavy bucket into which she dipped the raw gum, emptying the bucket, when filled, into barrels scattered about the orchard. From sun-up till sunset, and later, she toiled, foolishly happy. What she was undergoing was the prelude to real existence, as she saw it. What better, she asked herself, could any strong, healthy girl desire than a steady job dipping turpentine for which she was paid real money?

Occasional passersby, strangers to the vicinity, amazed at seeing a girl engaged in such unusual work, would pause to ask friendly questions. The first flush of pleasure that this gave Selina Jo was quickly erased by the bitter after-twang of reflection; these people were kind because they did not know she was a Hudsill.

While with practice she developed skill, it was three months before she had saved the money she needed. The gingham dress had been laid aside for her. But a beautiful dress above a pair of bare legs and feet would never do. Then, too, she would need, besides shoes and stockings, a hat.

The day came at last when she could make her purchases. With her arms filled with bundles, she started out joyously on her three-mile walk home.

A half mile from the commissary she paused indecisively at a crossroads. The right-hand road, leading to Shoalwater River, meant the lengthening of her journey a full mile; but the river, with its promise of a cooling plunge, enticed her. As she stood hesitant she observed a stranger approaching on horseback. He reined in his horse and hailed her.

"Evenin', little sister! Live hereabouts?"

"Down the left-hand fork a piece. Who air you?"

"I'm Holmes—sheriff of the county."

Instinctively the girl drew back. "What air you wantin' o' me? I ain't done nothin'."

"Lord bless you, little sister," the sheriff laughed, "I'm not after you. Thought maybe as you live round here you might tell me something I want to know."

It seemed that a murder had recently been committed in the bay-shore country ten miles distant. Circumstances pointed to the guilt of two men who had been arrested. Assuming that the murderers had passed through the Hudsill section en route to or from the scene of the crime, the sheriff was seeking evidence to prove this.

Selina Jo recalled two men who had passed that way whose description fitted those charged with the murder.

Sheriff Holmes was elated. "Would you like a trip to Eastview?" he asked.

"Eastview?" Selina Jo's heart skipped a beat. "That's town, ain't it—whare the railroad trains is at?"

"Yes. We'll take you there a week from [illegible] "Look me up in the courthouse soon as you get to town."

Selina Jo's announcement that she was going to court created a flurry at home until Shug learned why she had been summoned. Then he breathed easily.

When the day dawned, Selina Jo assembled a lunch of corn pone and side meat, filled a small bottle with molasses, and, dressed in her new finery, set out on foot.

The new shoes began to pinch. She took them off, tied them together by their strings and slung them over her shoulder. The stockings were rolled into balls and stuffed into her pockets.

Late in the afternoon she bathed her feet in a brook just outside of Eastview and donned shoes and stockings again.

It was dusk when she arrived at the sheriff's office. An overflow crowd at the single hotel necessitated her staying with Sheriff Holmes's family that night.

With the timidity of the woods-bred girl, she remained there until summoned to court in the late afternoon of the following day. By the time her evidence was concluded, she had partially overcome her shyness, and was ready for sightseeing.

Sheriff Holmes found her during the noon recess. Her enraptured gaze was fastened upon a scene across the street. Three large, two-story frame buildings, painted a dazzling white, stood upon a lot which occupied an entire block. Beneath the branches of huge water oaks, were scores of girls, dressed in white blouses and dark-blue skirts.

Sheriff Holmes smiled understandingly. "Like it?"

Selina Jo did not even turn her head. "Whose is them air li'l gals?" she asked breathlessly.

"The State's—for the present," was the answer. "When girls—young ones—like you—break the law," the Sheriff explained, "they bring them here to be reformed."

"What's re—formed?"

"Well, it's like this; before they let a girl go again, she has to prove she's been changed for the better."

"Changed?" Selina Jo looked up with a quick indrawn breath. "They make 'em diffe'ent f'um what they was?"

"Ye-e-s—that's about it, I guess."

"Do they learn 'em outen books in there?"

"Oh, yes; they have regular hours for study."

"An' could—could a gal git in there what didn't know nothin' but a part a' the fu'st reader?"

"You don't understand, yet, child. It's only for girls who do wrong. Now, a girl like you would never go there."

Selina Jo sighed dejectedly. Her eyes caressed the buildings with their spotless white walls and wide-flung shutters, and the groups of girls scattered about the lawn.

Presently she pointed to a high iron picket fence which inclosed the lot. "What's the fence fer?" she asked.

"Why, if that fence wasn't there, little sister, half the girls there would light out before midnight," the Sheriff answered.

"They'd run away?" Selina Jo shook her head incredulously. "F'um them purty houses?"

Since it would be impossible for her to reach home that day, she spent another night with the Sheriff's family. Her dreams were peopled with girls in white blouses and blue skirts, thousands of them, it seemed to her. They were all within an iron-fenced inclosure, beckoning to her to enter; and she was always just on the outside.

With morning came thoughts of her work in the turpentine orchard. The idea began to burn itself into her consciousness that, though she might spend a lifetime of hon-her hand, mumbled a few banalities, stared at her.

MOST JUST AMONG MOSLEMS

Suddenly she broke into laughter.

"Monsieur le Marquis is short-sighted?" she queried with gentle irony.

For the first time in his life Roger de Villemot blushed.

"I—I beg your pardon—" he stammered.

"Granted"—with a wave of her narrow hand toward the palm-screened orchestra—"if you will show me how to fox-trot."

So they danced, and late at night at his club, the Cercle Richelieu in the Avenue Malakoff, he confided to Capt. Ducastel of his regiment that, when it came to flirting, the Orient had nothing to learn from the Occident.

"Right!" agreed the other. "Woman has not changed since Ananias told Sapphira that she had the neatest ankles in Jerusalem."

"Yes. All women are alike."

"But the trouble is that all men are not. Be careful, my little Roger," interrupted the old Count Gerard de Pontmartin, who in his youth had been French Charge d'Affaires at the Court of his Highness Si-Ali Hamouda Bey, Regent of Tunis. "Arabs have a peculiar code of honor."

"But"—unconsciously Roger de Villemot used his aunt's very words and intonation—"Sidi Mahmoud is thoroughly westernized."

"Is he?" Count de Pontmartin smiled thinly. "And yet I remember a saying of the Moroccan Jews that one should not trust a Moslem where woman is concerned, even after he has been dead and buried for forty years."

"But I tell you this particular Arab is westernized."

"In theory!"

"Watch me prove the theory."

He did so the next morning when he called at Sidi Mahmoud's hotel and asked permission to take his wife for a canter. "Unless," he smiled, "you insist on the Moslem equivalent for a chaperon?"

"Not a bit."

"I would ask you to come with us," the Frenchman went on, "but I only brought a couple of Tonkinese fillies from the Far East. Splendid animals, though." He was an enthusiastic cavalryman.

"You do like horses, don't you, Monsieur le Marquis?" asked Fathouma.

"Best in all the world—next to women." All three laughed.

They went for their ride, stopped at a restaurant in the Bois de Boulogne for lunch, tangoed the same night at Duc de Belleville's dinner dance, went for another canter the following morning; and during the weeks to come—weeks perfumed with comradeship and flirtation and easy intimacy; then, on his part, with sentiment; and finally with stirring of passion—he saw a great deal of her; while Sidi Mahmoud Chedli smiled upon them benignly when he found time to look up from his bridge table, or his grave political discussions with the older men.

There seemed not even a trace of jealousy or suspicion in his nature; nor was there a trace of that characteristic oriental reticence when speaking about the women of his house, about his haremlik.

He even jested about it, and when the Countess de Kergoualez asked him why he did not bring his other two wives to Paris, he replied with a smile that they were what was called "old turbans" in Algiers—old-fashioned people. "Why—even the Lotus Petal doesn't quite approve of my Paris jaunts!"

"And who may the Lotus Petal be?" asked the Countess.

"Oh, just a little dancing girl."

"Am I right?" whispered Roger de Villemot to the old Count de Pontmartin. "Is he Westernized or not?"

"Quite. On the surface. And yet—there is a Moroccan saying—"

"Never mind! Never mind!" the Marquis cut in impatiently, and, crossing the ballroom, asked Leila Fathouma for the next foxtrot.

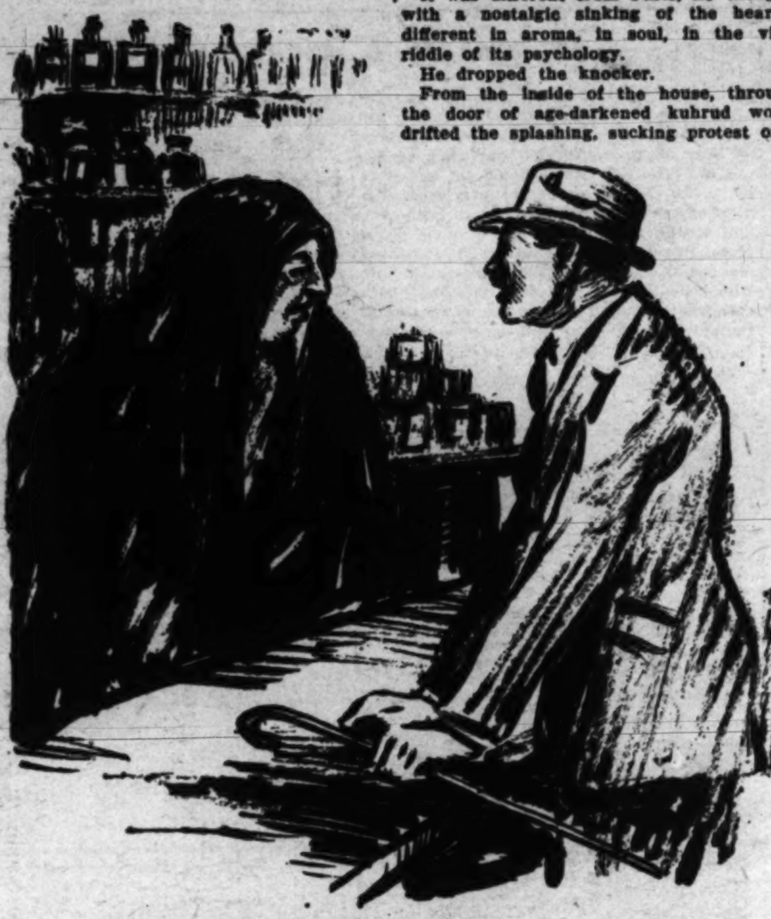
It is a moot point if, at least in this one instance, Mlle. de Tourcoing's psychological estimate of her nephew was just. Perhaps he was indeed a naive worshipper at the shrine of self, apt to view all things from his own angle of vision. But he himself believed implicitly that, for the first time, real love had come to him, and that, in the ice-green depths of Fathouma's eyes, there lurked for him the answer to the old, eternal, tremulous mysteries.

He told her so one evening when, on the occasion of a ball, they had escaped from the house in his touring car and were driving through the Bois. The perfume from her corsage intoxicated him. Suddenly he took her in his arms. He kissed her on the lips.

"I love you," he said; and the trite words seemed to him to hold the essence of all the world's truth and beauty. "I—I cannot live without you . . ."

She kissed him back, once, rapidly. Then she laughed.

"I'm afraid you'll have to live without me," she said. "You see—we are returning to Algiers tomorrow."



He found Bibi Kenza in a little shop, bright with merchandise.

"But—you didn't tell me—I didn't know—"

"The Sidi made up his mind this morning. So I believe you will have to fall in love with somebody else, Roger, dear."

"Fathouma! Please! You hurt my feelings!"

"I am sorry. And really"—she took his hand—"I shall miss you."

"You won't have to. I am going to Algiers myself. I have an uncle in the Ministry of War. I'll get transferred to another regiment. I shall not let you get away from me now I know that you—" He slurred, stopped.

"That I—what?"

"That you love me, too!"

"Are you sure I do, Roger?"

"You"—he caught himself stammering absurdly—"you kissed me back!"

"Oh!" She seemed utterly Parisian in her flippancy. "Perhaps my lips slipped." Again she was sorry when she saw the look of distress that filmed his eyes. "But," she went on, "even if you came to Algiers, what good would that do, dear? Why—Algiers means—"

"Paradise to me!"

"But a paradise with the doors locked and bolted. You see—over there everything is so different from Paris. There is the veil—the haremlik . . ."

"Sidi Mahmoud is Westernized."

"But he is a just man—so just! He would not wound his countrymen's prejudices. And then there are his other two wives—the wives of his youth, older than I. They are jealous of me."

"Love will find a way," he said with boyish assurance, "unless, of course, you forbid me to come."

"And"—there was a Mona Lisa smile in her eyes—"suppose I did forbid you, would you obey?"

"No!"

"There you are!" she laughed. But when he tried to kiss her once more she resisted. "No, no!" she said.

"... when I see you ..."

"When you see me—or if you see me?"

"I am going to see you," he insisted with a certain keen exultation.

A month later he arrived in Algiers. The next day he went to the house of Sidi Mahmoud Chedli.

He was not an imaginative man, nor was he high-strung, self-searching, given to screwing his emotions into test-tubes. But he felt, somehow, slightly depressed as he saw the low, flat-roofed house that faced the Street of the Lizard with a dead white wall, unbroken but for a bird's-nest balcony, and that was surrounded on the other three sides by a garden.

It was different from Paris, he thought, with a nostalgic sinking of the heart—different in aroma, in soul, in the vital riddle of its psychology.

He dropped the knocker.

From the inside of the house, through the door of age-darkened kuhrud wood, drifted the splashing, sucking protest of a water-pipe in full blast and once, suddenly, a woman's high-pitched laughter.

"Yahee! Yawalah! Errahman, irrahmin!" came a falsetto scream.

"Elli khleqqa," squeaked a second voice, spitting hate and contempt, "ma idia!"

Then a third, low, musical, rippling with merriment—"Ta gueule, vieille crapule!"—telling the others in picturesque, strictly colloquial French, to be quiet.

The Marquis smiled. The third voice had been Fathouma's. There was no doubt of it. He remembered what she had told him about the jealousy of Sidi Mahmoud's two older wives. He gave a short laugh. And his uneasiness decreased a little. But when, a few moments later, the door opened and a solemn, plum-colored negro ushered him into an upstairs apartment, saying the Sidi would be there immediately, his feeling of depression returned.

He gave a start when a curtain that covered an arched doorway slid apart with a tiny click of metal rings and Sidi Mahmoud came in—a man different from the one he had known in Paris, dressed now Arab fashion in a djebba of yellow silk, sandals of mandarin blue on bare feet, and about his head a loose dulband of orange gauze.

But it was not only the dress. It was also as if with it he had put on a distinguishing set of manners and customs, other modes of speech and points of view, another soul, other fundamental motives and emotions.

Yet the impression, instantaneous, unreasonable, passed with the Arab's first words:

"Delighted to see you, my dear Marquis!" Once more he appeared thoroughly westernized. His voice was French, so were his gestures, the graciousness and ease of his welcome, his vivacity as he shook his visitor's hand, inquired after mutual friends in France, repeated his delight at seeing the other . . . 'Going to stay a few weeks, I hope?"

"O few years, I expect. I've been transferred to the Chasseurs d'Afrique."

"... if my old bones permit me. You know"—apologetically—"I am getting on in years."

"You don't look it."

"Oh—that's because I take excellent care of myself. I can recommend my system."

"What is it?"

"When I am here in Algiers, I regulate my life minutely. I make each day an exquisite mosaic of gentle little habits, dovetailing into one another, each a guarantee for the happiness of the entire day—"

"Arab materialism, Sidi?"

"No, Monsieur le Marquis. Just the logic which France taught me!"

Again they gossiped about Paris. But Roger de Villemot's psychic uneasiness, his feeling that here he was an intruder, returned when Sidi Mahmoud struck the small darbouqa drum at his elbow and shortly afterward a lithe, golden-skinned girl entered in answer to the summons, He addressed her as Lotus Petal.

"Gaze'l—my hashish pipe!" he commanded, and then: "Care for a whiff?" to the Frenchman, who shook his head and lighted a cigarette.

The Lotus Petal prepared the drug, filled the pipe and presented it to her master. He smiled. Impersonally, almost mechanically, he took her hand and brushed its palm with his lips, then sent her from the room with a short word.

"Speaking about your gentle little habits," said the Frenchman with forced gaiety as she left, "is the Lotus Petal another one of them?"

"Oh"—there was a fleeting nuance of stiffness in the reply—"you might call it that, I suppose. By the way, how is the new Revue at the Folies Marigny?" And he led the talk back to the glittering banalities of the Boulevards, while the Marquis, giving automatic answers, tried to

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

An Evening Acquiring Antiques in a Famous Old Knickerbocker Home

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER

Creator of "Helen and Warren" Characters

IT WAS a stately old house on lower Fifth Avenue. One of the few old New York residences still lingering in that once-exclusive section.

Menaced on all sides by lofty structures, its doom was imminent. Across the street frowned a towering steel framework, and another, nearer completion, flouted the sign, "Co-Operative Apartments For Sale."

"I've always wondered who lived here," Helen thrilled with expectancy, as they went up the wide stone steps. "She must have some wonderful old things. I wish she'd take us all through the house."

"Well, she won't," Warren stabbed the bell. "Now you're not to pipe up. I'm here to buy books. Shouldn't have brought you, anyway."

Apparently he was expected, for the elderly butler ushered them through a spacious hall into a great, high, dimly-lit room.

"Gloomy old vault," shrugged Warren.

"But it's full of atmosphere! All these old portraits!"

"They're the real thing, all right. She doesn't have to buy her ancestors at an art sale. But I wouldn't like to live with 'em. That's a surly old cuss," gazing at a grim old gentleman in a flowered waistcoat and high stock.

The stern, austere aristocracy of the Stuyvesants had been emphasized by all the artists. It was an impressive but forbidding group of portraits.

Steps on the stairs. The long velvet curtains parted dramatically. Leaning on the arm of an attendant, entered Miss Cordelia Stuyvesant.

She was eighty at least, but still erectly tall, with the same long face and high-bridged nose of the portraits. Her heavy reddish braids, probably a wig, a black-jetted dinner gown, and many jewels defied her age.

Her greeting was abrupt, but friendly.

Seated in a high-back winged chair she dismissed her attendant.

"That will do, Hannah. I will ring, if I want you."

But hardly had the woman disappeared when, with a shiver, Miss Stuyvesant glanced over her shoulder at the long French window.

"I feel a draught. Is that open? Thank you," as Warren closed it. "Now, you'll find the early law books in that case. You can turn on more lights."

In the strong light from the heavy crystal chandeliers, the room lost some of its grandeur.

The furnishings were a curious hodgepodge of many periods. Some modern Japanese bric-a-brac desecrated a fine old Italian cabinet. A hideous Oriental scarf covered a priceless Chippendale table.

The tops of the low bookcases that lined the walls were cluttered with souvenirs of foreign travel. Some rare and expensive, others cheaply ordinary.

"No, those on the lower shelf I want to keep," she had taken a chair nearer the case Warren was inspecting. "Mrs. Curtis, if these old books don't interest you, you'll find some magazines back there."

In the rear bay window was a massive desk, piled with late periodicals.

Helen took up a London literary monthly, but she was much more interested in watching Miss Stuyvesant, now sitting under the central chandelier.

Her wig or dyed hair, only hardened her deep-lined face. And her diamonds—rings, chains, brooches, and bracelets—gave a Christmas-tree effect.

Her jetted gown, cut low, a rose velvet ribbon with a diamond clasp encircled her withered throat.

Why not black? wondered Helen. Did no one dare tell her that bright rose only emphasized the sallowness of her shriveled neck?

Above her hung a portrait of a young woman—the features unmistakable. Her own portrait! Helen shuddered at the tragedy of age.

"You're wondering if I ever looked like that?" Miss Stuyvesant turned abruptly, an ironic gleam in her keen eyes. "You needn't flush, my dear, that's what the years do to us all—if we live long enough."

"It's—it's a wonderful portrait," stammered Helen, reddening.

"Painted the year I made my debut," musingly. "But I've outlived my generation. All my old friends—they've all gone now. I won't be here much longer. That's why I'm clearing out—making it easier for my executors," cynically. "Well, Mr. Curtis, are any of those worth anything to you?"

"There's a few books here I'd like, but I'd advise you to sell the lot as a collection—or send it to auction. Anderson's or the American Art. If I pick out the best things, the rest won't bring much."

"No, I won't bother sending them to auction," crustily. "I'll sell what I can, and give the rest to some library. There're more in that that next case."

"You haven't any old needlework—any samplers?" ventured Helen.

"All my laces are packed away. But there was a sampler here somewhere. Wonder what I did with that? Look in that cabinet."

Eagerly Helen opened the heavy drop-front of the Italian cabinet. Old daguerrotypes, fans, bits of ivory, crystal, and a package of age-yellowed letters.

"It's not there? Then I don't know where it is. The tyranny of things! That's what it comes to—all these things we collect. I'm past that. Now I'm getting rid of them—saving my executors the trouble."

"Could it be in this?" Helen took out a tissue-paper package.

"Open it. First hand me those cigarettes," sharply. "You have one? No?"

Her claw-like, be-diamonded hand tremblingly held the cigarette as Warren applied the match.

"Yes, it's the sampler! A Dutch one!" thrilled Helen, unfolding it.

"What did I do with my glasses? I can't see a thing without them."

Helen found her glasses and they examined the sampler. Two alphabets, a house, a windmill, and two quaint Dutch figures were the designs.

"I never really looked at it before. A good one?" peering at Helen.

"Yes, it's very fine work. It's too bad it isn't dated."

"Well, Mr. Curtis," she turned abruptly, "found anything else?"

"No, nothing that interests me. Just those six I laid out."

"What're they worth?" was her blunt demand.

"Well, Miss Stuyvesant, I'll give $80 for the six. But you might get more if you send them to auction."

"But I'm not going to send them to auction," with sharp finality. "You can have them and welcome. I'll take your word for it that that's a fair price."

As Warren drew out his check-book, Helen, standing back of Miss Stuyvesant, nodded to the sampler and frantically signalled "twenty" with her fingers.

"How about that sampler, Miss Stuyvesant?" yielding to her pantomimic appeal. "Would you sell that? Mrs. Curtis is dippy about old needle-work."

"Mrs. Haverhill, who gave me that, isn't dead yet. What if she should ask for it? I might say I couldn't find it," humorously.

Then, riveting her shrewd eyes on Helen.

"You want it very much? Yes, you're all enthusiasm. You have the real collector's flair. I used to have it, but I don't want anything any more—except a little peace from this villainous rheumatism. Let me see that sampler again."

Helen handed it to her, with her glasses that had slipped to the floor.

"What'll you give for it?" Her brusque directness was disconcerting.

"I thought about twenty," flushed Helen. "You see, it isn't dated."

"Good little buyer, arent you? Well, take it! I won't miss it."

"Then I'll make the check an even hundred," Warren uncapped his pen.

"It's half-past nine, Miss Cordelia," an attendant entered with a medicine bottle and glass. "You should've had this at nine."

"Take it away," waving aside the tray. "It's some stupid medicine every half-hour. Doesn't do me any good."

"But, Miss Cordelia, the doctor said—"

"I don't care what the doctor said! Take it away," pounding with her cane.

"No, I don't believe in medicine, either," glowed Helen. "It's all mental. If we'd only learn to think right—we'd never be sick."

"I've my own philosophy about life. It's carried me over some rough places. Oh, yes, I've had my share of trouble—more than my share."

"Now, we don't want to tire you, Miss Stuyvesant," Warren broke in.

"You're not tiring me. I like to see people. I'm going to Carlsbad next month, if I live that long. Just touch that bell and Morton will see you out."

"Guess we can find our way," Warren took up his books. "No, don't get up, Miss Stuyvesant. Glad you're going to Carlsbad—ocean trip'll do you good."

"It used to. I loved to go abroad—went every year. But now—" her bony hand gestured her indifference about everything now.

With the aid of her cane she hobbled to the door and saw them into the hall.

Down the stately steps, and they came out into the soft, mist-blurred night.

"Oh, dear, I feel so sorry for her! With all her money and fame—just a lonely old woman," Helen shivered.

"Now you don't have to worry about her," shrugged Warren. "That's just her pose. She's had a mighty interesting life—got a lot to look back on."

"To look back on? Is that all we have when we're old? Just memories? And when she sat there under her portrait! Oh, it was so ghastly and pathetic!"

"She didn't seem pathetic to me. Pretty well dolled up for an old lady."

"That's what made it so ghastly—all those diamonds. Seven bracelets—I counted them' And wasn't that a wig?"

"How'd I know? I went there to buy books—not to look her over."

"No, no, I don't mean to criticise. But, dear, when I'm old, if I want to dress like that—don't let me!"

"Don't worry, you'll not wear seven diamond bracelets! You won't have 'em—unless you get somebody else to cough up."

"Dear, I know just how I'm going to dress! Quaint old-fashioned taffeta gowns with real lace fichus, and a cunning little cap on my white hair. I'll look like that picture of Whistler's mother—only more so, because I'm little."

"Huh, you may not be so little when you're eighty! Probably be fat, weigh a ton, and doll yourself up like a Floradora soubrette. A cap on your white hair?" he chuckled. "If you've any hair, I bet it'll be dyed, bobbed, and permanently frizzed—or you'll wear a wig over your bald spots. Now don't throw bouquets as to how you'll dress when you're old. The older they are—the younger the get-up."

Then with a grin, as he looked down and tucked her arm through his,

"But don't you worry, Kitten. You suit me pretty well now, and I guess you will when you're eighty—even if you do trick yourself out like a fussed-up Christmas tree!"

With the aid of her cane, she hobbled to the door and saw them into the hall.

ALFRED OF THE ADVERTISEMENTS

A Romance in the Manner of the Art and Heart Pages of the Magazines

BY STEPHEN LEACOCK

IT IS now an open secret among all those who have anything to do with the making of the magazines that the advertising pages have come to be more interesting than the rest of the text. They are written by more highly trained and more highly paid people, they are better illustrated and carry all through a higher interest, more punch—in short, any business man turns to the advertising pages first, and only when he has exhausted them does he fall back on the duller pages of romance and fiction which fill up the middle of the magazine.

The situation is one which threatens our literature, and I think the time has come when our story writers must create a new interest by borrowing something from the advertising pages. The new type of romance should have all the glowing idealization of the advertisement and should imitate also that exactness in regard to costumes, materials and prices in which the advertisements excel. I would suggest a new type of story to run after the following fashion:

The earliest recollections of Alfred Ellicott, whose life forms the subject of this chronicle, were of his family home in New England, on the back of the Stickemupabit, a stream noted today for its attraction to tourists, being within easy motor ride from both New York and Boston and reached also by the Boston and Maine Railway, whose admirable dining car service makes access to the district and egress from it a sustained pleasure and which welcomes any complaint from its patrons in regard to the incivility of its employees.

Efficient, Economical Slumber

HERE Alfred passed his boyhood. The house in which he lived was a typical colonial mansion, known in the neighborhood as "The Ads": It was built in the colonial style (see booklet) with a tall portico and wide sloping roofs shingled everywhere with the new LAY-EASY shingles, the principal advantage in which is represented by reducing labor cost, two men being able easily to lay three squares (30x10 feet) in one morning. In fact, these are the shingles of which Mr. P. O. Woodhead (see insert,) the well-known builder of Potsdam, N. H., has said, in his impressive way, "They reduce cost."

Here Alfred spent a solitary boyhood, his time spent largely in reverie and daydreams. When not able to sleep naturally he found that two grains of Sleep-Tight, inhaled up his nose, brought on a delightful slumber from which he awoke completely refreshed at 50 cents a packet.

It was when Alfred had reached the age of 19 years that lovely Louisa, a distant relative, came to live at The Ads. The girl had been left an orphan, by the death of parents who had not known that ten minutes' exercise on the PRAKTO System done on the floor of their bedroom would have preserved the lives of both of them. She had been rendered penniless by the folly of a guardian who had never understood that investment is now a science that can be learned in seven lessons postpaid by applying at once.

Smartness With Comfort

PENNILESS as she was, Loveless Louisa on her arrival at The Ads made an instant impression on the young and susceptible heart of Alfred. When she alighted from a motor car, the tires of which were guaranteed to carry her 20,000 miles and which rolled with excellent softness over the driveway which had been treated with ASPHALTOMIX, which can be laid on by a child, the young girl presented a picture that charmed the eye.

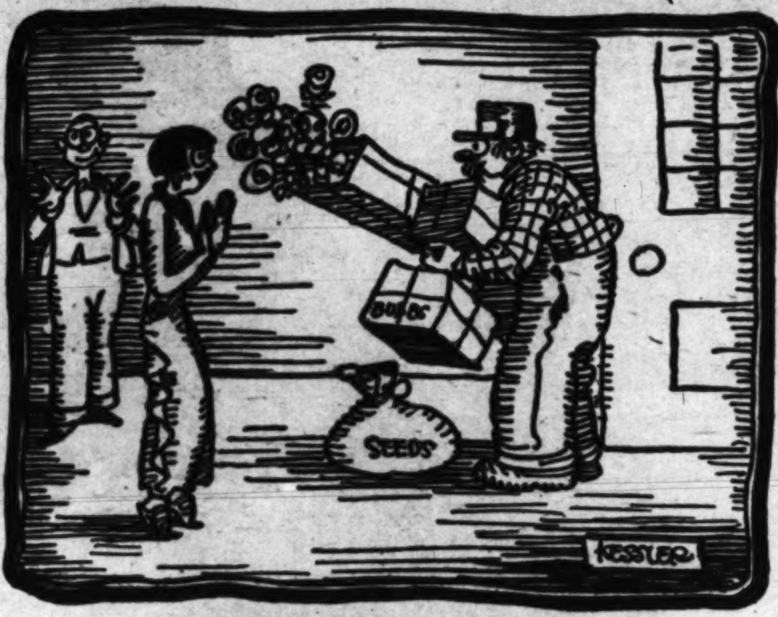
She was wearing one of the new BERSAGLIERI tailored suits, which combine smartness with comfort and which have the special advantage that they come in all sizes and can be fitted not only to a frame as slender as Lovely Louisa's, but also on ladies of fuller figure. A set of measurements and directions being given with each suit, we may be sure that Louisa had such a set with her when she alighted.

She wore her suit under one of the new Fascisti hats, which kill at a hundred yards, and over a pair of tall tan boots which combine grace with comfort by being designed by an expert to fit easily on the instep and to move in harmony with the bones on the anthrax. Under her suit, again—far under—Louisa wore one of this year's SHINFIT combinations, which was imported directly from Lyons and without which no lady should be. When we say that the girl in alighting made a picture that would have pleased the eye of a hermit or a lobster or an undergraduate, we are not overstating it.

A Refuge from Thought

ALFRED, who was wearing one of the new NOW-OR-NEVER tailored gray suits over brown boots as he stepped forth to meet the girl, felt that his heart was no longer in his own keeping.

During the days which followed, the youthful Alfred became the constant companion and in addition the guide and mentor of the lovely girl. Himself a keen golfer, he had soon initiated his beautiful cousin into the mysteries of golf, and taught her to appreciate a good elastic ball such as the 1924 SMACKO of which the outer case is guaranteed never to chip or crumble. Under the same tutelage the mysteries of MAH JONGG, an excellent set of which has now been placed on the market direct from China (remember the words, direct from China,) afforded the young people a fascinating refuge from thought.



"In addition to flowers, Alfred also sent seeds, bulbs and shoots."

It was a great pleasure to Alfred during these sweet hours of companionship to watch the gradual unfoldment of the girl's mind. To help it to unfold the young man purchased and read out loud to Louisa a correspondence course in Political Economy and Municipal Taxation, such as would enable the girl to fill a position of trust as tax assessor, municipal expert, or consulting town engineer. Together also they read over a course on Cost Accounting and Overhead Reckoning, by which Louisa would have been fitted at any moment to act as an insurance appraiser or to take over bankrupt stock. Thus with every day the girl acquired new power of mind and a wider outlook. Indeed, as Prof. O. J. Hootch, D.F., organizer of the World's Correspondence School in Room 6, Avenue 4718, Omaha, says: "Outlook means look out."

Suspenders for Anxiety

WE NEED not describe in full the blissful but anxious days during which Alfred, conscious of his love, hung suspended between hopes and fears. We will only say that the suspenders that he used during this period were of the new HAUL-OVER type with the central pulley adjusted to the play of his shoulders. No doubt this delicate adjustment helped the young man through the most troubled period of life, keeping his shoulders flat and putting no pressure on his abdomen. In short, they are the very braces which Mr. J. O. P. Bughouse of Wichita, Kan., whose picture is usually annexed, has said: "They are the only ones I ever use!"

During this enchanted period of courtship Alfred contrived in various ways to convey the feelings which he dared not utter. Knowing that flowers can now be sent by telegraphic order to any address, he had them expressed to Louisa from all parts of the country. These orders, which were received at any hour of the day or night, were filled under the direction of a staff of trained experts on whose taste and discretion the customer may place the utmost reliance. In short, it is of these orders that the well-known florist, Mr. J. Q. W. Mud of Wastabula, Wash., has said, in that terse language which he uses, "Let us send them." In addition to the flowers Alfred also sent seeds, bulbs, and shoots, for which the charge is exactly the same and no greater.

The inevitable time drew near when Alfred of The Ads felt that he must know his fate and must hazard all on an avowal of his love. For this, however, he had prepared himself. He had overcome the natural diffidence of youth by purchasing and perusing a little manual called, "Why Be Diffident, Self-Confidence Acquired by a New System of Treatment," in two lessons at 50 cents each. Alfred in sending for this little book enclosed United States postage stamps, but it is important to notice that bills, express orders or any form of legal tender are preferably accepted for it.

Renovated, Decorated, Guaranteed

NOR was lovely Louisa unprepared. She, too, had studied a little manual entitled, "What a Young Girl Ought to Know," and she knew it.

The fateful moment came. Kneeling on one knee in front of Louisa—a thing which he was enabled to do without risk by wearing NEVER-BAG trousers—Alfred declared his love in a few easy sentences selected from his manual. The deep blush which colored the face of the lovely Louisa was answer enough. Alfred rose to his feet with an easy movement of his suspenders and clasped the girl to his heart.

There is no need here to describe the charming home wedding with which the marriage of Alfred and Louisa was celebrated at The Ads. The good old place was cleaned and redecorated from cellar to basement, Alfred using for this purpose the new PNEUMO-WHEEZE Vacuum Cleaner, which can be had on free trial for ten days and which is guaranteed to remove dust from every corner and crevice. It is of this cleaner that Mr. X. Q. Overhead, the well-known expert, himself a T.Q. of Yale, had said: "They are the best cleaners that I know."

The catering was placed in the hands of a catering firm. The invitations were printed and issued by an invitation firm. The officiating clergyman was engaged on a simple basis of cost plus. Louisa looked charming in a wedding gown which could have been returned without charge if not satisfactory. Alfred's costume was guaranteed by the maker himself. And as the happy pair sank back luxuriously on the seat of the landeau (a shock absorber with every car) Alfred placed his arm twice round Louisa's waist and murmured, "It pays to advertise."

MRS. RICHARD C. CABOT of Boston, the social leader who conducts a course in "human relations" in a fashionable girls' school, said at a dinner party:

"The object of my course is to bring about happy marriages, and I have been very successful, indeed. I point out the reefs on which marriages are often wrecked.

"A man," Mrs. Cabot went on, "said to a group of women at a tea:

"'Before I was married I could never save a cent.'

"The women above their teacups exchanged triumphant smiles.

"'I managed to keep out of debt, though,' the man added."

AN OLD lady stopped one of the double deckers on Sunset Boulevard recently and ordered the conductor not to start until she had got to the top. When she reached the last step he called out, "Are you all right?"

"No," was the reply, "I'm coming down again."

She came down and stepped off on to the pavement.

"Where did you want to go to, madam?" asked the driver.

"Well," replied the old lady, "I'm not going anywhere today, but if it's a little warmer tomorrow I might go for a ride and I just wanted to see if I could get up the steps to the top."

A critic said to this woman novelist one day:

"'Most women have no sense of humor.'

"'Well, what of it?' said she. 'Most men have no sense at all.'"

JOYCE plays golf at the Hollywood Country Club and he prefers a solitary round with only the caddie present. He had a new boy one day recently, and played as usual.

"I fancy I play the worst game in the world," he confessed to the caddie.

"Oh, I wouldn't say that, sir," was the consoling reply. "From what the boys were saying about another gentleman who plays here, he must be worse than you are."

"What's his name," asked the player hopefully.

"Joyce," replied the caddie.

All Balled Up

TWO brothers, who were long rivals for golfing honors, determined to settle the matter by playing just one hole on the course in the early morning. Richard hit a beautiful 200-yard drive. Tom was "fussed" and got a bad slice, the ball disappearing in the high grass. Both searched for the missing ball.

After looking for some time, Richard said, "Well, time is up. Lost ball, lost hole."

Tom slyly dropped a ball out of his pocket on the grass. "Oh, here's my ball," he said.

Richard turned back with amazement on his face. "Why, that's not your ball," he said wrathfully, "I have the ball that you drove, in my pocket, and it's been there ever since."

The Heart Doc

THERE is one of the smaller hotels in a New York cross street to which known personages of stage and film flock as if it were a club. A passer-by may pause on the sidewalk and chat through the window with friends in the restaurant. Within, after the theater, indeed after the flashing electric signs of Broadway shine down on thinning night crowds in the thoroughfares, congenial groups chatter pleasantly—even in these dry days—or visit from table to table. An extraordinary number of attractive women find place in the long room, successful young actresses or less assured ingenues who trust here to pick up the threads that may lead to success through the tangled intrigues and confused hopes of the littl[illegible]os of the theater. Personable young men sip ginger ale and smoke comfortably. There is a sprinkling of novelists, poets, critics, and scenario writers. Certain of the widely exploited younger generation of writing men foregather here to damn the Victorian century and whisper reverently of James Joyce and praise all that is Russian. The waiters, as once at the La Fayette downtown and at the now dead Delmonico's a block away, are mostly known by name. It is at midnight a pleasant room, warmed by youth and humor, even lighted at moments by wit.

We find ourselves concerned with a woman who sits alone at a corner table. She nods prettily to acquaintances. A headwaiter pauses to speak informally of this or that and to inquire after her husband. A waiter serves scrambled eggs on toast and coffee. She has brought in a magazine from the news stand which she props against a carafe. After eating she refills her cup and sips as she reads. A man saunters in, nods, hesitates.

He: Are you as alone as you look, Harriet?

She: Every bit. Do sit down.

He: Thanks, I'll do it. What's this—coffee at midnight?

She: Yes, coffee. I'm getting to be a toper, Bob.

He: But can you sleep?

She: Oh, some. I don't mind. I do a lot of reading at night.

He: I must say you never looked better.

She: You were always charming with old ladies, Bob.

He: Perhaps because I'm not quite old enough yet myself to be seen with the ingenues. Mind if I eat here?

She: Of course not. It's an age since I've seen you. Tell me what you've been doing.

He: Oh, finishing up a novel. What did you have—scrambled eggs? Eggs poison me. Drive me to milk of magnesia. Here, Tony! I'll have a chicken sandwich and a botle of near beer. And, Lord, how I dread it!

She: Bring my check please, Tony.

He: You're not going?

She: Pretty soon.

He: Oh, stay and talk to me. I love to visit till all hours.

She: Well—not long. I'm in a new apartment. Over on Forty-fifth street. The Hotel Van Dam.

He: I thought you always stopped here.

She: I can't afford it. This new place is really awfully nice. Parlor, bedroom, and bath for $4 a day. It would cost ten here. It's clean, and the place seems well run. But I've just moved in today. No end of things to do.

He (hesitating, as one does in New York when moved to ask wives about their husbands or husbands about wives:) How's Jim?

She: Oh, fine. He's out on the coast, you know. Bob, I saw a good play this evening.

He: Not in New York.

She: Yes, really. "In Love with Love."

He: Oh, Lynn Fontaine and Henry Hull.

She: Yes, and Ralph Morgan. I'll confess to a weakness for him. I've never seen quite such a performance. Bob Milton directed it. He's taken a leaf from the Russians' book. Everybody interrupts, steps on cues, speaks quietly and naturally. Sometimes three or four are talking at once. No sense of pampered actors, just a perfect ensemble. I felt as if I were peeping in at a keyhole. You'd know what emotions every one of them was going through if you didn't hear a word.

He: Naturalistic stuff. Well, I suppose—

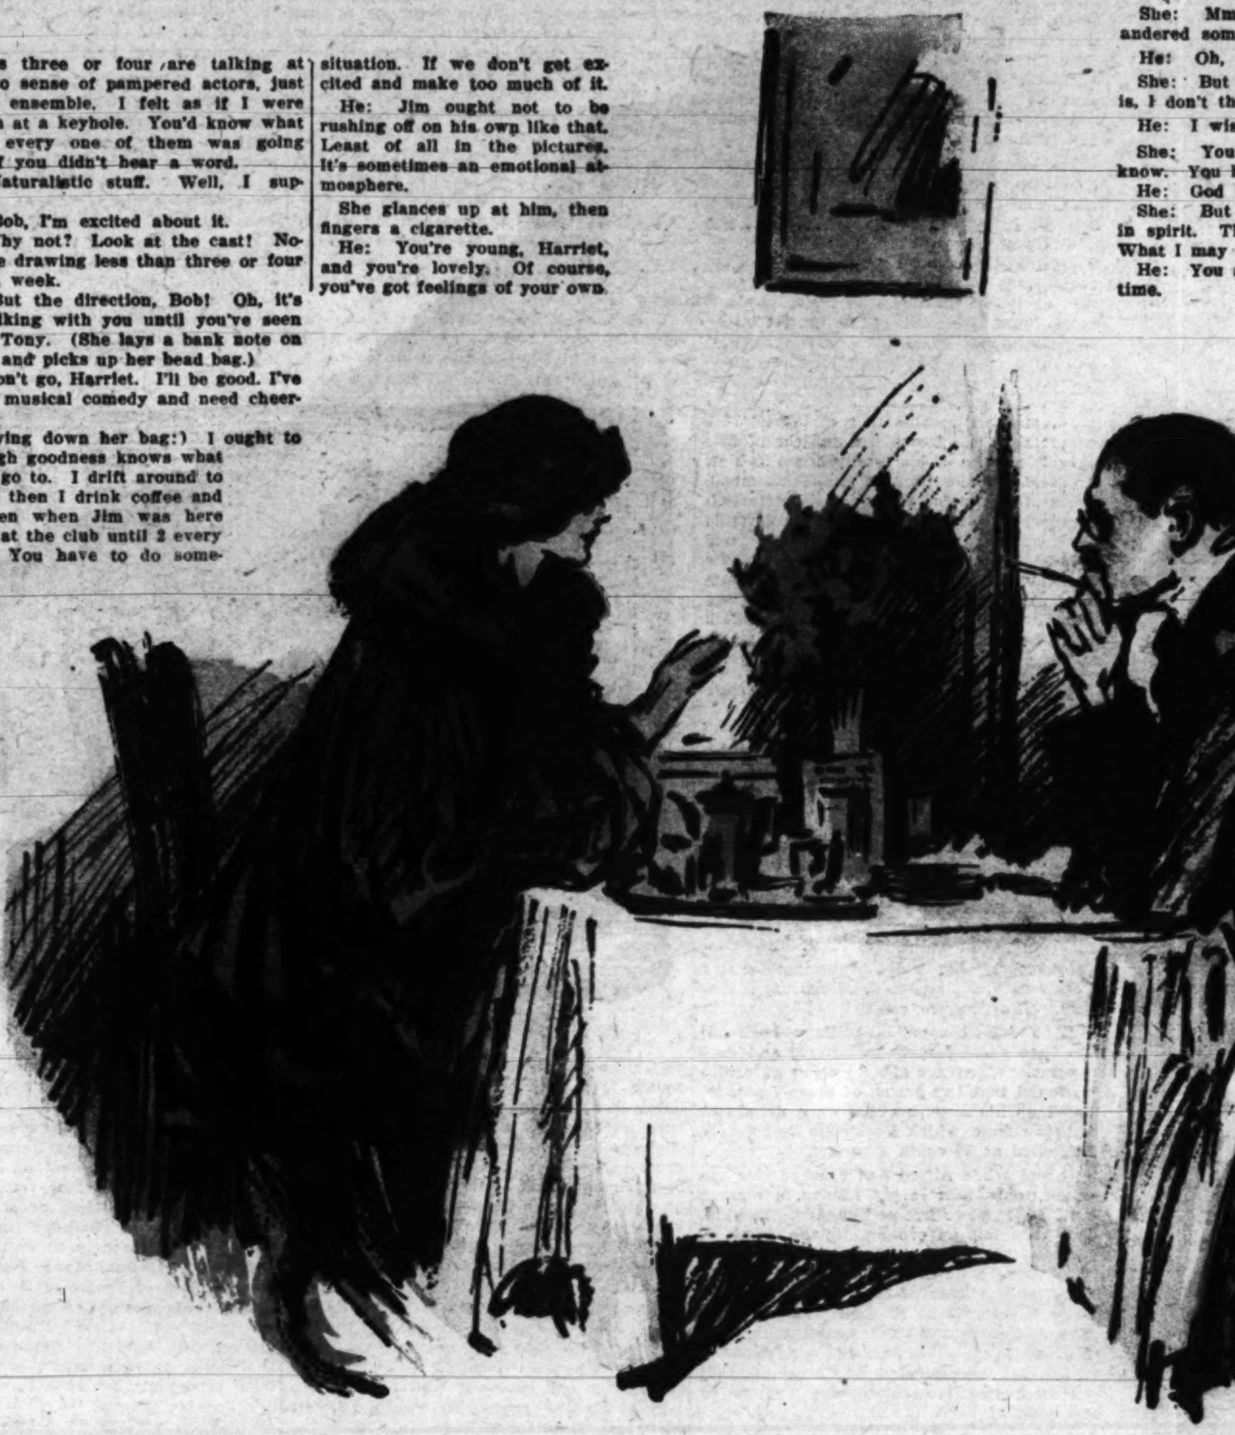
She: Bob, I'm excited about it.

He: Why not? Look at the cast! Nobody there drawing less than three or four hundred a week.

She: But the direction, Bob! Oh, it's no use talking with you until you've seen it. Here, Tony. (She lays a bank note on the check and picks up her bead bag.)

He: Don't go, Harriet. I'll be good. I've been to a musical comedy and need cheering up.

She (laying down her bag:) I ought to go. Though goodness knows what I have to go to. I drift around to plays, and then I drink coffee and read. Even when Jim was here he stayed at the club until 2 every morning. You have to do something.



"You're young, Harriet, and you're lovely."

He: Jim doing a picture?

She (nodding:) I wanted him to stay here, but he's got it into his head that there's big money for him somewhere just around the corner in Hollywood. Bob, he didn't want me to go with him.

He: Oh, surely.

She: He asked me, of course. Or he assumed I'd go along. But he was relieved when I decided. Couldn't conceal it.

He: But why didn't you go?

She: Because I knew. It was seven months last year—seven months in a rocking chair on the front piazza of the Hotel Hollywood staring at those stuby palm trees. Jim on location in the mountains, mostly, or doing night scenes at the studio. Partly my own fault, I suppose. I wanted Jim to stay here and put on plays. That's his real gift. Then there's another little problem, but I won't go into that. You needn't take it so soberly, Bob. There's nothing really serious. Not yet.

He: I don't like to think—

She: Oh, it isn't a break. Though perhaps it's drifting on into something of a situation. If we don't get excited and make too much of it.

He: Jim ought not to be rushing off on his own like that. Least of all in the pictures. It's sometimes an emotional atmosphere.

She glances up at him, then fingers a cigarette.

He: You're young, Harriet, and you're lovely. Of course, you've got feelings of your own. It isn't fair to you to leave you sititng around New York hotels.

She: Well—light a match for me, Bob.

He (doing so:) Somebody ought to hand Jim a little straight talk. Dutch Uncle. Mind if I take one of your cigarettes?

She: Of course not. We've been married eight years, Bob. Remember "Midchannel?"

He: None of those literary formulas fit many of the actual cases. Of course, it's bad for you not to have companionship. You're a damn companionable girl, Harriet. It isn't fair. What if I were to take your friendship in my hands and write to Jim?

She: He'd tell you to mind your own business. Jim's pretty headlong, sometimes. Bob, they're putting out the lights. Goodness, it's 1 o'clock!

He: You've admitted it isn't bedtime. Let's sit in the lounge.

She: Only a minute. There's a Victorian strain in me. And everybody knows us. (They find a divan in an obscure corner.) I suppose I need advice myself. You've been married, Bob.

He: Yes, I've been married.

She: I used to think I'd settle down. But I don't. Life is even more interesting than it used to be. And people. They excite me. There's more and more color in life. Jim lives in all that color. I sit on one side. There's a restlessness that comes up as a good deal of a problem.

He: Of course, we all have to submit ourselves to discipline of some sort.

She: I should think it would have to be real discipline. Something that comes at you from the outside.

He: Probably you need work.

She: I know I do.

He: Why don't you go back on the stage?

She: Jim won't let me. He's funny about that.

He: But that isn't fair. You have something of a case against him there. He mustn't take you from your work and then leave you with neither the work nor companionship.

She: I know. But it is pretty complicated, Bob.

She: Mm, probably not in love. Jim has philandered some.

He: Oh, Harriet, I'm sorry—

She: But I don't really think it is serious. That is, I don't think he wants a divorce.

He: I wish I could advise you.

She: You can, Bob. More than anybody else I know. You have understanding.

He: God knows I'm old enough.

She: But I don't know anybody who is younger in spirit. That's the great thing. I worry about it. What I may grow into. You see, my youth is gone.

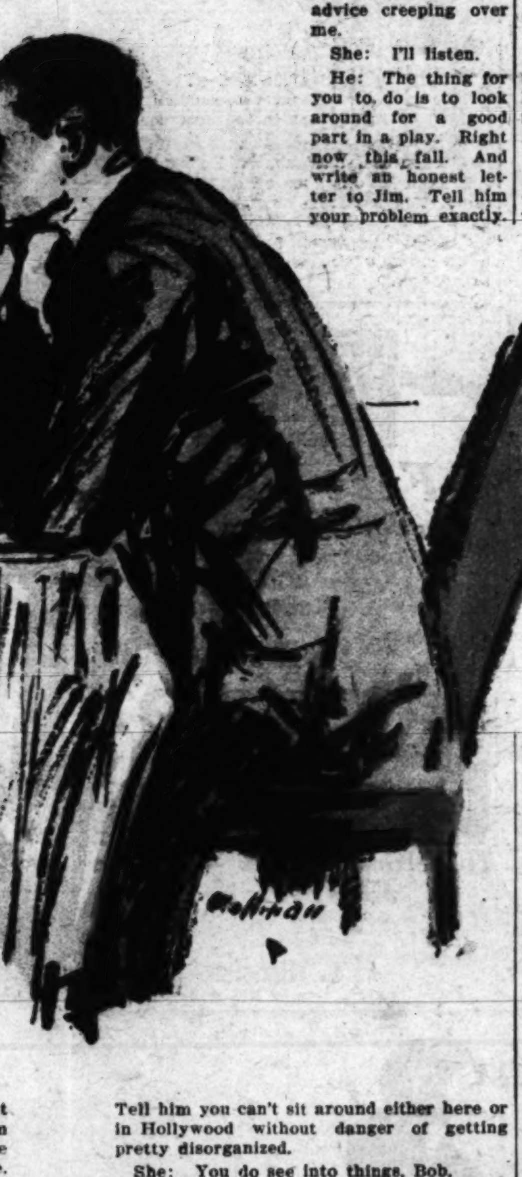
He: You are just flowering. It is woman's perfect time.

She: Bob, you say such lovely things!

He: You inspire them, Harriet. I feel advice creeping over me.

She: I'll listen.

He: The thing for you to do is to look around for a good part in a play. Right now this fall. And write an honest letter to Jim. Tell him your problem exactly.



Tell him you can't sit around either here or in Hollywood without danger of getting pretty disorganized.

She: You do see into things, Bob.

He: Tell him you love him, but that you've got to pull yourself together and get under way.

She: I'll think it over.

He: Don't think too much. Act. Take a stand.

She: Since we've got somehow into this frank sort of talk, Bob, I may as well—it's a little difficult to say—I don't know just how honest I could be with Jim. It's funny, I seem to be able to say almost anything to you.

He: You're not married to me.

She: Do you suppose that's it? Or is it just that you're older and—steadier?

He: I don't feel any too steady right now. I'm tremendously aware of you.

She: But I've felt so old.

He: You know that's silly, Harriet. You're not over 30.

She: Twenty-nine.

He: All your richest years are coming.

She: I wish I could believe that.

He: You can take it from me. I'm 46, and I wouldn't go back a minute. Not a minute. Middle life is the wonderful time! But I have lived through a few things, and observed a few.

She: That's what makes you so interesting.

He: I'm certainly old enough to know that I shouldn't enjoy in this stirring way the companionship of Jim Hartley's wife. You see, I'm Victorian, too. I ought to be helping you to find a common interest with Jim. That's what I really want to do, you know.

She: I wonder if marriage need be a prison.

A Page Boy (approaching:) Telephone, Mr. Braeburn.

He: Just a moment. Curious, at this time of night.

Page: Booth four, Mr. Braeburn, please!

He enters the booth. There is some confusion on the wires. It seems that a Mr. Blackburn is wanted. He steps out and finds Harriet hurriedly crossing the lounge. Her color is slightly higher than it was.

She: I'm going home.

He inclines his head. Courtesy has become a habit. But a long moment afterward he is still there, staring at the revolving door through which she has fled.

It is the following day. He has been lunching with Arthur Briggs, editor of a magazine. They walk slowly westward along Forty-fifth street toward Fifth avenue. Their talk has dwelt on his work, on the baffling problem of capturing and holding each year that capricious thing, the public imagination, on the picturing of complicated human motives in fiction. They pause under a contractor's shed where riveters are making hideously merry with the steel frame of a new building.

Braeburn: I'll leave you here, Arthur. Got to go down Sixth avenue.

Briggs: I've enjoyed the visit. Will you be in town again soon?

Braeburn: I—perhaps. I did mean to stick around a week or so. But—

Briggs: Fine! Do look me up.

Braeburn: It's vacation time for me, in a way. But I woke up this morning thinking I'd better get right out. An odd thing happened last night. Rather funny to tell it, but I stumbled across an old acquaintance in the hotel. Wife of a fellow I know. And we had a curious little flare-up of emotion. Queer. We'd never had a personal word before. Just met in crowds now and then. She was always quiet. Devoted to her husband. But it came tumbling out last night. He's been getting careless. Neglecting her. She's a dear little thing. Impulsive and delightfully honest. And there we sat, not flirting exactly, not even saying anything too personal—that's the funny part of it; you could check up our conversation and not find one really dangerous phrase in it—but, just the same, we were drawing closer than one should with another fellow's wife. We were on the edge every moment. It just happened. God knows I'm old enough to know better. But I felt it. And I know she felt it, because I was called to the phone, and when I came back she was hurrying out with her color up. In something of a panic. She said, 'I'm going home,' and rushed out. Damn it, I found we'd talked until 2 o'clock—nobody left there on the main floor but the night clerk, the telephone girl, and the elevator boy—all about herself and myself and her loneliness and the little suite she has taken to live alone in. People must have noticed us. It left me in a glow. I'll admit I liked it. But today I find I don't know what to do. We drew close so quickly and then all of a sudden left it up in the air. I can't take to calling her up. And yet maybe she'll feel like the devil if I don't. You know, it doesn't seem quite human, after she let herself go like that, to . . .

Briggs considers his friend. He sees a sensitively thoughtful face on a healthy body. Braeburn isn't really a philanderer. He says, "Do you know, I like that, Bob."

Of Course, They Couldn't See That They'd Hit it Off Like That; It Flared Up Suddenly—All the Old, Delightful Mystery of Attraction

Braeburn: It's certainly funny enough. Here we've met casually for years. Never the hint of a spark there. And then all of a sudden we're daubed with the old emotional brush.

Briggs: You could hardly put that into a story. You know, have it happen that way without reason or plot or motivation. Suddenly hitting it off with an old acquaintance you've hardly looked at or she at you.

Braeburn: Exactly. And really nothing there at all. Just all at once reaching out toward each other. All the old delightful mystery. It enveloped us. We hardly knew anybody else was on earth. She didn't want to go home, and I certainly didn't want her to. Talking all around it. And now I haven't an idea what to do. I can't take advantage of her mood. It's plain enough that the poor girl's been having a pretty mean time of it. If I so much as call her up she may feel that I'm after her. That won't do. But how can I leave it so—with her turning red and rushing out with that panicky "I'm going home?" Two o'clock in the morning!

Briggs: You'll hear from her.

Braeburn: No. No. I'm going up country. Yes, that's the thing. I'll take the 4 o'clock today. Get right back to work. It's just a little too unsettling. Though to save my life I couldn't tell why, it should be. Thank God for work!

Briggs: There is charm in the situation, Bob.

Braeburn: Of course. That's why.

Briggs: But you're not going to lose your head. Not at your age. With all the sober experience you've had.

Braeburn: I've seen it happen. At just this age, too. When you're a little older, Arthur, you'll make the curious discovery that women have a way of giving up the battle when the man is mature. They save their fencing for the young fellows. I don't know why, exactly.

Briggs: I've heard my father say that.

Braeburn: It has always been so, I imagine.

Briggs: You could help her.

Braeburn: I have a confused notion that I tried to. At least I felt that I should try. Oh, you know, pointing out how she could busy herself with her own life, and see if it wouldn't bring her husband to time. Ticklish, in a way, because he's a good enough fellow. I've always liked him around the club. But I had and have the unpleasant feeling that I wasn't sincere. I couldn't think of anything but her, sitting there across the table, an unhappy, restless, warmly human little thing.

Briggs: It's a pretty story.

Braeburn (firmly:) But it's over. I'm going away this afternoon.

We find him next in his room at the hotel, packing his suit case. He is very firm now. The porter has been instructed to get him a chair on the 4 o'clock. The telephone rings.

A Feminine Voice: Mr. Braeburn?

He: Yes. This is Mr. Braeburn.

Another Voice (a man's:) Oh, Mr. Braeburn (the porter speaking.) I can't get anything on the 4 o'clock but——

She: There's somebody on the wire, Bob. It's Harriet Hartley. I just wanted to ask——

The Porter: . . . but I'm holding a chair on the 5:02 in case you——

Voice of Operator: Get off the wire, Eddie! There's another party——

She: . . . through by five if you——

He: One moment, Harriet! I missed part of what you said.

She: . . . if I could see you for a few minutes. I'm at the hair dresser's now, but I could meet you about 5.

He: Surely. I'd love to see you.

She: Any place convenient for you.

He: Or for you. The hotel here's rather——

She: So many people we know——

He: Yes. Hard to talk. How about Voisin's? Cup of tea.

She: Oh, I love it there, Bob!

He: Fine! Voisin's at 5.

The Porter: If the 5:02 will be——

He: Oh, cancel it!

She: What was that, Bob?

He: Nothing. Mixup on the wire.

She: Oh, I thought you said—well, good-by for now.

He: Good-by Harriet. Awfully glad you called. I was thinking of calling you. At five.

She: Good-by.

The Porter: Sorry, Mr. Braeburn, but I didn't quite——

He: I said, cancel it! I'm not going! Not today. Understand?

The Porter: Oh, yes, sir. I'll cancel the ticket. Thank you, sir.

There is a side room at Voisin's in which tables for two are tucked inconspicuously away between high backed benches. Here we find them, sipping tea and nibbling cinnamon toast and smoking intently.

She: This is the telegram to Jim. Don't you think it would be better? A letter takes so long. I thought you'd better read it—if you don't feel that——

The yellow blank is scribbled over with much writing and many crossings out. He reads—Dear Jim the time has come when I must try to organize my life I simply can't go on doing nothing just drifting it is downright disheartening I really don't know what will become of me if I don't take a stand act in some definite way I'm consulting with friends and think I will go back on the stage I'd rather become a stenographer than go on drifting like this you know I love you Jim but if I don't take my own life in my hands pretty soon there may be consequences that will react seriously on us both at least I will have something fresh to talk about when you come back East please wish me luck Jim dear.—Harriet.

He: I wonder if you'd let me make a suggestion.

She: Of course. That's why I——

He: In a way I oughtn't to.

She: But, Bob, without your help I don't know what I could do. It's you that——

He: I was only thinking—let's try to look at the thing sensibly, Harriet. Rationally. What we want, of course, is to bring Jim back to you, isn't it?

She: Of course.

He: Now, it's a difficult situation because there's so much emotion mixed up with it. It's just an emotional situation. And they're always difficult. What we must do is try to look at it coolly. Impersonally. Consider Jim's state of mind. He's busy. He's keen on his work; or on making money. In a measure, any intense emotional relationship must pass its high point. No two persons—no man and woman—can stay excited indefinitely. I suppose the moment in which every marriage is first put to the test is the time of transition from emotional excitement into a real workable companionship.

She: Bob, you're wonderful!

He: No. But I'm trying to see it sensibly.

She: I wonder if I could. Women are emotional, Bob. It's what's the matter with us, I suppose.

He (reading the telegram again, thoughtfully:) Harriet, I wouldn't send that message.

She: But I've got to do something.

He: Surely. But you want to be attractive to Jim, don't you?

She: Of course.

He: You want him to be coming after you, as he used to. Now that isn't so difficult. You are more attractive than you ever were as a girl. Give me a mature human being every time! Well, let him see you as you are . . . as you're going to be . . . a busy, independent woman, with personality added to your

BILL BROCKWELL'S AMBITION

By Ruth M. Gandy
1260 North Hudson avenue,
Pasadena, Cal.

One sultry morning in late July, Billy Brockwell sat under a big elm tree in the front yard of his home. This was not anything unusual—as he often sat there—but on this particular morning Billy was thinking, and thinking hard. About ten minutes before, his mother had sent him from the pantry, where reposed three large, juicy cherry pies. Billy wanted a taste of the pie—forthwith he had decided that he'd better achieve something great—something that would spell open sesame to that pantry door—and in time, too, while the pies were still warm.

He longed to be a soldier, he meditated. Sure—win battles and maybe get shot or something—and come home to be the hero of his town. Or maybe it would be better to be a general—they're awfully popular—and nobody would ever Writers—have you started your chapter of "One in a Thousand" yet?

There's a $10 prize awaiting one of you—a prize for the best chapter contributed in this thrilling mystery story and romance started by Helen L. Hinkel, and now carried on by Charles Fay Dirkwood and, sh! here's a secret, Christina Van Bolt. The fourth chapter by Charles Dirkwood is very thrilling, whereas Christina Van Bolt approaches the problem by a new angle entirely.

Read the chapters to date in the Junior Times, then see what you can do!

Look over the story today, then put on your thinking cap. Your brains may be worth ten dollars. Submit your idea of a chapter to Aunt Dolly, care of The Junior Times. It may be printed and win you the prize!

Since the announcement of the prizes for new chapters, Aunt Dolly's mail has been flooded with clever additions to the sprightly love tale. In fact, it is a revelation to observe how many ingenious methods of twisting the plot exists. Out of the many letters received only a very few are anywhere near alike as to plot idea.

This is important, because it shows the ingenuity and self-reliance of the contestants, who cast about for original ways of developing a theme, instead of reading the original story and and trying to see it through the eyes of the original author.

This is one of the most engrossing games in the world—plot making. Many of the biggest authors of today make up their stories as they go along, just playing a sort of mental game of chess with their characters.

I remember once how Lemuel L. De Bra, one of the most famous writers of mystery stories, who is paid thousands of dollars by various magazines, and who has had several books of his stories published, explained it.

"I never know what I am going to do when I sit down to write," said Mr. De Bra, "and I just play

Aunt Dolly's ? Box

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

I have not yet joined your wonderful club, but I am sure you will not care if I bring my troubles to you.

I am a girl of 13 who has always wanted true friendship with other girls out here. I try to give it, but find poor reward. The girls in school do not seem to care for me. Once in awhile they walk and talk with me, but then the next day they forget that they have ever known me. Back home I was so popular, but out here in California I meet with a cold reception. What can be the matter? It makes me so unhappy. I am trying to improve every trait that I may have, thinking I may have some disagreeable ones.

Dear Aunt Dolly, I know your advice will be of help, so that is why I am sending you this letter.

With kindest regards to all my other cousins and love to yourself,

[Signed] PUZZLED.

You must not grieve, dear Puzzled, for yours is only one letter among hundreds, all with the same complaint, but we must not

The Wonderful Stories of Oz

By L. Frank Baum

How the Growleywogs Conspired Against Guph

Grand Gallipoot. Chief of the Growleywogs, and his counselors sat in solemn counsel for a long time, forming a conspiracy against both Guph, the Nome King's General, and the Kingdom of Oz. After advising his counselors of the proposition of the Nome King, he said:

"My advice is to offer to help them. Then, when we have conquered the land of Oz, we will take not only twenty thousand prisoners but all the gold and jewels we want."

"Let us take the Magic Belt, too," suggested one counselor.

"And rob the Nome King and make him our slave," said another.

"That is a good idea," declared Grand Gallipoot. "I'd like King Roquat for my own slave. He could black my boots and bring me my porridge every morning while I am in bed."

"There is a famous Scarecrow in Oz. I'll take him for my slave," said a counselor.

"I'll take Tiktok, the machine man," said another.

"Give me the Tin Woodman," said a third.

They went on for some time, dividing up the people and the treasure of Oz in advance of the conquest. For they had no doubt at all that they would be able to destroy Ozma's domain. Were they not the strongest people in all the world?

"The deadly desert has kept us out of Oz before," remarked the Grand Gallipoot, "but now that the Nome King is building a tunnel we shall get into the Emerald City very easily. So let us send the little fat General back to his King with our promise to assist him. We will not say that we intend to conquer the Nomes after we have conquered Oz, but we will do so, just the same."

This plan being agreed upon, they all went home to dinner, leaving General Guph still in prison. The Nome had no idea that he had succeeded in his mission, for finding himself in prison he feared the Growleywogs intended to put him to death.

By this time the jailer had tired of sticking pins in the General, and was amusing himself by carefully pulling the Nome's whiskers out by the roots, one at a time. This enjoyment was interrupted by the Grand Gallipoot sending for the prisoner.

"Wait a few hours," begged the jailer. "I haven't pulled out a quarter of his whiskers yet."

"If you keep the Grand Gallipoot waiting he'll break your back," declared the messenger.

"Perhaps you're right," sighed the jailer. "Take the prisoner away, if you will, but I advise you to kick him at every step he takes. It will be good fun, for he is as soft as a ripe peach."

So Guph was led away to the royal castle, where the Grand Gallipoot told him that the Growleywogs had decided to assist the Nomes in conquering the Land of Oz.

"Whenever you are ready," he added, "send me word and I will march with eighteen thousand of my most powerful warriors to your aid."

Guph was so delighted that he forgot all the smarting caused by the pins and the pulling of his whiskers. He did not even complain of the treatment he had received, but thanked the Grand Gallipoot and hurried away upon his journey.

He had now secured the assistance of the Whimsies and the Growleywogs; but his success made him long for still more allies. His own life depended upon his conquering Oz, and he said to himself:

"I'll take no chances. I'll be certain of success. Then, when Oz is destroyed, perhaps I shall be a greater man than old Roquat, and I can throw him away and be King of the Nomes myself. Why not? The Whimsies are stronger than the Nomes, and they are my friends. The Growleywogs are stronger than the Whimsies, and they also are my friends. There are some people still stronger than the Growleywogs, and if I can but induce them to aid me I shall have nothing more to fear."

It did not take Dorothy long to establish herself in her new home, for she knew the people and the manners and customs of the Emerald City just as well as she knew the old Kansas farm.

But Uncle Henry and Aunt Em had some trouble in getting used to the finery and pomp and ceremony of Ozma's palace, and felt uneasy because they were obliged to be "dressed up" all the time. Yet everyone was very courteous and kind to them and endeavored to make them happy. Ozma, especially, made much of Dorothy's relatives, for her little friend's sake, and she well knew that the awkwardness and strangeness of their new mode of life would all wear off in time.

The old people were chiefly troubled by the fact that there was no work for them to do.

"Ev'ry day is like Sunday now," declared Aunt Em, solemnly, "and I can't say I like it. If they'd only let me do up the dishes after meals, or even sweep an' dust my own rooms, I'd be a deal happier. Henry don't know what to do with himself either, and once when he stole out an' fed the chickens Billina scolded him for letting 'em eat between meals. I never knew before what a hardship it is to be rich and have everything you want."

These complaints began to worry Dorothy; so she had a long talk with Ozma upon the subject.

"I see I must find them something to do," said the girlish Ruler of Oz, seriously. "I have been watching your uncle and aunt, and I believe they will be more contented if occupied with some light tasks. While I am considering this matter, Dorothy, you might make a trip with them through the Land of Oz, visiting some of the odd corners and introducing your relatives to some of our curious people."

"Oh, that would be fine!" exclaimed Dorothy, eagerly.

"I will give you an escort befitting your rank as a Princess," continued Ozma; "and you may go to some of the places you have not yet visited yourself, as well as some others that you know. I will mark out a plan of the trip for you and have everything in readiness for you to start tomorrow morning. Take your time, dear, and be gone as long as you wish. By the time you return I shall have found some occupation for Uncle Henry and Aunt Em that will keep them from being restless and dissatisfied."

Dorothy thanked her good friend and kissed the lovely Ruler gratefully. Then she ran to tell the joyful news to her uncle and aunt.

Next morning, after breakfast, everything was found ready for their departure.

The escort included Omby Amby, the Captain-General of Ozma's army, which consisted merely of twenty-seven officers besides the Captain-General. Once Omby Amby had been a private soldier—the only private in the army—but as there was never any fighting to do Ozma saw no need of a private, so she made Omby Amby the highest officer of them all. He was very tall and slim and wore a gray uniform and a fierce mustache. Yet the mustache was the only fierce thing about Omby Amby, whose nature was as gentle as that of a child.

The wonderful Wizard had asked to join the party, and with him came his old friend the Shaggy Man, who was shaggy but not ragged, being dressed in fine silks with satin shags and bobtails. The Shaggy Man had shaggy whiskers and hair, but a sweet disposition and a soft, pleasant voice.

There was an open wagon, with three seats for the passengers, and the wagon was drawn by the famous wooden Sawhorse, which had once been brought to life by Ozma by means of a magic powder. The Sawhorse wore golden shoes to keep his wooden legs from wearing away and he was strong and swift. As this curious creature was Ozma's own favorite steed, and very popular with the people of the Emerald City, Dorothy knew that she had been highly favored by being permitted to use the Sawhorse on her journey.

In the front seat of the wagon sat Dorothy and the Wizard. Uncle Henry and Aunt Em sat in the next seat and the Shaggy Man and Omby Amby in the third seat. Of course Toto was with the party, curled up at Dorothy's feet, and just as they were about to start Billina came fluttering along the path and begged to be taken with them. Dorothy readily agreed, so the Yellow Hen flew up and perched herself upon the dashboard. She wore her pearl necklace and three bracelets upon each leg, in honor of the occasion.

Dorothy kissed Ozma good-by, and all the people standing around waved their handkerchiefs, and the band in an upper balcony struck up a military march. Then the Wizard clucked to the Sawhorse and said: "Gid-dap!" and the wooden animal pranced away and drew behind him the big red wagon and all the passengers, without any effort at all. A servant threw open a gate of the palace inclosure, that they might pass out; and so, with music and shouts following them, the journey was begun.

"It's almost like a circus," said Aunt Em, proudly. "I can't help feelin' high an' mighty in this kind of a turn-out."

Indeed, as they passed down the street, all the people cheered them lustily, and the Shaggy Man and the Wizard and the Captain-General all took off their hats and bowed politely in acknowledgment.

When they came to the great wall of the Emerald City the gates were opened by the Guardian who always tended them. Over the gateway hung a dull-colored metal magnet shaped like a horseshoe, placed against a shield of polished gold.

"That," said the Shaggy Man, impressively, "is the wonderful Love Magnet. I brought it to the Emerald City myself, and all who pass beneath this gateway are both loving and beloved."

"It's a fine thing," declared Aunt Em, admiringly. "If we'd had it in Kansas I guess the man who held a mortgage on the farm wouldn't have turned us out."

"Then I'm glad we didn't have it," returned Uncle Henry "I like Oz better than Kansas, even; an' this little wood Sawhorse beats all the critters I ever saw. He don't have to be curried, or fed, or watered, an' he's strong as an ox. Can he talk, Dorothy?"

"Yes, Uncle," replied the child. "But

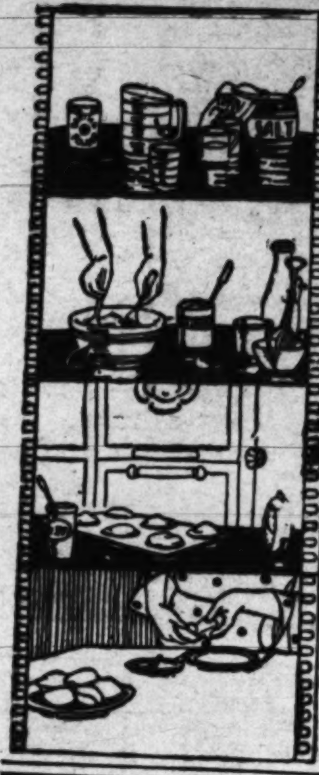
A COMPANY DINNER FILM LESSON



Special "surprise muffins" will be sure to please the guests at the company dinner which the girl who follows these "film lessons" in cooking will serve. Mother can leave the kitchen and sit on the front porch while you make the muffins, because her help won't be needed at all if you follow these directions carefully.

(1.) Sift together one and one-half cupfuls corn meal, one cupful flour, three teaspoonfuls baking powder and one-half teaspoonful salt.

(2.) Rub in one tablespoonful of shortening and add the liquid which is one well-beaten egg mixed with about seven-eighths of a cupful of milk. This will make a soft batter.

(3.) Fill greased muffin tins one-quarter full, then put in each one a teaspoonful of strawberry jam. Cover with the batter and put in a hot oven for twenty minutes.

(4.) When the company break open their gems, a surprise is found inside. These muffins are as delicious as they are attractive.

Of course we must have a salad with our company dinner, so that'll be the lesson for next week.

INDOOR AND OUTDOOR GAMES

HORNED MONKEY

Seated in a circle, leader begins, "My horned monkey plays with apes." (Starting with "A," some animal or bird is named, one by each player; next player, in turn, adds one, beginning with next letter "B," and so on through the alphabet;) each player repeating those already named and adding his at the last, the second player saying, "My horned monkey plays with apes and bears." Next says, "My horned monkey plays with apes, bears and cats," etc. If player misses one, a "horned monkey" is put before the one missed; i.e., should the next player say, "My horned monkey plays with apes, bears and dogs" (omitting cats,) then the next one must say, "My horned monkey plays with apes, bears, horned monkey, cats, dogs and elephants." If "horned monkey" is missed, two "horned monkeys" may be added for each horned monkey missed. (Ages 12 to 14 years.)

HARE AND HOUND

Two sides line up, one side Hares, the other side Hounds. Hounds either blind eyes or turn backs while Hares run (several of whom have chalk,) marking arrows on sidewalk, tree or post, showing direction in which they are running. Occasionally a stop is made to rest. They then continue running, marking their course as they go. In the meantime, the Hounds, after counting 100, give chase, following the arrows. If any of the Hares are seen by the Hounds their names are called and they then become Hounds and must join the other side. When all the Hares are caught the game is over. cide for yourself when he comes this evening."

"Betty, I must be getting dinner. Be ready to dine when I call."

"All right, mother," and Betty was ready when she was called, because she was very hungry. She had been outdoors most of the day racing from one thing to another.

After dinner was over and everything put in order Betty went into the living-room and began thinking while Mr. Decker read the evening paper and Mrs. Decker did some extra fancy work. It was long past 7 o'clock before Jack came. Betty's mother and father were preparing to go out, thinking their work was done for the day, when the door bell rang. Betty was in deep thought, but all thoughts were changed. She flew like a flash into the hall, then to the door.

"I haven't the least idea of how we are going to solve this, as you know it is a pretty hard thing to do, and it would take an awfully long time for just two to do such a thing. Then would they believe us after we had gone to all the trouble?"

"Why Jack, you aren't going back on the job are you?" asked Betty with much surprise at the words Jack had spoken. She had never known Jack to be a slacker before, and didn't think he would be one now.

"No, Betty, I don't intend to slack, but—"

"But nothing," broke in Betty. "Now the first thing we will have to do is to cut away all that tall grass and the vine covering the door and windows, so as to bring about a good appearance from the outside."

"Why not have some one cut the grass who does not know anything about the house being haunted," said Jack, as he sat there with the most obvious look of being bored.

This subject did not seem to please him, and Betty noticed that he was just about ready to change the subject, when Betty continued with her plan.

"Jack, I should like to have a hand in cutting that grass myself. I am going to cut the vine from the windows and the door, and while cutting it, get all important information possible about the inside."

"Well, all right, then, we are going to clear the outside first?"

"Yes, that's right, and you must get some of your friends to back us when we go inside, and I will try to get some of mine."

"My idea is to get those who volunteer to go in with us, or who will come in after us as we give the signal," said Betty as she saw a puzzled look upon Jack's face.

"I will see what I can do about volunteers at work tomorrow."

He hadn't the least idea of whom he was going to get to volunteer. After talking to several people and finding them favorable, Jack grew more interested in the plan himself, and it did not take long before he had all he could handle. Betty found several recruits, also.

So the next evening Jack came again, and was a great deal more interested than on the evening before. All was set for the outside activities, and it was time for Betty to think of what was to go on inside.

"Now what about the signals we are to give the people on the outside," said Betty.

"What signals would be best, do you think, Betty?"

"Well, Jack, I don't know, but I have on old whistle and we could make it clear to our followers what meant danger, help, or what else it might be."

"You are right again. Now when are we going to start this awful thing?"

"I don't know, but as soon as possible."

"Betty you are really wonderful, so darling and determined to do things, but don't you think you could give a little less attention to that plan and let us have more time together for other things than solving ghost problems?"

"That might be, Jack. Oh! don't be silly, we are together a great deal."

"But Betty, it is only for the problem of the mansion."

"Well, that is your fault," said Betty.

"Do you really mean that it is my fault, Betty?"

"Surely do."

"It won't be any longer. I love you," said Jack as he stood at the door ready to leave. She was his only friend, as his mother and father had died when he was in college. Quickly she closed the door and stood there for a few minutes thinking of what Jack had told her.

The next morning Betty was happier than ever, and got up much earlier. She hunted up a large pair of shears her father had used to cut the hedge in front of their home, and a sickle with which she intended to cut the grass. No doubt Jack was making the same preparations, because it was as early as 7 o'clock that morning when Jack called for her. They set off together as happy as larks.

Upon approaching the mansion, they stopped to look at the beautiful picture before them. The vine had bloomed since last Betty had seen it, and hung a purple mass before them. To break the silence between the two, Jack said, "Betty, wouldn't this be a wonderful place for us to live?"

"Yes, I hope it is the wonderful place in which we will live some day, Jack, but not until the ghosts are out."

So they set off to work, first cutting the grass. It was really a shame to cut down the beautiful wild flowers, but it had to be done. They both started at the same place, one working one way and the other, the other.

After almost fifteen minutes of work, which seemed an awfully long time for them, they grew tired, and while resting Jack said, "Well, Betty, I haven't heard any noise out of the ordinary, have you?"

"No, Jack, I haven't," and they set to work again.

Bang! Crash!—and the falling of glass was heard.

"Jack!"

"Betty!"

RANGERS PLAN SIX CAMPS

Two Hundred Expect to go to Camp Seeley; Arrange Yosemite, Arizona and Catalina Trips

BY CHARLES D. PERLEE

Six summer camps have been arranged by the Western Rangers with a large attendance assured, said an announcement yesterday by Chief Harry C. James.

The first excursion will be to Camp Seeley in the San Bernardino Mountains near Lake Arrowhead. This is to be the main summer camp of the Rangers and over 200 are sure to attend.

Camp Seeley is situated in a beautiful mountain meadow at an altitude of about 4000 feet. Several overnight hikes to the Little Mojave River, Lake Arrowhead and other points of interest are planned. The camp will be in charge of Harry James and his usual staff of assistants, including a nature guide and several chiefs.

Carl Sharsmith, assistant to the chief, is planning to take a small group of older Western Rangers to the Yosemite. Mr. Sharsmith will leave Thursday and will return about August 4. Each boy is to bring his own pack and cook his own food, which will be purchased in the valley and the Tuolumne Meadows.

Probably the most interesting trip will be that of Mr. James's into Arizona. Two automobiles will be used to accommodate the ten or more boys who are going.

Interesting also is the annual Western Ranger climb to the summit of Mt. San Gorgonio, (11,485 feet high), near Camp Radford, where one week will be spent. The Western Rangers hold the record for the largest group climbing any mountain over 11,000 feet high, having 154 on the 1923 excursion to the peak of Mt. San Gorgonia.

Through the kindness of Willis O. Hunter, the director of the Catalina Island Boys' Camp, a six-day outing will be conducted by the Western Rangers. The camp will begin September 2 and ends on the 7th of the same month.

Most of the vacationists are going to the camps with the approved Western Ranger camp outfit, which consists of a pair of blue jeans, a flannel shirt, and a real Stetson hat.

a game of hide and seek with my imagination.

"I start out—I imagine I am crossing a vacant lot in Chinatown—making a short cut home—when suddenly a hand reaches from the tall grass and plucks at my overcoat. 'Get me out of here!' pleads a wounded man in the grass.

"'I'll call an ambulance!' I say.

"'No, don't let anyone know!' pleads the wounded man.

"Then I pause. What will I do with him. I have to invent something. 'I have it!' I say, mentally. 'I'll carry him to my own home!' I do.

"'Lock the doors!' he pleads. 'They're after me!'

"Then I have to stop and invent again. Who could be after a poor wounded man picked up in a vacant lot, and why should he be afraid of the police?

"The plot now begins to develop. Step by step I write a paragraph, just inventing answers for the questions I myself make up as I go along. It's an engrossing game. I simply play I'm having the queer experiences I write, and I get as much fun out of playing the game as anyone gets out of reading about it afterward."

This is first-hand knowledge of how one of the most famous fiction writers in America writes his stories.

Just try it, and see if you can't win one of the $10 prizes in the new story contest. Read Helen Hinkel's story and then try to imagine—what would the characters do from now on?

Here's great news for the Toymakers, the artists, and the expert mechanics of the club! The Times Junior Club in October will start a Childrens' Exchange, where the clever work of children will be placed on sale, a chance to make pocket money or even a livelihood for a competent worker. Vacation is here, and now is the time to prepare work for the opening of this exchange.

It will be a sort of store, devoted to the sale of the work of the youngsters of the club. Here basketry, weaving, embroidery, handcraft, and toys will be on sale, all the work of members of the club. Of course, only the very best samples will be put on sale, inferior or careless work can only be turned into the Toy-makers' Section for use as Christmas gifts to poor children, not even that unless the work is good enough to merit it.

But the very finest work of the kiddies will command a good price. Every youngster clever with his hands or tools will be able to make a great deal of pocket money by preparing now, working on articles to be offered for sale when the exchange opens.

Watch The Junior Times for further details, as the work gets under way. Don't miss this glorious opportunity for a real business, and a real profit.

Watch the prize story, watch for details of the new Children's Exchange, and watch for several other surprises Aunt Dolly promises. In the meantime, don't forget the art contests, the puzzles, the other prizes offered, and remember that the happiest club in the world has something of value for everybody!

"MYSTERIES OF THE OLD MANSION"

BY MARIEANN ULRICH

Now that vacation time is here and they have more time to read, many Times Junior Club members have written their Aunt Dolly to print more continued stories. Here is one, in which mysteries and romance are about equally mixed, by one of our club members, Marieann Ulrich-Aunt Dolly.

"Good morning, mother and dad," shouted Betty as she ran into the room with her face half hidden behind an armful of wild flowers, which she had gathered in the woods.

"Good morning," was the reply.

Betty's dark brown eyes shone brightly through the various rows of colored flowers. Her hair was almost black, her cheeks as red as roses, and at all times she wore a sweet smile upon her face. But this morning her smile had changed, for there seemed to be something troubling her. Her mother and father both noticed a difference in her ways and in her merriness, but could not get Betty to tell what the trouble was.

After a period of silence Betty started to laugh. She laughed so loud that her voice was heard outdoors.

"What's the matter, child?" asked her mother.

"Oh! I have heard that the mansion has ghosts prowling around in it. This morning as I was going to the woods Jack stopped me, and told me that Mr. Mills had seen a ghost on his way home from work. As he was passing the mansion he saw through the vines covering the windows, on the first floor, the shadow of some one inside. The figure was white and walked from one window to another, as if it were trying to get out. Then, hearing an awful noise, he ran to our door and came in, as our house was the closest. He was all out of breath, and could hardly tell us what the trouble was.

"And mother, I am trying to think of how I might find a way to convince Mr. Mills there are no ghosts in the mansion."

The great mansion sat back several hundred feet from the road. It was surrounded by large pine trees, with tall grass and wild flowers growing between them. The sides of the house were covered by a vine that had by this time reached the roof, covered the windows, and door, and made it impossible for any light to find its way into the house. The mansion was three stories high, and upon the first floor seemed to be the mystery.

As you entered, after having cut your way through the entangled grass and vines that covered the floor, you either heard no noise at all or you concluded that your imagination had led you to conjure up all sorts of noises.

The furniture had been covered with cloth to keep it free from all dirt, as the people who had lived there had gone on a trip. While they were traveling they had been overtaken by a disease that had killed them both.

Everything was in the house that was needed, in fact, more than was needed. Every piece of furniture was in order and nothing could be seen which seemed in keeping with the mystery. Still people would have it that the house was haunted.

The mansion had been given to Betty by an uncle when she was quite young. So as this was her own property she was willing to prove to anyone that the house was not haunted.

"Just the same, how Mr. Mills could see through those thick vines which covered the windows I cannot understand," thought Betty to herself.

"Mother, Jack is coming over tonight and with his help I intend to solve the problem for everyone."

"Well, Betty, what does Jack look like, I have never seen him, nor heard of him until you spoke of Jack."

"Mother," sighed Betty, as she sank into a large morris chair with her eyes cast upon her in surprise, "I thought you knew Jack, but I will tell you about him."

"All right, Betty," said her mother, as she was arranging the scarf on the library table, because everything had to be in order before Mrs. Decker thought of sitting down to be entertained.

"Well, he is tall,—Oh! not too tall, but about five feet four, and one-half, you know. He has black, wavy hair, and the largest black eyes you ever saw. Jack has a fair complexion, and a pleasing disposition, I think, but you can de-

NEBRASKA MISS SUBMITS MOST FETCHING GARB FOR "DOLLY GREY"

The rush of contestants to submit color charts in our Fashion Contest shows that it is a thing that was badly needed. In fact, its value cannot be overestimated, because it is improving the taste of many girls who, working over color ideas, evolve really artistic combinations as a result of careful thought.

Some would gown "Dolly Grey," our beautiful model, in old rose, others in blue, but this week honors go to green. Virginia Dyas of Wyoming, Neb., wins this week's title as fashion expert.

Her layout is a novel one. She does not fear to use bold colors, but harmonizes them perfectly. Here is her chart:

As he reflected over this last idea Billy's eyes roved toward the sky. A large eagle was sailing overhead, its wings outspread like the wings of an airplane.

The very thing! Billy meditated that he'd like to be an aviator. Fly clear 'round the world, and loop right over his home town! His mother would hurry out of the pantry with two cherry pies for a feat like that!

A shrill whistle interrupted his thoughts. The 11:15 limited rushed down the tracks, and his scattering thoughts centered on a new idea. An engineer—running his iron monster at breakneck speed. There was a real idea! He'd be an engineer, and give his family a free ride, too.

Then his thoughts were interrupted again—but this time it was not anything as heroic as an airplane, an engine or an eagle.

Just a call to lunch!

Billy shook himself, glanced after the receding rear coach of the hurrying train and saw the smoke drift through the trees, far away.

Well, he meditated, engineers work awfully hard, anyway. And, one of those cherry pies would surely be on the table for lunch.

He hurried toward the house, whistling as he went.

AT SUNSET

By Kenneth Mead
Age 12 Years

One day as I was walking
I saw far, far away
A beautiful mountain uprising,
And the sun slowly dying away.

On the hill was a quaint old farm house,
Old, mossy, and half torn down,
And I saw, away off in the distance,
The lights of a little town.

As I left I turned round to see it,
When lo! It had died away
And, trudging slowly homeward
I thought of that wonderful day.

Not the most wonderful artist
Could paint such a charm-laden scene
Nor could any poet describe it
In morning or in e'en.

THE SUNSET

Age 11 Years

The sun is getting redder and is setting in the sea,
The clouds are turning golden in the West,
The hills are getting purple as a little of the sun
Has gone behind the silver sea to rest.

Now the clouds are getting pinker and are slowly turning blue,
As nearly half the sun is out of sight;
And the hills are getting blacker and the sun is nearly gone,
And the sky's lost all its lovely colored light.

Now the sky is getting blacker and the stars come winking out,
And the moon is just a crescent in the sky,
And it makes a silver path across the gently rippling waves
As it shines in all its glory there on high.

EXPLAIN THIS PARADOX

An innkeeper had a sudden influx of guests, eleven arriving in one party and demanding separate beds. The host had only ten beds at his disposal, but he, notwithstanding, managed to accommodate them by the following method:

He put two in the first bed, with the understanding that the second should have a bed by himself in a few minutes, as soon as the others were settled. He then put the third in the second bed, the fourth in the third bed, and so on, the tenth being accommodated in the ninth bed. He thus had one bed still left, which the eleventh man, who was temporarily placed in the first bed, was now invited to occupy. Who can explain this paradoxical anecdote, wherein the arithmetical fallacy is cleverly concealed?

Dear Aunt Dolly:

I saw about the baseball and boxing teams in The Junior Times and would like to know if we could have a basketball team. Have our teams graded according to height and age. I am interested very much in basketball so please let me know about it. I am interested in other articles, of course, but think this would be lots of sport.

Yours Sincerely,

[Signed]

Jack Whelan, 2041 West Thirty-fifth Place, Los Angeles

Jack, I'm mighty glad you wrote in about a basketball team, for so many want the same thing. I think we can make a go of it. Also it reminds me of an announcement I should have made last week. Our sporting editor, Ernest Osborne, suggests, that we postpone our big Junior Times baseball games until fall, as so many boys have written in complaining about leaving town and giving 100 reasons why they do not want to play this summer. So, if you think it's alright we'll start your basketball team in the fall. How about it? Do write and let me know.

Lovingly yours,

AUNT DOLLY

AUNT DOLLY'S SCRAP BASKET

Every girl past 12, longs for a dainty bedroom with all the gay trimmings imaginable, so let us first consider the color scheme. You have, in all probability, white woodwork, and if the walls are tinged with pink, dotted swiss curtains will add to the general attractiveness. Side drapes of coral pink in chintz or crepe may be had at small cost and a plain gray rug will assure you an ideal combination.

Chairs of wicker, enameled gray, with chintz cushions will add another festive touch. Bedspreads of bleached muslins, with pink border and one or two boudoir pillows embroidered prettily in spring colors will complete a room any girl may well be proud of.

Then we come to our clothes closet, so important if we are to take advantage of its real possibilities. On one side shoe bags may be hung, fashioned from tan linen, edged with pink tape. This prevents your slippers from being knocked to and fro on the floor, and also keeps the dust from them. Pretty hangers may be made at minimum cost from ordinary wooden hangers, enameled in bright colors, yellow, greens, blues and lavenders. Gingham covers should be kept over silk and evening dresses and tiny sachets, pinned within them, keeps your closet free from musty odors.

Next, we face hats, the darlings of every woman's heart. Generally we come home, throw them down on a shelf and wonder why brims roll, flowers lose their shape and crowns crush inward. White hat boxes may be had for a few cents. Take your paint brush and quickly stripe outside of box with black paint. Glance over your old magazines, choose a prettily colored head or poster effect, cut carefully and paste on front of box. Ribbons may be used to good effect, and artificial flowers as well, but this takes money and our hints are always designed to meet the medium purse.

A great many lamp shades are being made of chiffon, light shades over dark, the color harmonies being soft and neutral, so that your shade may blend with any furnishings on hand. Tan over dark blue, and blue over rose, lavender and pink, green and crimson are a few of the popular combinations. Fringes may be varied to suit your taste, and hand-painted shades are, of course, creations of beauty, which, although high in price, may be duplicated for little cost. Department stories give free lessons in this art and many others.

mark a line between the East and West.

Customs are different to be sure. California is much more lax and easy going, but after all, human nature does not vary so greatly, and if it does, let us search our own hearts for condemning thoughts. Often we unconsciously hold an accusing attitude that brings its own dismal reward. Possibly you are oversensitive. I say this, because I had the same experience, and after I cried myself sick for several weeks, awakened to the fact that it was I who was wrong, not my schoolmates. When I became loving and natural, and did little kind deeds in an unassuming manner everything straightened out. Just forget all about it, and paddle along as though nothing had happened—and you'll soon find you have plenty of friends.

Lovingly yours,

AUNT DOLLY.

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

I am coming to you with my troubles, as so many other children have done. I want to know what you would do if you were in my place.

A woman with her two children rented our apartment. The girl is 16 years of age, and the boy 14. The woman was out of work after she had been at our home four months, and she didn't have money enough to pay the rent bill, so she let it run five months, but said she wouldn't be able to pay for quite a time.

At last my father brought it to court and we won. The woman paid in full and then moved. The girl was my very best friend. The woman is very refined and is in every respect a lady. I was so happy with her daughter; we had such a wonderful friendship. It wasn't her fault and the night before she moved she cried on my shoulder and she wanted to be friends, and she was so sorry her mother couldn't pay. My parents wouldn't listen to me, and won't allow us to even correspond, or see each other. Do you think she had better write my mother explaining how sorry she feels?

[Signed]

Your unhappy niece,

MALIEN.

Unless your parents have other reasons than this for asking you to give up a true friendship I should say you were justified in feeling hurt, but perhaps, dear, there may be other causes in back of their objection. Any way, it could not possibly hurt to have a frank understanding on both sides.

Explain how much her companionship meant to you, and as you suggested have your chum write a letter of apology, although I do not see where she was at fault. Many people are out of work, and it is hard to make both ends meet when you have children to support, so I would bring the situation frankly before my parents. Sometimes, grown-ups allow their personal prejudices to interfere with many a happy hour, robbing their children of golden opportunities just because they forgot how important small issues used to be when they were young.

Lovingly yours,

AUNT DOLLY.

"ONE IN A THOUSAND"

he asked, swinging Cherry into a waltz. "Queer duck, isn't he?"

She found herself answering with bated breath, "All boys of 17 delight in that—it's rather tiresome."

Ted grumbled a reply, then laughed quickly, "You're one girl in a thousand," he remarked, "the only one who hasn't asked, who is he, where did he come from, what does he do? Old iron face keeps 'em all guessing."

Cherry shrugged a cream white shoulder.

"At times he is rude, I've noticed that," she said indifferently, although her pulses leaped high.

Ted's face sobered as they glided out of the ball-room into a patch of silver moonlight which bathed the verandah in bold relief.

"He is a bit of a mystery. Father was a cattle rustler so they say."

"No, really?" Cherry whispered the words as though some peculiar significance clung to their utterance. "Is he alive, this father?"

"Nobody knows. The ranch still stands in his name, but my friend runs it, alone with Black Pete, the foreman. Everything seems regular enough, if it were not for the peculiar way he acts. Once when I came upon him unawares. . . ."

They both started uncomfortably as the stranger appeared before them, his grey eyes hooded, shoulders squared as though for physical combat.

"I could not find you," he said smoothly to Cherry. "You were lost in a cloud of admiring youths." The girl looked unflinchingly beneath the mask.

"Did you try?" she asked directly.

The remark held a challenge. Clearly she doubted his subterfuge and took scant trouble to hide it. He flushed, and bowed.

"I seldom take the trouble to locate anyone," he said. "Dances bores me."

"Take him home, Ted," Cherry laughed impudently. "I can't tolerate women haters."

A smoldering fire blazed in the stranger's eyes.

"Have it your own way," he said tartly, and swung off through the foliage.

"Well," Cherry cried as his tall figure disappeared from view, "he certainly makes no attempt to be pleasant."

"That's what I meant," Ted said ruefully. "I was going to tell you about a peculiar incident. He runs this ranch as I said, with a half-breed Indian called Black Pete. Nobody knows where his father is. Rumor has it, that he returns and visits his son, who is sometimes gone for weeks. During his absence, Black Pete holds a barricade of silence for hours in the broiling sun, blinking his eyes like a toad and repeating to all questions, 'Me no catchee.' But Black Pete speaks as good English as you or me."

After this last disappearance of his, the Fork G Ranch was minus sixty head of cattle, and a lot of sheep were poisoned."

Cherry leaned forward, eyes sparkling. "And nobody, except the ranch hands live with him?"

"Nobody."

"No women, no cooks of any kind or helpers?"

"No."

The girl fell silent, staring at the dark spot that had swallowed the stranger.

"Has anyone offered a reward for this—this cattle thief?"

A hectic sort of excitement gripped her, as Ted answered.

"Only $10,000, that's all, but there's not a chance."

"Why?" Cherry cried, springing to her feet.

"Because," he said slowly, "He's too slick, whoever he is and beside, I should do all in my power to prevent having him—turned in—"

The sentence remained unfinished, but Cherry followed his eyes, which followed the path the stranger had taken, reading his thoughts with uncanny alacrity.

"Do you really think then . . ?" she asked breathlessly. Ted turned without answering, a sharp crackling noise holding them both spell bound.

called the boys as they passed Ted's house on their way to the slide. And they were astounded at Ted's reply.

"I'm not going to slide today," was his answer.

Ted was usually the first to go shouting down the hill. His change bothered the other boys; puzzled them.

"Why aren't you going coasting?" his mother, who had heard the conversation, asked him.

"Well, I don't want to take my new red sled out, because some of the fellows have no sleds, and they'll want to use mine, and maybe scratch it," he answered. His mother sighed. This selfish streak in him had often worried her.

The boys finished their sport and went home. Ted, tempted beyond endurance, took his red sled and hurried to the slide. He began coasting alone. He went down the hill in silence. He started to shout—"clear the track"—then realized that there was no one to shout to. And that was half the sport. At the bottom of the slide he saw the Wetherbey cow cross the path. He shouted to her, as his sled darted downward. Then his sled swerved a bit, and his foot struck a stump. He was tumbled into the snow, the sled going on down the hill straight at the heels of the cow.

Bossy didn't like it. One kick, and the new sled landed in the ditch.

Ted tried to get up. A sharp pain in his ankle told him the bad news. It was sprained. A man coming after the cows found him, a little later, put him on a sled and took him home. For a week he sat in an armchair with his foot in a plaster cast.

Day by day he watched the other boys go to the slide, and looked gloomily at the now scratched remains of what had been his new sled.

"It's all right," his father observed. "I'll paint the sled, and no one will ever know it's been kicked."

Ted thought a moment.

"I don't want it painted any more," he said. "It was the paint that made me so selfish. Let's leave it the way it is now, please."

And his mother smiled her quiet smile as she heard him.

PRAYER OF A LITTLE CHILD

By Ruth Bly (age 13 years)
254 North Stafford street,
Huntington Park, Cal.

I pray to God that I may be
A little child, imbued with good,
That I may have a cleaner soul
And live as Jesus would.

That I may see the wrong and right
And from the wrong he held apart,
And pray, O God, that all may share
The wondrous love that's in your heart.

And pray God's blessings, too, on those
Who burdened are and sad of heart
That their lives may be in time
Brightened and set from grief apart.

These things, O God! I beg of Thee
And for Thy help devoutly plead,
That Thou may stand at my right hand
To help me in each hour of need.

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

When I picked up The Junior Times this morning and read about the badges one could earn as a Toy-Maker, I settled right down to make some things for a poor little girl who lives down the block from me. I went to the store and bought a doll. Then I made it a set of clothes, a sweater and cap to match, a little pink dress, a blue one and one or two other ones, with petticoats to match.

I don't know whether this will

ALICE AND ART

BY ALICE JACCARD

ORANGE SATIN POPPY

You will need one-fourth yard of burnt orange satin, one-fourth yard orange satin, two black flower centers, some medium wire and one skein of dark green chenille.

Cut eight petals of burnt orange and eight of orange, using "Z" in detail printed last week for a pattern. Place a burnt orange petal on top of an orange petal, with right side of each facing and stitch all way around. Turn seam on inside, press petal and gather top from "A" to "B" in detail given last week, drawing it up to three-quarters of an inch. Gather lower edges, drawing thread tightly. This completes one petal. Make remaining petals in same manner.

Cut a piece of wire nine inches long and wind one end around one flower center. Group four petals around flower center with burnt orange on the inside. Sew them in place, and make another, using a seven-inch piece of wire. Twist both ends together for three inches. Now wind chenille closely around stems and base of flower.

YELLOW CHIFFON-PLAITED FLOWERS

You will need one-eighth yard yellow chiffon, a small piece of red taffeta, a small piece of black taffeta and a six-inch piece of ribbon one-half inch wide.

Cut two strips of chiffon two and one-quarter inches wide and eleven inches long. Have both pieces hemstitched lengthwise by machine through the center and have them finely plaited. Cut through the hemstitching and cut each piece in half; run a gathering thread through the raw edges of a wider strip and draw it up tightly and sew under first gathered strip. Cut a piece, fold in half so it is three-eighths of an inch wide and roll tightly around and around. Cut a piece of black taffeta three-quarters of an inch wide and two inches long. Fold in half a twist around outside roll. Sew this to center of gathered strip. Make another flower in same manner. Join with six-inch piece of yellow ribbon from back to center, back of flowers.

FACTS THAT AREN'T

Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, former President of the United States was not named Ulysses S. at all. His right name was Hiram Ulysses Grant. The U. S. part got tacked onto him when he entered West Point military academy.

Lead pencils aren't lead pencils at all. The part which writes is a mixture of graphite and clay. About the only lead in a lead pencil is the lead in the paint which is used to color the pencils.

BRASS IS NOT MINED

Many people think that the metal brass is mined somehow or another. As a matter of fact, brass is not a separate metal in itself, but is an alloy, or mixture, of copper and zinc.

The bite of the black snake is regarded as quite poisonous, especially in the South. Actually, the bite of a black snake is not quite as harmful as a cat scratch, because the black snake has no poison sacks and he keeps his teeth a great deal cleaner than a cat keeps her claws.

IRISH POTATOES NOT IRISH

"Irish" potatoes were never thought of in Ireland until Sir Walter Raleigh took some back after his visit to America. Now they are one of the principle articles of food in that country.

"Gold filled" on a piece of jewelry doesn't mean that the article is filled with gold or that it is solid gold. What it does mean is that the article is plated extra heavily with gold. However, "sterling" on silver always means that the metal is at least 925-1000 pure silver. The other things in sterling silver are used to harden and toughen up the more precious metal.

I am in favor of the establishment of the Children's Exchange in connection with The Times Junior Club.
I promise to do all I can to make it a success.

count or not in winning a badge, but I surely would like to earn one. You have no idea how much I enjoyed making these little garments and I'm going to keep right on, for there is a poor family of eight children that I want to make happy.

I do hope this will count in your record of club deeds. I am also sending you a story I made up. I hope you will not publish it since it is my first one I have ever written.

With much love,

Lois Granberry, Box No. 286 Loma Linda, Cal.

Lois dear, you certainly have won a Toy-Maker badge and you have no idea how proud I am to call you my niece. Deeds like these make the world full of sunshine, the famous brand we are coining daily under the name of The Times Junior Club.

Keep up the splendid record, and who knows, you may be called Capt. Granberry of the Toy-Maker' League before you realize what has happened.

DREAMLAND

By William C. Fleming,
186 South Monterey Street,
Pomona, Cal. (Age 14 Years)

Let us sail away from this troublesome world
In a barque that is made of gold;
It's sails of silk will be unfurled
As we'll nestle within its fold.

We'll imagine we're in Dreamland
Gliding down a silver stream,
Where soft green ferns dwell in banks of sand
And waterfalls form a screen.

When we're sailing down this streamlet,
And the moon sheds her tender glow,
Our hearts will be filled with gladness,
For we all love Dreamland so.

When we're sailing in our gondola
Soft music greets our ears,
Music that's filled with sweetness
In this land unknown to tears.

And just as the dawn is nearing
And faint rosy light starts to show,
We must take this as our warning
That it's time for us to go.

And then once again we are home,
And safe in our beds; and—well—
We wonder whence we have come;
But alas! We cannot tell.

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

Although I am 15 years old and a sophomore in high school, I read and surely do enjoy The Junior Times. My younger sister fairly devours it.

I have been wondering if I could join your lovely club. If so, will you please write and tell me? My little sister wants a membership badge also; we always take The Times.

I seem to be full of questions today, Aunt Dolly, but may I ask one more? May I enter a story for the contest? You see, I intend to write stories when I finish college.

Here's wishing The Junior Times the best of luck.

Yours truly,

Yolen Morse, 1640 West Thirty-Ninth street, Los Angeles

Yolen, dear, you know you may write as many stories as you wish. The more the merrier is always, without fail, a motto you can count on in our club, so let's have some manuscripts.

We give intensive training to short-story writers. Some youngsters have written as many as fifty stories without winning success,

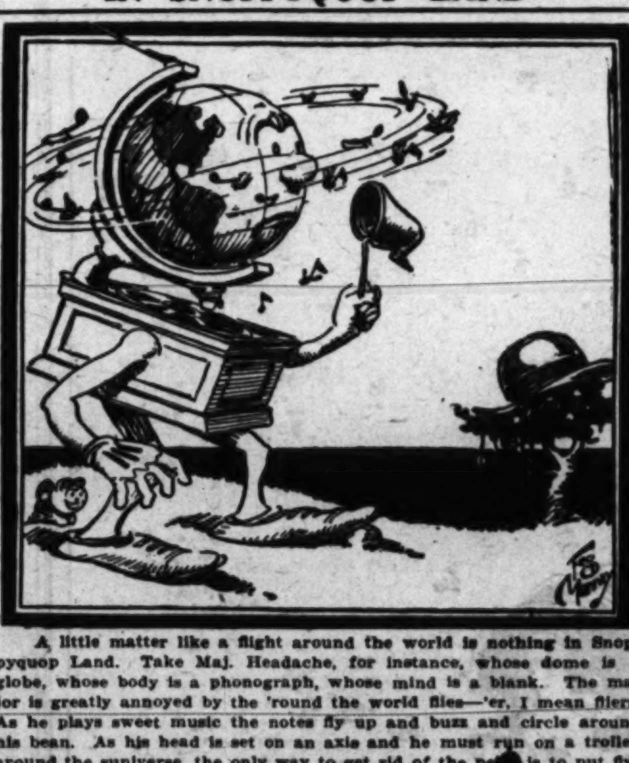
IN SNOPPYQUOP LAND



A little matter like a flight around the world is nothing in Snoppyquop Land. Take Maj. Headache, for instance, whose dome is a globe, whose body is a phonograph, whose mind is a blank. The major is greatly annoyed by the 'round the world flies—'er, I mean fliers. As he plays sweet music the notes fly up and buzz and circle around his bean. As his head is set on an axle and he must run on a trolley around the suniverse, the only way to get rid of the pe[illegible] is to put fly-paper in his ears or catch the little beasts with his trusty net. "Good hunting," you wish him, "catch as many flies as Ty Cobb does in a season." But he stubs his toe on a rock, falls down on the job and breaks his record. The net results of all of this are that the 'round-the-world fliers escape capture, but go around the globe so many times that, like the goldfish, they die of dizziness.

Stockings: Flesh color.
Slippers: Black satin.
French flowers at belt, ranging from old blue to rose pink.

It is interesting to note in looking over suggestions that 200 charts have come in within seven days, but that the majority were sadly lacking in good taste. This shows how valuable this contest really is; it will be indispensable as a shopping guide for older girls of The Times Junior Club, furnishing an ever-present guide in times of doubt.

This Sunday she has golden hair, with a coppery tinge; grey eyes and full red lips; pink cheeks and creamy skin, but badly freckled.
